"'2dly. When Jacob married Rachel she was barren, and so continued for many years; but God did not leave this as a punishment upon her for marrying a man who had another wife. It is said, Gen. 30: 22, that God remembered Rachel; and God hearkened unto her, and opened her womb, and she conceived and bare a son, and said, God hath taken away my reproach. Surely this passage of Scripture ought to afford a complete answer to those who bring the words of the marriage bond, as cited by Christ, Matt. 19: 5—They twain shall be one flesh—to prove polygamy sinful, and should lead us to construe them, as by this instance and many others the Lawgiver himself appears to have done; that is to say, where a woman, not betrothed to another man, unites herself in personal knowledge with the man of her choice; let that man's situation be what it may, they twain shall be one flesh. How, otherwise, do we find such a woman as Rachel united to Jacob, who had a wife then living, praying to God for a blessing on her intercourse with Jacob, and God hearkening unto her, opening her womb, removing her barrenness, and thus by miracle taking away her reproach? We also find the offspring legitimate, and inheritors of the land of Canaan; a plain proof that Joseph and Benjamin were no bastards, or born out of lawful marriage.' See a like palpable instance of God's miraculous blessing on polygamy in the case of Hannah, 1 Sam. 1. and ii. These instances serve also to prove that, in God's account, the second marriage is just as valid as the first, and as obligatory; and that our making it less so, is contradictory to the Divine wisdom.

"'3dly. God blessed and owned the issue. How eminently this was the case with regard to Joseph, see Gen. 49: 22–26; to Samuel, see 1 Sam. 3: 15. It was expressly commanded that a bastard, or son of a woman who was with child by whoredom, should not enter into the congregation of the Lord, even to his tenth generation (Deut. 23: 2). But we find Samuel, the offspring of polygamy, ministering to the Lord in the tabernacle at Shiloh even in his very childhood, clothed with a linen ephod, before Eli the priest. See this whole history, 1 Sam. i. and ii. Who, then, can doubt of Samuel's legitimacy, and consequently of God's allowance of, and blessing on, polygamy? If such second marriage was, in God's account, null and void, as a sin against the original law of marriage, or the seventh commandment, or any other law of God, no mark of legitimacy could have been found on the issue; for a null and void marriage is tantamount to no marriage at all; and if no marriage, no legitimacy of the issue can possibly be. Instead of such a blessing as Hannah obtained, we should have found her and her husband Elkanah charged with adultery, dragged forth, and stoned to death; for so was adultery to be punished. All this furnishes us with a conclusive proof, that the having more than one wife with which a man cohabited, was not adultery in the sight of God; or, in other words, that it never was reckoned by him any sin against the seventh commandment, or the original marriage institution, or any other law whatsoever.'"

Space prevents us from giving more from this writer at present—another time.

* If polygamy was unlawful, then Leah was the only wife of Jacob, and none but her children were legitimate. Rachel as well as Bilhah and Zilpah were merely mistresses and their children 0 in number were bastards, the offspring of adulterous connections. And yet there is no intimation of any such views and feelings in Laban's family, or in Jacob's family, or in Jewish history. Bilhah and Zilpah are called Jacob's wives (Gen. 37: 2). God honored the sons of Rachel, Bilhah, and Zilpah equally with the sons of Leah, made them the patriarchs of 7 of the tribes of the nation, and gave them equal inheritance in Canaan.—D. O. Allen.

Utah Again.

OUR gentlemanly cotemporary of the New York Daily News, in noticing the proceedings of a Convention held at Cove, Beaver Co., U. T., the minutes of which were published in THE MORMON of the 19th of April, says:

Another New State in Embryo.

We are indebted to the Utah correspondence of the Weekly Mormon, (a religious newspaper of that sect published in this city, and edited with much ability by Elder John Taylor,) for information of an important movement in the Territory of Utah, preparatory to the formation of a State Constitution by the people of that Territory and the demand for admission into the Union. The correspondent of The Mormon was the secretary of the meeting of which he writes an account, and the full and able sketch he gives is in the highest degree interesting.

Here follows a very full account extracted from the minutes of the Convention, including the resolutions which we have already published. Our neighbor then states:

"It would appear from these proceedings, which we presume are only a specimen of those which are going on throughout that Territory, that the question of the admission of a new State is upon us, and that under the peculiar circumstances of the case the hold which the doctrine of popular sovereignty has upon the people of the American Union, bids fair to be roughly tested.

"Undoubtedly the formal application of these singular religionists, who have virtually appropriated one of our vast Territories for themselves for admission on a footing of equality with other States, will be the signal for a very serious struggle. The legal establishment of polygamy in that Territory by its Legislature puts its domestic institutions upon a basis so entirely different from that of any other State, and so utterly repugnant to the religious opinions and preconceived ideas of the rest of the American people, that the association will doubtless be resisted with a stubbornness and determination not surpassed in our partisan annals.

"Yet what had better be done with a population of 100,000 American citizens, situated in the Interior of our continent, all professing the same religion, actuated by a singular enthusiasm and capable of standing by each other to the last in any emergency? Is it not better to bind them to us closer by the prompt admission of their State into the Union, and trust to the influence of association and example to lead them eventually to the adoption of more correct religious and social institutions—than to drive them, by refusal of their request, into insurrection and resistance, and perhaps initiate a civil war in a vain effort to compel them into monogamy? We incline to favor popular sovereignty and the admission of Utah as the least of evils."

We consider the above full, fair and honest. That the Mormons will stand by each other, there can be no manner of doubt; they have been tested sufficiently to prove this. But whilst the Mormons believe in union, they believe in union to do right. They have never transgressed the laws of any State wherein they have lived, nor of the United States. Union is considered a virtue anywhere else—why should it be considered a vice or dangerous among the Mormons? The exhortations of all our leading statesmen are, "United we stand, divided we fall." And our great national motto reads, "E Pluribus Unum." We would to God that all the citizens of the United States were as much united as the Mormons are; and as it regards their patriotism, we know that there are not more sterling patriots in the United States. It may not be blustering, open-mouthed, ranting, roaring, screaming patriotism, nor manifest itself in sickly, squeaking, effeminate adulation; but we vouch that it is as honest, manly and true. Their very religion, so much calumniated, teaches them patriotism. They are true and sincere lovers of the Constitution, which all their resolutions and public acts manifest. In regard to their religion, we do not consider it a State question. The marriage contract is with them a part of their religion, and so far as their morals and chastity are concerned, we are ready at any time to compare notes with any part of the United States or "the rest of mankind." As American citizens, we consider we have rights, and think, too, there is sufficient honesty and consistency in the United States to grant us our rights. It would certainly be wiser and more noble to "brighten the chain of friendship," and as expressed by the News, "bind them closer to us by the prompt admission of their State into the Union .... and trust to the influence of association and example to lead them eventually to the adoption of more correct religious and social institutions." We certainly think this very good policy, although we must confess we have not much faith in the religious part of it. And as to our social position, the christian ministers and missionaries are getting converted very rapidly to faith in polygamy. But, gentlemen, send out your moralists and missionaries, and we promise them a fair field. Try it, gentlemen, try it.

Complimentary.

In an article written in Frank Leslie's Illustrated News in relation to Mormon emigration, the Beaver County Convention, and a flattering eulogium of the plates contained in "The Route from Liverpool to Salt Lake," we find the following compliment paid to ourself:

"Rev. John Taylor, one of the "Twelve," is located in this city, and attends to the spiritual and temporal wants of the emigrants during their sojourn at the east. Mr. Taylor is the editor of The Mormon, a weekly journal published here and conducted with decided ability. Whatever his peculiar belief may be, he is certainly a gentleman, and a man of rare talents as a speaker and writer."

We feel much obliged for the good feelings of our cotemporaries, honestly expressed. About the same time, we published a short review of the Illustrated Newspaper, in which we recommended it as a beautiful specimen of artistic skill, displaying at the same time good literary taste and containing much useful information. We spoke our sentiments then, which we have had no reason since to change, and we appreciate the above remarks the more because we know that ours were not seen before those were written.

We would respectfully remind our cotemporary, however, that we disclaim the title of "Rev." We are not very pious; we fear God, and are honest in our religious views, but are not fond of this prefix to our patronimic. We have quite a number of appendages already, and can very well spare this black one; it savors too much of cant and hypocrisy, which we utterly repudiate; besides, we have neither disposition nor time to be very solemn, pious, or reverend, after the manner of the world.

"Enoch Train."

THE arrival of this vessel at the Boston quarantine was telegraphed to us on the 30th ult. The emigrants may possibly be here to-day.

We have noticed in several papers an account of some married lady and family taking passage in her from Liverpool unknown to the husband and father. The paper of the place where she started from makes a very nice story of the attempt at elopement, and one or two of our city papers find it an additional gem for their romance readers—and of course an evidence against Mormonism. Strip the story of its religious cant, rant and verbiage, and what is it? A family wanted to go to Utah, and the father would neither go nor consent to their going. The eldest son, some few years since went to Utah, and returns to England on a mission, like hundreds of others. His mother, and the other members of the family want to go, and he helps them, from conviction that Utah was their home. Similar circumstances occur every day among all classes of people in the old world. The iron law of England binds the wife to stay or go, at the pleasure of the husband, be he the greatest dunce or scamp in creation—a law of divorce cries one—well, there is such a law in England; but who can avail themselves of its existence? The Lords, Dukes, Marquis', and that tribe alone. We set our face against that restless and changeable spirit that is manifested at times by some husbands and some wives, but we are a little slower in judging that some of our cotemporaries: we prefer knowing more before we speak or condemn. In the midst of the almost incredible persecution to which many wives are subjected, we are not surprised that some among them should think with their fair sisters this side of the water, that they have some rights, and seek to grasp them.

Florence.

WE publish elsewhere an interesting letter from Elder Wm. H. Kimball, which will enable our readers to form a pretty accurate estimate of our outfitting place for the Plains. We have just received a large map of the town and suburbs of Florence, and are much satisfied with the spot designated for our camping ground. We take this opportunity of tendering to Elder Kimball our thanks for the map, Constitution and laws of Nebraska, and other favors, and at the same time invite him and other friends there or anywhere around to favor us with any items of information that would benefit ourself and readers.

Massacre at Panama.

THE steamship Illinois arrived here on Wednesday afternoon from Aspinwall, bringing the California mails, nine hundred and fifty passengers, and two millions of dollars in treasure. By this arrival we have a detailed account of the dreadful massacre of about twenty California emigrants at the Playa Prieta railroad depot, not far from Panama.

From the published versions of both parties we give a brief statement of this disgraceful and horrible affair. On Tuesday afternoon, the 15th ult., nine hundred and forty passengers arrived by rail from Aspinwall, at Playa Prieta station, for the purpose of embarking on board the John L. Stephens, for California. Owing to the state of the tide, they were detained on shore until a late hour.

In the evening a number of them strolled to the outskirts of the town, where the lower class of inhabitants sell fruit and refreshments. Some of the Americans are reported to have taken some fruit without paying the merchant, upon which angry words began, and ultimately fighting. Of course the natives took sides with the merchants, and the Americans with the aggressors, and then came the tug of war; man to man, knife to knife, musket to musket. Being in greater numbers, and sooner equiped, the natives soon put the emigrants to flight, and pursued them with horrible fury, firing and stabbing on every side. Some took refuge in the Pacific and Ocean Hotels, which led the mob to enter, plunder and destroy. They carried the war to the Railway depot, where defenceless men, women and children were huddled together in the greatest consternation. The police was summoned, but probably from some of the drunken infuriated emigrants firing upon them, as they allege, the preservers of the peace took sides with the natives, and sent death and destruction among the unoffending emigrants. About twenty persons are reported killed, and forty wounded, several mortally, and a great destruction of property—and all from the stealing of a water melon. The Governor of Panama and the police are greatly blamed. The Secretary of the Navy has ordered the steamer Fulton to proceed immediately from Pensacola to Aspinwall.

The following telegraphic dispatch we clip from the Tribune:

The Panama Riot.

WASHINGTON, April 30, 1856.

The Government has received no intelligence of the Panama affray but that contained in printed handbills issued there, and reports of passengers. It is supposed that Consul Ward had not time to prepare a dispatch before the sailing of the steamer. Mr. Marcy has recommended the selection of a judicious and competent person to proceed to the spot immediately, for the purpose of inquiring into the facts, and with a view of governing the the action of the public authorities as to reclamation in case claims for damages or reparation can be sustained under the treaty with New Granada, by virtue of international law. Upon the present imperfect knowledge, and in the absence of special information, no more positive steps can be taken The President will doubtless concur in this suggestion with alacrity, and contribute any additional sanction that may be required to facilitate the fullest investigation.

As a precautionary measure against the recurrence of such terrible casualities, Mr. Marcy has also advised Mr. Dobbin to order vessels-of-war at once to both termini of the Isthmus, and station them permanently; a sufficient force of marines to be provided to serve both as a moral restraint and the means of protection in the time of danger. It is presumed that this measure will be adopted without hesitation.

Walker and the Costa Ricans.

BY the arrival of the Orizaba, on Tuesday, we have news from Central America. The defeat of Col. Schlessinger has been confirmed by Walker's organ, El Nicaraguense. The colonel has been tried by court martial and condemned for cowardice; other reports have the colonel a deserter to the side of the Costa Ricans.

Important correspondence between the British Government and the Government of Costa Rica has been intercepted by some of Walker's men, and was subsequently handed over to the American minister at Granada. The English Government, it seems, has furnished the Costa Ricans, at the request of the representative of the latter Government, with two thousand stand of arms.

Walker, on receiving intelligence of the defeat of Schlessinger, marched to Rivas, and has had a desperate tug with the Costa Ricans. His army fought nearly the whole day, and tried to drive the Ricans from the town, but without success. A goodly number have been killed on both sides. Walker reports about eighty killed on his side, among whom were the whole of his staff save Capt. Sutter.

Sympathy for Barnum.

ON the 23d ult. a very large meeting of persons sympathizing with Mr. P. T. Barnum in his recent pecuniary embarrassments was held at Washington Hall, Bridgeport. The call for the meeting was signed by the Mayor, the leading bankers of the town and some hundreds of the most substantial citizens. C. B. Hubbell, Esq., presided. The gentlemen who addressed the meeting spoke of Mr. Barnum in the very highest terms. The dead and the vastly wealthy frequently get a large share of praise for ennobling virtues, but we have seldom heard of a poor man receiving such eulogiums as fell to the lot of Mr. Barnum at that meeting. Such demonstrations of sympathy from neighbors speak volumes in favor of the man. The meeting was characterized throughout by the greatest enthusiasm, and adjourned with three loud cheers for Barnum.

St. Louis—Cincinnati—Philadelphia.

WE publish on our first page the Minutes of the St. Louis Conference, held on the 6th and 7th ult. On the recommendation of the Conference Elder Bunce is for the present appointed to succeed Elder Banks in the Presidency of the Cincinnati Conference, entering there on at his departure for Utah. In the Minutes of the Conference lately held at Philadelphia, Elder Harrison's representation of the Philadelphia Branch was accidently omitted; our reporter lost a portion of his notes. We have just had our attention directed to the omission, and take this opportunity of saying that Elder Harrison's representation of his Branch was very satisfactory, and he was unanimously sustained in his Presidency.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

ON the 7th inst. from 80 to 100 Indians attacked upwards of 100 of the United States troops under the command of Major Lewis Arnold while scouting in the Big Cypress Swamp. The fighting and running occupied six hours. One soldier killed and six severely wounded. The Indian losses unknown. Extermination seems to be the prevailing spirit with the soldiers.

An arrangement has been concluded between the Post Office authorities of Great Britain and the United States, by which letters of value may be registered to and from Great Britain at the rate of twenty-nine cents on a single letter, which includes the ordinary postage of twenty-four cents.

The inhabitants of the Cape de Verd Islands are suffering severely from famine. Mr. E. Meriam, of Brooklyn, in making an appeal to the governments of the United States, England and France, and suggesting to the humane of our country the propriety of calling meetings in towns and cities for assistance, says—"The famine in the Cape de Verd Islands has already swept off twice as many of the inhabitants as were cut down by the pestilence at Norfolk and Portsmouth during the yellow fever of last year, and still the work of death goes on, and will continue, until it counts up its victims by tens of thousands, unless aid is sent there, and that speedily." A conference will be called at an early day to determine upon measures to be adopted.

The village of Gowanda, in the county of Cattaraugus, was almost wholly destroyed by fire on the 30th ult. Among the buildings burned were Salem's furnace, Camp's factory, E. W. Hennie's storehouse, the Palmer block, the Welsh block, the Mansion House, and the old mill. The bridge was also destroyed.

There has been another great fire at Philadelphia. During Wednesday night and Thursday morning forty buildings were destroyed. Loss over $1,000,000. A fireman, in the discharge of his duty, was killed by the falling of a wall; another fireman, in a row with some rival fireman of another company, was stabbed in the right breast. There is little hope of his recovery.

The political party generally termed "Black Republicans," held a meeting at the Tabernacle on Tuesday evening. Mr. B. F. Butler was called to the chair; and after making a few remarks on Kansas and slavery, introduced Mr. Abijah Mann, who read the report of the Pittsburgh Convention, which, upon motion, was adopted. Mr. William M. Evarts followed in a lengthy and eloquent address. The Hon. Mr. Bingham of Ohio made a lengthy speech, which was enthusiastically received. Mr. Horace Greeley and several others also addressed the meeting. Several resolutions were then read and adopted, and the meeting adjourned.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

COUNT CAVOUR, the Sardinian Plenipotentiary to the Peace Conference at Paris, is said to have succeeded in influencing Louis Napoleon to look friendly upon down trodden Italy. The greater portion of what is published respecting their conversations can only at best be very uncertain, as nothing has been published by either the Emperor or the Count. There are many reasons however for believing that something will be done for Italy now that peace is concluded in the East. Success to whoever may break the galling chains of bondage from off fair Italy's sons.

A requisition has been signed by about four hundred citizens of Edinburgh, to Kossuth, requesting him to repeat in that city some of the political lectures which he has been recently delivering in London. The object of this movement is to procure pecuniary assistance for the Hungarian Dictator, who has refused all proffers of direct money aid. A lady, however, the editor of the Waverley Magazine, is out with a proposition to collect from the ladies of Scotland a sum of money, to be presented to him, in their name, and she heads the list with a contribution of five guineas. M. Kossuth has consented to deliver two or more lectures in Edinburgh about the first week in May.

Malcolm Lord Forth (son of the Earl of Perth,) has been proclaimed an outlaw. This is the unworthy (or deranged) representative of the ancient family of Perth, who was sent home from the Crimea by Lord Raglan for refusing to go out to the trenches.

On the 18th ult. the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress of the city of London entertained his Excellency Mr. Dallas at dinner at the Mansion House, in honor of his arrival in England as the accredited representative of the United States Republic. A numerous and distinguished company were invited on the occasion. After the removal of the cloth, the usual loyal and constitutional toasts were drank. Central America and glittering bayonets were far from the vision of the speakers; they were as happy and comfortable as the Lord Mayor's table could make them. Mr. Dallas said he had met with nothing but a series of the most flattering demonstrations of welcome and hospitality since he landed in the dominions of the "illustrious Queen," and that he was not authorized to feel, and did not feel, any desire other than that of giving his exertions and energies unreservedly to the restoration of the most harmonious sentiments and friendly relations.

The Glasgow Saturday Post of April 19 says—"We learn from Berlin that the dreadful famine existing in some districts of Silesia has been concealed as long as possible. The German journals (not Prussian) are at last speaking of it. Child-murder has become common from sheer starvation.

Another new small planet, belonging to the group between Mars and Jupiter, was discovered at Paris a few days ago by Mr. Goldschmidt, raising the number to forty.

A COMPANY is about to be started in London, under the auspices of Cramer, Beale and Co., with a view to erect a new music hall in the neighborhood of Regent-street. The hall to be large enough to accommodate between 3000 and 4000 persons, and the cost of the building is estimated at £40,000.

"SIT down, sit down," said a judge to an impertinent limb of the law; "I cannot entertain your ridiculous proposition." "But my necessity." "Yes, yes, your necessity—I understand—I admit your necessity—I admit you are a necessity yourself, or at least the next thing to it, for 'necessity knows no law.'"

THE following advertisement appeared in a Paris journal: "The parents of a young lady, aged 21, handsome, well educated, and possessing 4,800 francs per annum, but affected with the St. Vitus' dance, offer to unite her to a doctor from 40 to 45 years old, who will pay her incessant attention.

FOR THE MORMON.

Light.—Concluded.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

WHEN light is refracted in an ordinary way, the ray by which an object is seen through a refractory medium, may bend, or move in rather a curved line; but in continuing its course to the eye, it does not deviate from a plane that is perpendicular to the surface refracting. The plane, that is the optical recipient of the eye, the object, and the point on the surface of the medium, in the focus of which we see the object, is always a vertical plane. The student of optics and mineralogy knows that certain crystalline substances, as rock-crystal, &c., have the interesting property of making the object viewed through them in a certain direction, appear double to the eye, so that owing to that optical deception, two images are seen instead of one. The phenomenon takes place as soon as such a crystal is placed between the eye and the object; if we continue to examine the nature of that phenomenon, we find that a ray of light on falling on the surface of this substance, will, on traversing the same, be broken into two, forming an angle with each other, and each following its own direction.

Sir Isaac Newton, on observing certain interesting and remarkable effects and phenomena connected with double refraction, introduced the hypothesis, that a ray of light, on issuing from the crystal, gets sides, or to make it plainer, that the relations between a ray or sunbeam, and the surrounding space occupied by the same, were of a distinct nature, through the full length of its subsequent direction, and that the interesting phenomenon of the polarization of light was originating in the same. The great philosopher was, however, much mistaken in his supposition. Malus discovered in 1810 the polarization of light by the ordinary process of reflection on the surface of a disphanous body. He found that a ray of light, on being reflected from the surface of transparent substances (at a certain angle,) acquires the same interesting property which it has when in the process of double refraction, and thus the phenomena of polarization are shown.

A beam of light, on being reflected from a plane of plate-glass or orther polished substance, may be reflected a second time from another surface—it will pass through transparent bodies; but a ray of light, on being reflected from a pane of plate-glass, at an angle of 57°, loses entirely its reflective power at the surface of another pane of glass, in certain definite positions, but is capable again of reflection when in other positions. A great deal depends upon the position, in which a ray is being transmitted through some translucent media, as in certain positions it passes freely through diaphanous bodies; in other positions, however, the transmission does not take place.

One of the most interesting chapters in optics is the decomposition of light, by which the student becomes acquainted with the manner in which light is decomposed or scattered either in a congeries of rays or single beams. The ancient philosophers were familiar with the fact, that a ray, on being transmitted through certain dense media, is generating at the same time a series of brilliant tints similar to those of the rainbow; but, on account of the limited knowledge of the learned of those times, the scientific problem was not solved, that is to say, they could not introduce an axiom or hypothesis that could explain the phenomenon. Centuries rolled on; rapid and wonderful improvements were made by the inquiring, striving mind in the different branches of human knowledge; a great many theories and speculations were refuted by the powerful lever of empiricism, till at last that great researcher into physical and mental truth, Sir Isaac Newton, examined and showed the philosophy of that complicated phenomenon. He had a ray of light conveyed through a hole in the window-shutter of a dark room, and thrown upon a glass prism; the consequence was, that the beam became refracted, and dissolved into seven colors, that formed an oblong image or spectrum upon the white screen, viz., red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo and violet. On examining these colored beams or rays, we find that the violet has been refracted the most, and the red the least, and that they are arrayed in the order in which their refrangibility has taken place. Newton, on trying to have these rays refracted, discovered that they could not be resolved into simpler colors; but, however, on causing their transmission through a second prism in an inverted position, or by gathering them into one focus by a lens, their reunion, and the consequent production of white light, took place; from which he concluded that these seven tints were the primitive colors of light. In order to see the process of light being composed of seven colors united, the reader may take seven different powders, having the tints and proportions required, and mix them. In regard to bodies or substances having colors, Newton supposed that phenomenon to originate in their relative power of absorption and reflection in reference to these rays; he believed black surfaces to have the property of absorbing, and white of reflecting them all; and that the other colors are generated by all the rays being absorbed, except those of the observed color, which are supposed to be reflected.

In regard to translucent or diaphanous media, it is well to understand, that a ray or beam of light, when thrown on a colorless body, is conveyed unchanged to another substance, but when a congeries of rays falls upon colored media, then some rays pass on, others are absorbed. The interesting phenomenon of colored rays being absorbed by certain media, show another way of analyzing light, and from such optical experiments, Sir David Brewster, infers that the only simple or primitive colors of the spectrum are the red, yellow, and blue, and that they are collected and have their focus in those parts of the spectrum, when each is visible, but that a congeries of rays is to a greater or less extent transmitted over the whole of the surface, and in regard to the analysis of colors, he supposes that orange is originating in a mixture of red and yellow; the green proceeds from a mixture of blue and yellow; and the indigo and violet from blue and red, having a touch of yellow.

The nature of the prism or refractory medium is of the greatest importance for the production, size and length of the spectrum; if a hollow glass prism full of cassia-oil (cassia, a very fragrant aromatic spice, is confined to the tropics) is used for the purpose of obtaining that interesting optical phenomenon, the spectrum is much longer than when merely a glass prism is used; from that fact the natural philosopher infers that cassia causes rays or beams of light more to spread, or that it has a greater power of dispersion than glass, and that the colored spaces or spots have a different proportion to each other. From experiments made by Sir W. Herschel, it is evident that the brightest yellow contains the spectrum's greatest power of illumination, and that it is decreasing towards its two ends, the red and blue being nearly equal, and the violet inferior to both.

The effects produced by a single ray or congeries of rays upon the different departments of God's creation, are wonderful and show the marvellous wisdom of the Great Jehovah in introducing so brilliant and majestic a luminary as the sun in the planetary spaces. Although the philosopher's searching mind has made great discoveries concerning the nature, analysis and origin of light and its rays; yet man knows but very little of the extraordinary, stupendous bearings of that luminous matter; he knows but few of its physical and chemical effects. Every one who sees vegetables growing without the aid of the solar light, and those that are growing in the full enjoyment of the solar rays, cannot help observing, that those plants and herbs, that were deprived of that precious agency, are white, dingy, their secretions do not come to a perfection (the scientific term secretion, signifies a separation of animal fluids) the latter that had been growing under the influence of the sun, have a variety of most beautiful colors and tints, every filament, blade, &c., is vigorous, and full of life, in fact the whole system of the plant is in a state of perfect order. Of our esculent vegetables I merely mention a few, for instance, potatoes growing in dark places, are white, delicate and quite differently formed from those growing under the influence of the solar light. Celery is often cultivated for the table, by excluding the effects of the sun from the tender stem, which is done by heaping the soil upon it; when growing in the open air, that plant is entirely different; it throws out abundant shoots and leaves, acquires a deep, green color, and a bitter flavor. The interior of endive (a common salad herb) is not eatable, unless screened from the sun, and if exposed to the same, it becomes bitter and tough. In regard to common fruits, such as apples, pears, plums, cherries, &c., the sides exposed to the rays of the sun are rosy and colored.

Concerning the effects of light upon the animal creation, we find that horses, cattle and all other animals, that are either confined to the Polar Regions or subterranean places, are dull and have a dingy color, whereas those of the tropical countries and under a full sunshine, have fine, gaudy tints; are lively, quick and seldom represent physical anomalies. Likewise in regard to the human species, a certain quantity of light is required to keep up the mental and physical equilibrium of the body; miners, that are deprived of the rays of light, and are living for some time in dark, gloomy places, have generally, a sickly, morbid pallor and are unhealthy. From the above we learn, that light is requisite throughout the immensity of space; where there is light, there is life and intelligence.

Letter from Wm. H. Kimball.

FLORENCE, K. T., April 4, 1856.

JOHN TAYLOR, ESQ.—Dear Sir: I arrived here yesterday, and have had an interview with the proprietors of the town, with whom I have concluded satisfactory arrangements for making this the permanent starting point and outfiting place for our emigration, for all the purposes of which its advantages are far superior to those of any other town on the Missouri River. I am aware, sir, that you, and many of your readers, are well acquainted with the position and natural advantages of "Old Winter Quarters," now "Florence;" and that to you, and such readers, a particular description of the place will not likely be very interesting, except that part of it which relates to its present condition and prospects; yet there are doubtless many others, not so well informed, who under existing circumstances will be interested in, and pleased with such description, I will therefore, in my feeble way, give such information relative to the place, as I am conversant with, trusting that it may find a place in your valuable and widely circulated paper.

Florence is situated on a beautiful bank, some forty feet above high water mark, on the west bank of the Missouri River, about seven miles northwest of Bluff City; immediately opposite the Pigeon Valley, the surveyed route of the Mississippi and Missouri Railroad, and very nearly on a direct east and west line, from said valley to the great bend of the Platte River; the Missouri here is but from seven to nine hundred feet wide, perfectly clear of sand bars, snags, and all other obstructions; with rock bottom, all the way across at a depth, in an ordinary stage of water, of from two to ten feet; a Rock Island nearly in the middle and rock bound shores on both sides; and consequently permanent banks affording decidedly the best steamboat landings, and ferrying point on the river, and offering facilities for bridging such as cannot be found at any other place on the Missouri; and such as are rarely found among large streams. Mill Creek which runs through the town site affords an easy grade to the ridge landing to the Platte Valley, via Elk Horn City, with all these advantages there can scarcely be a doubt but this will be the great railroad crossing, and that the surveyed route will be selected as it has certainly been the great emigrant crossing since emigration to Utah and the Pacific first commenced; more having crossed at this point than at all other places on the river, above Saint Joseph. There is an abundance of timber; hard wood, as well as cotton wood, in the immediate vicinity of Florence; excellent lime, and sand stone quarries; gravel, sand, marl, and first-rate clay for making brick and potters ware; brick of a very superior quality were made here last year, and preparations have been made for carrying on the business quite extensively this season. Stone coal of a fine quality is to be found at various places in the vicinity, and from all indications there is strong reason to believe that it will be found to exist in large quantities; as yet there has been no search for it, except merely on the surface. There are two fine streams of water running through the town about three-fourths of a mile apart, on one of which there is an excellent mill, doing a firstrate business in the way of making lumber and lath, and in which it is intended to put two run of burrs the coming fall; which will be needed as there will be quite a quantity of grain raised in the neighborhood this season. The proprietors of Florence themselves have four hundred acres adjoining the town which was broke and fenced last year, and which they design croping this season; they are now at work sowing spring wheat, they also intend breaking an additional hundred acres in the same field, and planting it with corn, which will make five hundred acres under cultivation in one field "quite a farm for Nebraska," and as the soil is unsurpassed for fertility they will be likely to realize an abundant harvest.

Florence, thus far, has been in a great measure overshadowed by Omaha City which is only six miles below, and which in consequence of being the seat of Government and of other political advantages has outgrown all other towns in Nebraska, but such advantages when unaccompanied by natural resources (as in this case) cannot be of long duration, they are not such as are requisite to the building up of a large and prosperous city, and in this case like all those of a similar nature there must and will be a reaction, its position and resources, however, are now pushing it forward. Day is dawning and Florence is coming from under the shadow of Omaha; everything here wears a lively appearance; enterprise and industry, is the order of the day; there are no hangers on, no idlers here, everybody is busy at something; carpenters, bricklayers, plasterers, teamsters, laborers, &c., &c., all are busy at high wages, and many more are needed; there are a number of good buildings in progress of erection, among them several stores and warehouses, which will soon be filled with goods. Next week our people will commence building a large warehouse, upon a beautiful and convenient site which I have selected, and which with other lands have been donated to the Church, by the proprietors of the town. There is an excellent hotel here, kept by Mr. P. C. Chapman, a very gentlemanly landlord, who has the reputation (and deservedly no doubt) of keeping the best house in Nebraska. There is a fine steam ferry boat, plying between this and the opposite shore, capable of crossing at least two hundred teams per day and manned by competent officers and crew who seem disposed to do all in their power to accomodate the travelling community. There has been arrangements made for erecting another water mill and a large steam saw mill this season, the latter of which is to be finished and in full opperation by the 15th of June. Arrangements have also been made by a company from Ohio to establish a large foundery and machine shop, as soon as the necessary buildings can be erected; which are to be commenced at an early day. The Bank of Florence, chartered by the last Legislature, and to be located here, will go into opperation in the course of the coming summer, in fact the present prospects of Florence are exceedingly flattering, the place will doubtless improve very rapidly this season, and all branches of business bid fair to flourish. In fact the destiny of Florence is onward and upward, her position, resources and natural advantages are such as must force her into notice; and cause her importance to be felt and appreciated. I feel confident that the time is not far distant when Florence will be recognized as the great commercial Emporium, not of Nebraska only, but of the upper Missouri generally.

I will further state that the call at this place and vicinity is very great for mechanics, laborers and help of all kinds, wages ranging from two, to four dollars per day. Female help readily commands from two to four dollars per week, if you can send on a hundred or so, they will have no trouble in finding employment, at the above rates of wages.

Yours, &c., WM. H. KIMBALL.

California.

WE learn from the Western Standard of April 5th, that the most serious difficulties are at present existing in Oregon with the Indians. From an "extra" of the Oregonian, dated March 28th, 9 A. M., the following is condensed:

We have received several letters within the last twenty-four hours, from points above, along the Columbia River. The Indians, it seems, have by a coup de main withdrawn all the regulars who have been wintering at Vancouver, to the east side of the Cascade mountain. These Indians made a show of defiance at White Salmon, burned a house or two, killed and drove of a quantity of stock, and committed other depredations; whereupon all the available force of the regular army were ordered to move to the Indian country. The Oregon volunteers who took the field last September, and who have been in the Indian country ever since, were about to cross Snake River and give the Indians battle. At this juncture, it seems, the Indians have divided their forces, and by a military ruse have placed a large war party between both the regulars, volunteers, and the settlements, and have recommenced the war near our doors.

On Tuesday night, 25th March, the Indians, supposed to number eight hundred, attacked the Cascades, and at our latest dates, had full and complete possession of the only pass by which communication can be had with either the regular forces or the volunteers now in the field. The Indians have burned every building at the Cascades. They have captured and destroyed the steamer Mary, killed a large number of the citizens, and yesterday, were fighting with the forces in the block house, (Fort Rains,) the number of which was not over twenty-five.

Upon the receipt of the news that the Cascades had been attacked, a public meeting was immediately called in Portland, and over forty men volunteered at once to go to the rescue. The steamer Fashion was dispatched at an early hour yesterday with these volunteers and such arms as could be procured. The steamer Belle was dispatched from Vancouver with forty regulars and a few volunteers at five o'clock, yesterday morning. She arrived at the Cascades about ten o'clock, and succeeded in landing her men under cover of howitzers. The Indians in large numbers resisted them, and the fight had continued for several hours when Mr. Slater, the purser of the Belle, left in a canoe for assistance. Mr. Dennison, one of Governor Curry's aides, has sent overland the following letter, which explains how matters were when Slater left.

COL. STARK: Mr. Slater just passed us in a canoe, and says that all the houses at the Cascades are burned, and that the Indians are from six to eight hundred strong. Our people are fighting at the block house, and those on board the Belle are fighting, and can furnish no relief to those in the block house. Two of the men who went up on the Belle are killed. The Indians report the steamer Mary burned.

We want supplies and ammunition, and at least one hundred men in addition to what we now have. We shall take a position and try to defend ourselves, and send the Fashion back immediately. See that we have supplies and ammunition. Yours in haste.

A. P. DENNISON.

Another letter was received this afternoon from Vancouver, stating that the Indians were within six miles of that place, and were laying waste the country over which they traveled, murdering all ages, sexes and condition of people.

Large numbers of the inhabitants from the adjacent country are constantly coming in to Portland for protection and safety. The whole country is in a state of alarm and confusion. God only knows what or where will be the end of this war.

The Oregonian urges:

These Indians must be whipped, ay, they must be exterminated, or there will be no peace or safety to any part or portion of this country.

From an "extra" of the Crescent City Herald, dated 30th March, we learn as follows:

While the forces commanded by Col. Buchanan, U. S. A., which marched by the middle of the present month, and amount to about four hundred regular troops, comprising detachments from Crescent City, Port Orford and Fort Lane, must before this have effected the contemplated junction somewhere in the neighborhood of Big Meadows on Rogue River, the place where it is said the Indians boldly awaited and invited an attack on the whites, and while in hourly expectation of news from that quarter, the report of a sudden invasion of Illinois Valley by bands of hostile Indians unexpectedly awakens again, with the deepest sympathies towards the sufferers, the gloomiest forebodyings for the future.

As will be seen by the articles on the Indian disturbances in our columns this week, the war in the Northern Territories wears an ominous aspect. Every where the red men appear to be successful, and they are dealing out terrible and indiscriminate vengeance on all who fall into their power. They have had a long score of accumulated greivances to settle, and they are now doing their best to square the account. Two hundred of the whites, since the commencement of the war, have fallen in battle—about one hundred men, and women and children to the number of twent-five or thereabouts, been murdered—about one hundred houses burned, and an incalculable amount of property destroyed. They are making the best use of the time to do all they can before the winter breaks up, when the troops can more vigorously and effectively prosecute the campaign.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, April 24, 1856.

On motion of Mr. Benjamin, a resolution was adopted calling on the Secretary of State for information relative to the extent to which the transportation of laborers is now being carried on from the Continent of Asia or any Asiatic Islands to America, whether such laborers be termed laborers, coolies or apprentices; also to show the manner of arrival, together with any statistics he may possess showing a sacrifice of human life attending this traffic.

The three million Armament bill was then taken up.

Mr. Hale stated that the expenses of the Government, now in a time of profound peace is $10,000,000 more than during any year of the Mexican War. While it required but two millions annually to keep Washington's Administration, $60,000,000 are necessary to sustain that of Mr. Pierce. He did not know but he was doing wrong to state those facts, as it might encourage the President to go into another war, thinking it might be more economical. [Laughter.]

The bill was laid aside, and Mr. Houston resumed his remarks condemnatory of the action of the Naval Board. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Pelton, from the Committee on Commerce, reported without amendment the Senate's bill remitting or refunding the duties paid on all goods, wares or merchandise in original packages destroyed by fire.

After an ineffectual effort to pass it, the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The Indian Appropriation bill was considered, and Mr. Ritchie argued the constitutional right of Congress to legislate concerning the Territories, on the subject of Slavery as well as other matters, and that Congress might reject as well as admit new States into the Union. Adjourned.

SENATE. April 25.

On motion of Mr. Toombs a resolution was adopted instructing the Committee on Judiciary to inquire into the expediency of repealing the act of June, 1848, amending the naturalization act of 1813.

The bill for the relief of Geo. P. Marsh was taken up, and passed, together with several bills relating to the District of Columbia. Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The bill to remit or refund the duties on all goods or merchandise, in original packages, destroyed by fire, was again before the House.

Mr. Phelps condemned the hot haste exhibited to pass the bill. Nobody could tell how much money was involved. Rumor said ten or fifteen millions of dollars.

Mr. Pelton explained that from the most reliable information the amount of duties to be refunded would not exceed $300,000 or, at the extent, $500,000.

Mr. Phelps thought that including San Francisco, with all other fires for the sixteen years covered by the bill, the amount would be far greater. The New York fire of 1845 involved three hundred and fifty thousand dollars. He contended that the bill directed the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the money—being, in effect, an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. Pelton said the bill was based on a similar act passed in 1838, and was intended to fill the hiatus from that time to 1855, making a continuous law. It would answer the New York merchants to confine its operation to 1845. After further debate the House adjourned till Monday.

SENATE. April 28.

Mr. Hamlin introduced a bill from some unknown person to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific National Union Railroad Company.

He read some extracts from a letter accompanying the bill, in which its author says it is the most important bill ever presented in Congress since the adoption of the American Constitution, and whatever party shall first adopt it will be sure to succeed in the Presidential campaign. The reading of the extracts occasioned much laughter.

Mr. Wheeler, of Cal., thought there was no need for referring the billl, as the committee has already reported.

Several Senators—Why, yes, let it go.

Mr. Weller—Well, if he sends it there, I will pledge myself that none of the committee will ever read it. (Laughter.)

Mr. Brown, of Miss., argued that the right of sovereignty over the Territories had not been delegated to Congress. He said he should always vote for the admission of any State with sufficient population to entitle it to one representative in Congress, without inquiring whether its constitution permitted or excluded slavery.

Mr. Stewart, of Mich., moved to take up the River and Harbor bill. Rejected.

Mr. Bell, of Tenn., defended Lieut. Maury from the derogation implied by the action of the Naval Board. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Nichols, of Ohio, made a personal explanation respecting his vote for Mr. Banks as Speaker. It was called forth by a recent speech by his collegue at Hamilton, Ohio.

The Senate's bill to remit duties on goods, wares, and merchandise destroyed by fire was taken up.

The House re-considered its action overruling the decision of the chair that the bill did not make an appropriation and was not therefore required to be referred to the committee of the Whole.

The decision of the Chair was then sustained by five majority, and after an unsuccessful motion to make the bill a special order, it was sent to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

The Senate bill, amendatory of the act establishing the Circuit Court of California, passed. Adjourned.

SENATE. April 29.

After some debate, the Senate refused to print 10,000 extra copies of Cap. Marcy's report of the explorations of the sources of the Brazos and Washitaw rivers—Messrs. Brown and others contending that the Senate published too many books.

The bill making appropriations for new fortifications was taken up, considered and set aside without action.

Mr. Stuart introduced a bill providing a punishment for forging or counterfeiting Land Warrants or certificates. Referred to Judiciary Committee.

Several private bills were passed. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed a joint resolution for enlarging the Custom House, Post Office, and United States Court House building at Cleaveland.

On the motion of Mr. Cox the Committee on Commerce was instructed to inquire into the expediency of exempting steamboats of 150 tons burden, or less, from the operation of the law for better security of passengers on vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam.

The Nebraska contested election case was postponed three weeks.

A resolution was unanimously reported from the Committee on Elections, declaring Mr. Fuller rightfully entitled to represent the Sixth District of Maine. Adopted.

Also to allow Mr. Fuller, mileage and per diem.

Mr. Quitman advocated the repeal of the neutrality laws, which he considered a violation of the Constitution and a stigma on the American intelligence. In this connection he said Mexico is in a state of dissolution, divided into factions, and lingering out a miserable existence by selling its territory to this country. In Central America there have been a series of revolutions for years. Cuba, the last remnant of the gigantic despotism of Spain, is necessary for the protection of our commerce, and for the national repose and security. The law of nations depends upon circumstances. Its foundation is reason, right and justice. We have not our own connecting link between the Atlantic and Pacific States, and that man is guilty of moral treason who halts about the means of seizing the Isthmus. It must be taken, even at the expense of a war. It is manifest destiny, as well as a national necessity.

In the course of his address, he said England had the address to induce our Government to reject a favorable treaty with Dominica, and had besides exerted an influence over Spain to our detriment. Duty to our country demands that we guard against the repetition of such flagrant offenses. Adjourned.

SENATE. April 30.

The House bills relative to appropriations for the improvement of the Harbor of Sheboygan, and creating Columbus, Ky., a port of delivery, passed.

On motion of Mr. Summer, a resolution was adopted, directing the Finance Committee to consider the expediency of providing by law all articles of foreign manufacture obtained exclusively from submerged and derelict wrecks, whether sunk in our own or foreign waters, may be admitted free of duty, and that the Secretary of Treasury, in his discretion, may be authorized to remit the duties to which such articles are now subject. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Washborne, (Ill.,) from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill establishing collection districts, designating ports of entry and delivery, and modifying the revenue laws.

After some conversation the further consideration of the bill was postponed to the second Monday in June.

Mr. Herbert, referring to the recent massacre at Panama, said this was not the first time such offences had been committed in that quarter. It was high time the government should put an end to such proceedings. Are our citizens to receive no relief? The sooner this country is so informed the better. He offered a resolution, which was adopted, instructing the Committee on Foreign Affairs to inquire if any and what further legislation was necessary to secure the lives and property of American citizens passing over the Isthmus of Panama.

The Indian Appropriation Bill was then taken up in Committee.

The Indian Bill was reported to the House without even being read or one word said relative to it while pending in the Committee. Adjourned.

The engines, patterns, &c., being in another building, were saved. The Insurance on the building is $15,000, and what it was on the stock is not known. One hundred men are thrown out of employment, besides a large number of women and children. The capital stock of the company is 75,000. The works will be immediately rebuilt.

Horrible Occurrence.

CHICAGO, April 24 1856.

Passengers who arrived at St. Pauls, Minnesota, last week, report the murder of an entire family named Julien, who lived at Travers, [a settlement near Lake Travers, 120 miles northeast of St. Pauls]. The family consisted of father, mother and two children, and from the position in which the bodies were found, it is surmised that the father first murdered his family and then shot himself. It is possible, however, that the deed may have been committed by robbers.

More Railways for Canada.

A project is on foot to obtain from the Canadian Parliament a charter for a line of railway from Quebec, on the north shore, to the St. Lawrence to Montreal, thence through the valley of the Ottawa river, via. Bytown or Ottawa City, Pembroke, &c., to Georgetown Bay. The project was concieved by Hon. Joseph Cauchon, Commissioner General of the crown lands, and contemplates a grant of three million acres of public lands, to aid in the construction of the road.

Abuse of Indians.

IN an article in our last week's issue we had occasion to refer to injustice and inhumanity frequently practised upon the Indians, we then stated that in nine cases out of ten they were more "sined against then sining." We give the following from the Western Standard, extracted from Herald (California), as a fair specimen of thousands of such cases that might be mentioned:

"Some time since a party of white men on the borders of Mendocino County, went among the tribe known as the 'Tatoe Indians,' and wantonly killed eleven of them, giving no better reason for the act, than to use their own expressive language, 'just to see them jump.' Well, the poor fellows did 'jump' upon receiving the white man's leaden messengers, and are now, no doubt in their 'happy hunting ground,' where it is to be hoped powder and lead are unknown. A short time after this cruel act, a man named Jamison who lived in the vicinity, had an Indian boy to whom he was much attached, stolen from him. Taking with him five friendly Indians he went to the Tatoe country to recover the boy, and instead of bringing his mission to a successful issue, himself and three of his companions were killed, the other two returning home wounded. This no doubt was intended as a retaliation for the rifle exercise on the devoted eleven. Upon receipt of this news, a meeting of the inhabitants of Parker's Valley was held, and the settlers are arming and preparing for a war of extermination against the tribe. The Indians are known to have in their possession a quantity of muskets and bayonets; and thus may be apprehended an Indian war in our own State, not eighty miles from Petaluma City. 'Verily, the times are out of joint.'"

The "Lie" in the Cupboard.

THE Chinese sell "lie" tea: the English tradesmen, it would seem, sell lie flour; lie sugar, lie drugs; lie milk; lie pepper; lie mustard. In fact, the Englishman's cupboard is haunted with lies; and the poorer the cupboard, in comparison, the thicker the falsehoods. The evidence before the committee obtained by Mr. Scholefield, convinces us that there is almost as much trading fraud in the country as trading cant. Men, respectable, religious men, fold their hands complacently in the family pew, whilst they grind the bowels of the poor with gipsum. The Englishman is sick, and in his sickness, swallows sawdust for healing medicine: the drug-dealers growing their own rhubarb in English deals. On every side there is the most demoralizing, the most debasing fraud committed upon the consumer—and the poorer he is, of course, the more helpless he is; and the law of England that, in its solemn sense of right has looked up urchins of ten and twelve years old for stealing apples,—the law permits the daily robber of the poor man's cupboard, the daily assailant on the poor man's health, to continue in his course of infamy if, when detected, he can pay for it.

Adulteration will never cease so long as adulteration is merely fineable by money. In England, especially, no shame is attachable to any transaction that is duly purchaseable. So long as money is the test, so long as money is the penalty, the scoundrel who robs his neighbor by false weight, or helps to poison him by false commodities, will still continue a respectable scoundrel, if he can by so much money purchase quittance of the law. Make the act of forgery fineable, and at this moment Messrs. Strahan and Paul would still be received in their old accustomed society. Money is the true fuller's-earth, and cleanses all spots. Until the crime of adulteration and that of false weight carry with them the punishment of felony, the crimes will be considered as merest peccadilloes, because money duly acquits the offenders.

"Licensed to sell gypsum for flour." May not this be written by the dealer who, with Christian consideration for his neighbors' bowels, pays, in two cases, five pounds penalty with costs, and there an end! He has paid so much hard money for his villany; and money hides the shame. He may go to his comfortable home, sup, say his prayers, and rise in the morning to drive his trade anew. Now put the rascal in prison, stagmatise him as a felon—the taint remains; it has been fixed in gaol, and not removed, fumigated by a bank note.—[Lloyd's Weekly, March 23d.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

"We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est-elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là. dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence. ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

Oh! Let Us be Happy.

BY ELIZA COOK.

Oh! let us be happy when friends gather round us,
However the world may have shadowed our lot;
When the rose-braided links of affection have bound us
Let the cold chains of earth be despised and forgot.
And say not that Friendship is only Ideal,
That Truth and Devotion are blessings unknown,
For he who believes every heart is unreal,
Has something unsound at the core of his own.

Oh! let us be happy when moments of pleasure
Have brought to our presence the dearest and best,
For the pulse ever beats to most heavenly measure,
When Love and Goodwill sweep the strings of the heart.

Oh! let us be happy when moments of meeting,
Bring those to our side who illumine our eyes;
And though folly, perchance, shake a bell at the greeting,
He is dullest of fools who forever is wise.
Let the laughter of joy echo over our bosoms,
As the hum of the bee o'er the midsummer flowers,
For the honey of happiness comes from love's blossoms,
And is form'd in the hive of these exquisite hours.
Oh! let us, &c.

Let us plead not a spirit too sad and too weary,
To yield the kind word, and the mirth lighted smile,
The heart, like the tree, must be fearfully dreary,
When the robin of Hope will not warble awhile.
Let us say not in pride, we care not for another,
And live in our wealth, like the ox in his stall,
'Tis the commerce of love with our sisters and brothers,
Helps to pay our great debt to the Father of all.
Oh! let us, &c.

Marriage and Morals in Utah

An Address Written by Elder Parley P. Pratt, Read in Joint Session by Mr. Thos. Bullock, Chief Clerk of the House, in Representatives' Hall, Fillmore, Dec. 31, 1855. The Assembly tendered the Author their thanks by a unanimous vote, and by a like vote ordered the Address to be published in the Deseret News.

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN:

At the opening of the present session of our annual Legislature, I had the honor of being unanimously chosen Chaplain of the Council.

I was then and there laid under a solemn oath to faithfully perform the duties of this high and holy calling to the best of my abilities, and was also solemnly charged by the honorable President, Mr. Kimball, not merely to be fervent in prayer during the session, but also to contribute my mite in moulding the moral and social institutions of our common country.

In accordance with these sacred responsibilities placed upon me, I have, with some pains, prepared this address, which I am extremely happy in having the privilege of laying before you; not merely, or principally for your sakes; but for the sake of the people of our Territory—our nation, and the world.

As our young and rising Territory is about preparing to enter upon her sovereignty as a free and independent republic, and to assume her place amid the family of American States, it becomes her citizens, and especially those engaged in founding her institutions, to purify themselves and to come together with pure hearts and clean hands; and clothed with light as with a garment, lay a constitutional foundation, and make or adopt such laws as will tend to purify and exalt the people,—establish righteousness and peace, and multiply and perpetuate a nation of freeman in the highest degree of moral, intellectual and physical development.

No time-serving, or mere temporary policy should enter into our composition, or influence us for one moment. We act, not merely or principally for ourselves or the living age; but for untold millions of posterity, and for ages yet unborn; who doubtless will be influenced by our institutions, and mould their morals, manners, precepts and even there consciences more or less after the pattern we set them.

A wholesome moral atmosphere, and a conscience purified and enlightened by the Spirit of Truth are indispensably necessary to a permanent national growth, and to the strength and perpetuity of institutions.

The All-wise Creator, the God of nature, has implanted in the human heart certain affections, which, under proper culture and direction, give rise to family ties; hence the necessity and importance of the moral and social relations and the institutions for their proper direction and government.

'Tis nature's universal law, and the just and great commandment with blessing; that each and every species should multiply and fill the measure of its creation. Hence the growth of families,—the germs of nations:—and hence, as we before observed, the necessity of laws founded in wisdom, to guard, as it were, the fountain and issues of life.

In short—moral and social affections and institutions are the very foundation of all government, whether of family, Church or State. If these are perverted, or founded in error, the whole superstructure is radically wrong, and will contain within itself the seeds of its own decay and dissolution.

These facts are not only self evident, but are according to all experience—being exemplified in the decadence and dissolution of nations and empires of old; as well as in the general weakness and corruption so characteristic of men and things in more modern times.

The prophet Isaiah, in looking through the vista of long distant years, at length beholds the vision of modern "Christendom," or of the corruptions growing out of Roman sway. He exclaims Isa. 24. 5, "The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws; changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant."

We here enquire: What laws were transgressed? What ordinance was changed? and what everlasting covenant was broken—the effect of which would defile the very earth under its inhabitants?

This leads us back, in our researches, to the earliest institutions, laws, ordinances, covenants, and precedents on record touching marriage and the moral and social relations.

If we find laws, statutes, covenants and precedents emanating from God; sworn to by himself to be everlasting; as a blessing to all nations:—if we find these have to do with exceeding multiplicity of the race, and with family and national organization and increase:—if such institutions are older than Moses, and are found perpetuated and unimpaired by Moses, and the prophets—Jesus and the Apostles, then it will appear evident, that they were intended to be perpetual: and that no merely human legislation or authority, whether proceeding from emperor, king, or people has a right to change, alter, or pervert them.

It will then remain to be shown by whom these institutions were changed, or perverted: the direful effect of such change upon the nations; and the only course left for those who would survive the crash of nations and the wreck of worlds.

Our object, gentlemen, is to urge upon the statesmen and people of, at least one state or government of our earth to avoid the rock and quicksands on which so many have made shipwreck—to restore the laws, the ordinance, and the everlasting covenant of our God; that her citizens may be purified and preserved by the same; and her institutions, being founded in truth, may be perpetuated for ever.

I beseech, therefore honorable gentlemen to hear me patiently. Abraham, the friend of God, lived in Asia upwards of four hundred years before the law of Moses was written on tables of stone, or thundered from Mount Sinai.

To this man God gave laws, commandments, statutes, and judgments in an everlasting covenant.

He said unto him, Genesis 12th, verse 2nd. "And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing; and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee; and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

And again: Genesis, 17th chapt., verses 1st to 8th: "And when Abram was ninety years old and nine, the Lord appeared to Abram, and said unto him: I am the Almighty God: walk before me and be thou perfect, and I will make my covenant between me and thee, and I will multiply thee exceedingly. And Abram fell on his face: and God talked with him saying, as for me, behold my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations. Neither shalt thy name any more be called Abram; but thy name shall be Abraham; for a father of many nations have I made thee. And I will make thee exceedingly fruitful, and I will make nations of thee, and kings shall come out of thee, and I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations, for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee.

And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God."

In the foregoing promises it is evident that there is an everlasting covenant, touching multiplicity of our species, government-making or the raising up of families and nations, and their exceeding prosperity and increase:—a covenant everlasting and unchangeable in which all nations should be blessed, if they were ever blessed at all.

In connection with this covenant we have reason to believe that God would reveal laws, statutes, and institutions which would be productive of the greatest possible increase of a wise, healthy and virtuous posterity.

In the precedents recorded of Abraham and his posterity two principles are conspicuous as being subservient to the carrying out of these ends: viz;

First:—A plurality of wives:

Secondly:—An entire prohibition of all sexual intercourse except upon the principle of marriage—a breach of which was considered a capital offence, punishable with death. God provided Abraham with Sarah, Hagar, Keturah, and several other wives not named. By this means he became the father of many nations and his seed was multiplied exceedingly.

God also gave to Jacob, Abraham's grandson, four wives:—viz: Leah, Rachel, Bilhah and Zilpha; by which means he became the father of twelve tribes. The history of these things is so conspicuous in the Book of Genesis that we need not quote chapter and verse.

Now after Abraham had obtained all these wives, and had raised up children by them, the Lord bears testimony in the 26th chapter of Genesis, verse 5th, saying:—"Abraham obeyed my voice and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes and my laws."

Here then, we have demonstration that a man living four hundred years before the law of Moses was given, had statutes, commandments, and laws given him of God; and that he kept them.

These laws evidently included polygamy or plurality of wives, from the fact that he had them, as a means of carrying out the promise of exceeding multiplicity. Here, then, the matter is set for ever at rest, that polygamy is included in the ordinance of marriage, and in the everlasting covenant and laws of God; and that, under proper regulations, it is an institution holy, just, virtuous, pure, and, in the estimation of God, abundantly calculated to bless, preserve, and multiply a nation.

Hence the laws of some of our States, which recognize polygamy as a crime, are at once both unscriptural and unconstitutional, as well as immoral. Common law in England and the United States recognizes the Bible as the very foundation of all moral and criminal jurisprudence; and the Constitution of the United States, and of each State, guarantees the liberty of at least an enlightened conscience, founded on the moral law of God as found in that holy book. Hence, should an individual or a community, in all good faith, regulate their marriages by the laws of God, as given to Abraham, no State law can harm them while the civil courts are bound to abide by that holy and sacred guarantee of the Constitution, viz: "Liberty of conscience."

Having demonstrated the fact of an everlasting covenant made with Abraham and his seed, including plural marriages and certain laws designed to multiply and bless many nations and to be a blessing to all the families of the earth, we will now enquire after the penal laws touching morality, or the intercourse of the sexes.

The first intimation we will notice on this subject is found in Genesis 20th chapter; as follows:—"And Abraham journeyed from thence towards the south country and dwelt between Kadesh and Shur, and sojourned in Gerar. And Abraham said of Sarah his wife, she is my sister; and Abimelech, king of Gerar, sent and took Sarah. But God came to Abimelech in a dream by night and said to him, behold thou art but a dead man for the woman which thou hast taken, for she is a man's wife. But Abimelech had not come near her, and he said, Lord wilt thou slay also a righteous nation? Said he not unto me, she is my sister? and she, even she herself, said, he is my brother; in the integrity of my heart and the innocency of my hands have I done this.

And God said unto him in a dream, yes I know that thou didst this in the integrity of thy heart; for I also withheld thee from sinning against me; therefore suffered I thee not to touch her. Now therefore, restore the man his wife; for he is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt live; but if thou restore her not, know thou that thou shalt surely die, thou and all that are thine."

Here we have the law of God revealed by his own mouth about four hundred years before the law of Moses was given; making death the penalty of adultry.

This penal law then, was part and parcel of the laws, statutes and covenants under which Abraham and his neighbors lived, and it seems to have been an ancient and general law handed down by the fathers, to which Abimelech was no stranger; he did not plead his ignorance of the law, but the innocency of his intentions, and his ignorance of the true circumstances.

Again Genesis, chapter 34th: Records a case of fornication, committed by Shechem, the son of Hamon, the Hivite, prince of the country, with Dinah, the daughter of Jacob, the grandson of Abraham; and how punished.

Two of the sons of Jacob, viz: Simeon and Levi, took their swords and slew this fornicator and all the men about him, who had been accessory to the seduction of their sister, or had consented thereto; and they took their goods for a spoil.

They may in this case have superseded the bounds of the law; but still it goes to show with what abhorrence these sons of a chaste and plural marriage held the crime of fornication.

We will now enquire whether the law of Moses, or the gospel ever changed the covenant of Abraham, or disannulled the law of marriage or the penalty of death affixed to adultery and fornication.

For this purpose we shall trace the subject down through the different ages and dispensations, bringing a few instances out of many, illustrative of the subject. But first of all we will take the direct testimony of the Apostle Paul, found in Galatians, 3rd chapter, 17th and 18th verses inclusive, which reads thus:

"That the blessing of Abraham might come on the gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith.

Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth it, or addeth thereto. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promise made, he saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ. And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ,—the law (of Moses) which was four hundred and thirty years, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, (of Moses,) it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise."

Again,—verse 29th, Paul says to the gentiles:—"If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

Here we have the most direct and positive testimony, in the New Testament, that the covenant and promise made to Abraham were intended for all time, and for the believing gentiles, and all true Christian people; and that they were entirely distinct from the law of Moses, and were never disannulled, or changed, either by Moses or Christ. Hence we affirm that the law of plural marriage, and death as a penalty of adultery, and fornication has been in force through all time, and through every dispensation, from Abraham till the present; and that of right it should be of force among all truly Christian nations:—that the carrying out of these holy laws in righteousness would greatly multiply and bless a nation:—and that the breach, or change of them would corrupt the world, and defile the very earth with abominations.

But, let us now come to historical illustrations, in the 25th chapter of Numbers we have an account of Zimri, a prince in Israel who committed fornication with Cosbi, the daughter of Zur, a prince of Midian; and how Phinehas the grandson of Aaron, the priest, took a javelin and thrust them both through the body, and slew them; and how the Lord staid the plague on account of this act; and rewarded Phinehas with an everlasting covenant of priesthood, for his zeal in thus punishing the crime of fornication.

We should remember too that Moses, who was himself a polygamist, both in practice and as a legislator, was the prophet and legislator, under whose administration this crime was thus severely punished.

In the first book of Samuel, chapter 1st, we find an account of Elkanah, and his two wives, Hannah and Peninnah; and of Samuel, the son of this pluralist, who was a promised child devoted to the service of God and brought up in the holy temple. To this child came the word of the Lord against the house of Eli the priest, saying; (1st Samuel, 3rd chapter—verses 11th and 14th.)

"Behold I will do a thing in Israel, at which both the ears of every one that heareth it shall tingle. In that day will I perform against Eli all the things which I have spoken concerning his house; where I begin I will also make an end. For I have told him that I will judge his house forever, for the iniquity which he knoweth; because his sons make themselves vile, and he restraineth them not.

Therefore I have sworn, unto the house of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever."

Here seems to be certain sins which the ordinances of remission could never cleanse. God swore that neither sacrifice nor offering should ever atone for them. What were these sins committed by the sons of Eli? The answer is found in the 2nd chapt. of 1st Samuel. They, as priests, robbed the sacrifices, and committed whoredoms with the women who came to the tabernacle:—this they did repeatedly and would not repent. In the 4th chap. of said book, we find the record of the fulfillment of the words of the young child Samuel. Israel was worsted in a battle with the Philistines; the two priests, the sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were slain; the sacred ark which they bore was taken by the enemy, their father Eli, on hearing this news, fell backward and his neck brake; and Phinehas's wife died on hearing the same news. Here we have a most striking example and illustration of God's blessing on plural marriage, and of his curse and death, attendant on adultery and fornication.

Samuel the son of Elkanah, the polygamist was blessed as a holy prophet, to denounce death upon adulterers.

We next will notice a case of adultery committed by David, king of Israel, and how punished. 2nd Samuel, chapt. 12—verses 7 to 14:—"And Nathan said to David:—Thou art the man. Thus saith the Lord God of Israel:—I anointed thee king over Israel, and I delivered thee out of the hand of Saul; and I gave thee thy master's house, and thy master's wives into thy bosom, and gave thee the house of Israel and of Judah, and if that had been too little, I would, moreover have given unto thee such and such things. Wherefore hast thou despised the commandment of the Lord to do evil in his sight? Thou hast killed Uriah the Hittite with the sword, and hast taken his wife to be thy wife, and hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon. Now therefore the sword shall never depart from thine house, because thou hast despised me, and hast taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be thy wife.

Thus saith the Lord, behold I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house, and I will take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them unto thy neighbor, and he shall lie with thy wives in the sight of this sun. For thou didst it secretly, but I will do this thing before all Israel and before the sun. And David said unto Nathan:—I have sinned against the Lord. And Nathan said unto David, the Lord also hath put away thy sin, thou shalt not die. Howbeit, because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme, the child also that is born unto thee shall surely die."

Here again we find death the penalty of adultery; but in this instance God in his mercy spared his life because it was a first offence, and because he sincerely repented. But he punished him very severely, in the death of his child,—in taking his wives from him, and in announcing rebellion and war in his own house.

In this instance as in all the former cases the same God who punishes adulterers with such severity declares in favor of polygamy and expressly reveals the fact that he himself gave into David's bosom the wives of his master, Saul.

These few instances drawn from the Old Testament must suffice to show that Moses and the prophets did not alter the law of marriage, or the penal laws against adultery, etc. as existing in the everlasting covenant made with Abraham.

We next inquire whether Jesus Christ or his Apostles ever altered or abolished these laws. John, chap. 8—verses 3 to 7, reads thus:—"And the scribes and pharisees brought unto him a woman taken in adultery, and when they had set her in the midst, they say unto him;

Master, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act. Now Moses in the law commanded us that such should be stoned: but what sayest thou? This they said, tempting him, that they might have to accuse him.

But Jesus stooped down and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not. So when they continued asking him he lifted up himself, and said unto them: He that is without sin among you let him first cast a stone at her."

If Jesus had wished to abolish or alter this item of the law, this was a timely opportunity,—a point in hand: but so far from this, he ordered the woman to be immediately stoned: provided there was one virtuous man among all her accusers who was himself so pure as to be worthy to execute the law: but as none were found in that age of degeneracy, she went unpunished; but was strictly admonished to sin no more.

Again:—1st Corinthians—chap 5th, verse 5th. The Apostle Paul, in reference to a person in the church who had committed fornication, exhorted the saints:—"to deliver such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."

This destruction of the flesh must have had reference to the death of the body; the man having justly forfeited his life, in accordance with the law of God. And the spirit being saved in the day of the Lord Jesus, must have had an allusion to the great day of his second coming: thus showing that the fornicator, under the light of the gospel, had forfeited his life in this world, and his salvation in the world to come, at least eighteen hundred years.

Thus, under all dispensations, whether Patriarchal, Mosaic, or Christian, the penalty annexed to unlawful sexual intercourse appears to be the same: growing out of a fixed and unchanged law of God:—a wise provision:—a bright cherub with a flaming sword, as it were, to guard the chaste and sacred fountain or issues of life.

It is true Jesus Christ and his Apostles, so far as their writings have come to us, have not dwelt on practical plurality in their own age, for the best of all reasons, Judea was then a Roman province, under Roman laws, which were opposed to polygamy. On this account the Jews had greatly degenerated; they had corrupted their way, and perverted the pure institutions of their more virtuous fathers. Hence John the Baptist and Jesus Christ reproved them sharply, calling them a generation of vipers—"an evil and adulterous generation, who had made void the law of God by their traditions."

But, one thing is certain—Jesus Christ and his Apostles always approved of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and the holy prophets of old;—bore testimony of their virtue and faithfulness, and represented them as honorable fathers of the faithful, and members or rulers in the kingdom of God.

Jesus said on one occasion to the Jews:—"If ye were Abraham's seed ye would do the works of Abraham."

On another occasion he said:—"Many shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of God: but ye shall be thrust out." See Luke 13th chap.—verses 28—29.

Paul and the Apostles exhorted the saints to be like Abraham the father of the faithful, whose children they were through the gospel: and if children then heirs to the same covenants of promise.

Now we have already shown that the promises made to Abraham, to which the New Testament saints were heirs included exceeding multiplicity of children, and consequently of wives, as the means of carrying out the same. But, lest any might mistake this point of the covenant and promises, Jesus Christ himself has set it for ever at rest.

He said:—Luke 18th chap.—verses 29—30. "Verily I say unto you there is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive many fold more in this present time, and in the world to come, life everlasting."

Men, brethren and fathers:—In this review we have proved:

First:—An everlasting covenant made with Abraham, in which all nations should be blessed:

Secondly:—That one main feature of this covenant pertained to the exceeding great multiplicity of our species, and to the organization, perpetuity and growth of families, nations and kingdoms:

Thirdly:—That God, being the best judge of the means of multiplying appointed a plurality of wives, for good and holy men, as a principal means of multiplying their seed, and forbade, on pain of death, all sexual intercourse, except that sanctioned by the holy laws of marriage;

Fourthly:—That the covenant and laws pertaining to marriage and virtue, or the moral and social relations of the sexes, as held by Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were never altered or disannulled either by Moses or the prophets, Jesus Christ or the Apostles; consequently that this covenant, and the laws, penalties, and promises thereunto pertaining, are, or by right ought to be, still of force.

Fifthly:—That all nations were to be blessed in these covenants and institutions; and that the gentiles were to become fellow heirs of the same by the gospel; through which they became the seed of Abraham:

And, sixthly:—That to transgress these holy laws, change this ordinace, or break this everlasting covenant, would, according to Isaiah the prophet, "defile the very earth under the inhabitants thereof." We next enquire:—What power has been guilty of such innovations? "Who has transgressed the laws,—changed the ordinance,—broken the everlasting covenant?"

This we charge home upon Rome. She is the "fourth beast" of Daniel's vision: "She ruled the earth as with a rod of iron;"—"She made war with the saints and overcame them:"—She changed the laws and institutions of both Jews and Christians:—by her sorceries were all nations deceived:—She, in short, is "Mystery, Babylon the Great,—the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth:"—She licensed whoredoms; but forbade to marry; allowing to none of her citizens but one wife, and to many of them, viz, the clergy, none at all.

Every, so called, Christian nation, including even Protestant England and the American States, has retained, at least, this one trait of her superstitions and abominations. They have either permitted or licensed whoredoms; and strictly prohibited a plurality of wives. They have punished lightly, or not at all, that which was under all dispensations, by the law of God considered a capital offence—a crime unto death: and have made a crime, and annexed a heavy penalty to that which, according to the Bible, was never recognized as a crime at all, either by God, Jesus Christ, the Holy Ghost, angels, prophets, or apostles. Yes,—fellow citizens, the laws of some of our States, I am ashamed to tell it, would recognize as illegitimate the children of Abraham and Jacob; would take from them their wives; thus tearing asunder what God hath joined together; and would doom those holy patriarchs, themselves, to hard labor and solitary confinement within the walls of a prison for years; and then suffer their wives and children to be prostituted with impunity:—and then, as if to crown the climax of inconsistency, such an order of things, taken together, would be called a "Virtue," and such institutions be dignified by the name of "Christianity." Such itstitutions have filled "Christendom" with whoredoms, her cities with abominations and the world with disease and rottenness: till the words of Isaiah have been fulfilled:—"The earth is defiled under the inhabitants thereof."

For instance, look at Paris, the capital of Christian France; one third of the children born there are said to be illegitimate, according to their own laws. Look at the capital of Austria, another so-called Christian power: one half of her children are said to be illegitimate.

Look at the census of Europe, and even of our older States of this Union;—see the hundreds of thousands of females more than of males. All this surplus of immortal beings are doomed by the Romish law, prohibiting polygamy, to live single and to never form those ties which would enable them lawfully and honorably to answer the "end" of their creation as wives and mothers. Nor is this all: under the present institutions men are trained to feel little or no obligation to marry: many of them choose to live single. This increases the number of females doomed to single life.

Nor does the mischief end here; the present wars in Europe, alone, have deprived the world of perhaps half a million of men in the vigor of life—candidates for the sacred offices of husband and father: by which means the same number of females are, by the monogamic law, added to the prohibited list.

All the surplus female population arising from these and other causes are, by the one wife system, utterly prohibited marriage; and thus compelled to break the first and great command of God: viz:—"Be fruitful and multiply."

Thus the laws of modern "Christendom," borrowed from Rome, have overwhelmed the nations with the grossest immoralities,—with sin, and sorrow, and tears, and wretched loneliness and widowhood. The widows mourn having no husbands;—the virgins mourn, having no bridegrooms; the children mourn having no protectors; and families and nations mourn, having no confidence in themselves or each other. Virtue and confidence have fled; mercy weeps tears of blood; charity itself falters—and is ready to yield to the cries of justice for vengence on the earth.

What, then, shall the righteous do?

We reply:—Restore the law of God,—the new and everlasting covenant. Let every good citizen of both sexes marry at a proper age:—bless them, and say:—"Be fruitful and multiply." Make death the penalty for fornication and adultery: thus throwing a shield around our families and sacred domestic institutions. Let the monogamic law, restricting a man to one wife, with all its attendant train of whoredoms, intrigues, seductions, wretched and lonely single life, hatred, envy, jealosy, infanticide, illegitimacy, disease and death, like the millstone cast into the depths of the sea—sink with Great Babylon to rise no more. Let every man and woman be virtuous, pure, holy—filling the measure of their creation. And let us go to, and fill these mountains; the States, North and South America; the earth; and an endless succession of worlds with a holy, virtuous, and highly intellectual seed:—whose hearts shall delight in the law of God.

Let our sons become the sons of God, through faith in Jesus Christ, and obedience to the gospel: let His law be indelibly engraven on the tablet of their hearts: let them be early indoctrinated in every principle of virtue and honor; that each may be a conservatory of chastity, and wield a savory influence in every circle of his acquaintance. Let them learn to respect themselves as sons of God; and the other sex as sisters,—daughters of the Highest,—holy vessels, eternal beings, destined as companions and co-workers in the great science of life. Let them be taught to aspire, by every principle of honor and integrity, to the patriarchal throne, as heads of families and saviors of men.

Let our daughters also obey the ordinances of God, and receive and cultivate the gift of the Holy Ghost, in every good and pure affection:—Let them early understand the true relationship they are destined to sustain to the other sex:—Let them be taught to respect them as brothers, worthy of their confidence and affection—worthy to become their savior and head, as Christ is the head of the Church. Let them be taught to respect and revere themselves, as holy vessels, destined to sustain and magnify the eternal and sacred relationship of wife and mother:—to be the ornament and glory of man; and to share with him a never fading crown, and an eternal increasing dominion.

In short, let us educate our sons and daughters in all that is holy, and true, and virtuous, and pure, and lovely, and of good report: let us gradually and carefully develop in them the true affections and attributes of their nature: let us cultivate every intellectual and moral sense and faculty within them, and lead them gently onward in the great science of life and exaltation;—that, when time shall be no more, we may rejoice with the untold millions of our posterity in the eternal mansions.

POPULATION OF ROME.—The General Vicariate of Rome has just published an official census of the population of Rome for the year 1855. In all there are 177,461 inhabitants, among whom there are 36 bishops, 1,226 secular priests, 2,213 monks and other religions, 1,949 nuns and 687 seminarists. At Rome, therefore, there are in all 5,031 priests, monks, nuns or seminarists. That is to say one to every thirty-five inhabitants.

THE WORLD'S SHIPPING.—The German Quarterly Magazine has an article on the world's marine, from which it appears that the waters of the earth are navigated by 145,000 vessels, of 12,904,687 tons. The United States have 5,800,000 tons of shipping, Great Britain 5,000,000, Germany, including Austria, 1,000,000, and France only 716,189 tons.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1856.

The American Bible Society and Utah.

FROM the Herald's report of the meeting of the managers of the above society, held on Thursday, the 1st inst., we learn that among other "interesting communications" received, some were "from the Rev. Dr. Plumer and others in regard to sending an agent to Utah." What had been communicated to the managers we know not, but "an agent for Utah and Kansas was appointed."

We took the earliest opportunity of calling at the society's office to learn what was communicable respecting this movement, that we might be able to inform our friends in Utah of the deep interest our Christian neighbors feel for their advancement in biblical literature. We happened to call at an unseasonable moment—several gentlemen were sitting in committee with the secretary, who consequently could only give us a few moments of his time. We were, however, informed by this gentleman that applications for Bibles had been made from residents in Utah, and that some one was appointed to go there and see what facilities there were for the distribution of the Scriptures. We could not learn the name of the appointed, as his acceptance of the mission had probably not as yet been received. On our part we assured the gentleman that we would facilitate, as much as our influence would permit, the circulation of the printed Word in the lovely valleys of the far-off Utah.

That the society may do all the good to the inhabitants of Utah their Christian souls desire, we shall make a few observations which may serve to give them an idea of their new field of labor. Our settlements in Utah are upwards of four hundred miles in extent, embracing a population variously estimated from ninety to one hundred thousand persons. The inhabitants of Utah are from every State in the Union; from England, Scotland, Ireland, Orkney and Shetland Isles, France, Germany, Italy, Sicily, Switzerland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Iceland, Holland, Hungary, Poland, Russia, the East and West Indies, Canada, Cape of Good Hope, the Islands of the Pacific, and we presume we have also friends there from Spain and Portugal: our missionaries have at least preached the Gospel at Gibraltar and Malta, and obtained converts from both places. We need not hunt up more; these will do for a start to the agent. We should not, however, forget the Indian residents in that Territory—they would undoubtedly feel pleased if the agent would call upon them with some historical information in their own language. We would beg to suggest that faithfully translated Bibles be sent, and Bibles that will last some time—not the gingerbread things that are usually exported. It may be very pleasant for a society to have credit in the public papers for sending so many thousand Bibles to this or that nation or people, but it would be far better that they be fewer in number, well bound, and something respectable, than as they generally are. It is a pity to take books a thousand miles across the prairies and mountains in cases and see them blown to pieces the first moment a breath of air strikes a corner. This suggestion is doubly necessary when Utah is the place of their destination. We have heard some sustain the slim-shod Bibles on the ground that appearance was the chief thing wanted, and they did well enough, resting on scented cambric in a delicate fine-fitting kid glove, from the house to the church—besides, their possessors generally are afraid to open them lest their faith should be shaken. Bibles taken to Utah are not likely to be so carefully handled. Our mountaineers never do things by halves or for appearance: if they carry Bibles they mean to use them; they'll read them frequently, and thoroughly, too. We have a Bible that has kept us company many years on our pilgrimage through life; it has dangled in our pocket many a thousand miles, when, for the Gospel's sake, we have visited towns, cities, and hamlets. We have had to patch it together frequently, and in fact our friend has got so covered over with our own notes and references that a white spot is scarcely discernable. We would, therefore, respectfully suggest to the managers of the American Bible Society, if they purpose doing real good to the inhabitants of Utah in the Bible line, do it, gentlemen, respectably, for the inhabitants of that Territory will probably use them as we have ours; besides, they are, as no doubt you have learned, always very busy, and the time they devote to reading could never be consecrated to gathering up stray leaves every time they attempted to consult "Moses and the Prophets."

This Bible distribution is a good move; we like it very much. The greatest good will accrue from it. Our chief difficulty in proselytzing the nations arise from the general disregard or almost total unbelief of the Scriptures being the prevailing spirit of the age. We have done considerable in the missionary line in our time, and we never remember failing to convert a thorough Bible believer that Mormonism was the religion of the prophets and apostles. We have met many who said they believed the Bible, but when we opened the book, and asked, "Do you believe what we have now read?" we have very frequently—almost generally—been answered, "Oh! oh! oh! that is, oh! yes, I was going to observe; yes, yes, that is, I don't think that this passage of Scripture can apply to us now; you know our learned ministers say that there is no need of apostles and inspired men upon the earth, and that baptism for the remission of sins was certainly taught and observed by the former servants of God, and the gift of the Holy Ghost was confirmed by the imposition of their hands—all this we cannot deny; but, of course, to-day these things are not required." Hundreds of such shuffling statements, or long pious drawlings, have fallen on our ears thousands of times. We have generally found that our first work was not to convert the people to Mormonism—Christianity; but to convert them to the Bible. In a word, this generation of Bible believers are so in name only—they believe the book when shut; open it, and then Moses and the Prophets, Jesus and the Apostles, are gentlemen they are little acquainted with. We have heard plenty go a good length with some of the ancients, but the moment Moses, Jeremiah, or Peter said anything contrary to their notion of things or church dogmas, their ranting became beautifully less. Let a principle from an apostle or prophet stand in the way of a rabbi or reverend, and the former are old fogies. We are serious; we are not writing for exercise; we could give names. We remember a conversation we had once with a gentleman on the continent of Europe on the doctrine of baptism for the remission of sins. When we had pushed him to the point, he replied: "Well, I must admit that Peter did say baptism was for the remission of sins, and no doubt he believed it; but then he did not know any better." Of course that was a climax; yet he was a very pious man.

To the Bible Society we therefore say: gentlemen, send your Bibles in the languages and in the manner that we have indicated if you can, and we promise your agent and them a hearty reception in Utah; and we here reiterate, if we can facilitate your measures call upon us. Should you doubt us, send a pile to our office, and we shall soon distribute them for you in New York. Of course we shall expect you to send out a gentleman to distribute. If he knows the Bible well, and is gifted with a reasonable share of good common sense, he'll do—success is certain; he will be in better health and spirits when he returns.

What is the News?

WE do not know of anything very important at the present time, with the exception of a few earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, tornados and whirlwinds, and they are now getting rather scarce; and with some very few exceptions, we are not much favored with murders, infanticides, fires, wars or rumors of wars. Last year we were never at a loss for thrilling events to satisfy the ever-craving desires of a morbid appetite. The European war was a fruitful source of interest and amusement. It is true that there were many severe disappointments when, week after week, we heard the doleful cry of "Sebastopol not taken;" but even this was relieved by the suffering among the troops, reports of British inefficiency interspersed with scrimmages and little forays, wherein a few were killed, which tended to remove the dull monotony and unbearable ennui. Then came the battles of Alma and Inkermann, by way of a bonne bouche: afterwards, the more severe struggles at the Malakoff; and finally, the taking of the Little Redan and the fall of Sebastopol. These were glorious times, and the little ragged newsboys, as they hastened through the streets with the glad tidings, "Sebastopol Taken," knew full well the value of the commodity they carried, and how their readers would gloat over the recital of this fearful struggle. It is true that thousands had bit the dust, and many a brave, noble heart lay weltering in his gore; it is true there were thousands of widows and orphans; it is true that the reports of that struggle brought misery to the hearths of thousands whose stricken hearts mourned the loss of all they held dear; it is true that whilst one party were the conquerors, another were the conquered—but what of that? Was it not interesting to the community and a thrilling spectacle to the world, to witness the defeat of one of the world's gladiators?

That is now over—the Russian ships sunk—many of their fortifications blown up—and they, in their turn, took Kars, after a long struggle. Then came talks of peace—Conferences at Paris, vague rumor, diplomatic intrigue, national jugglery, and, finally, the ominous word peace. The white flag floats—a few words of gratulation—a little exchange of compliment—some few military parades, as the last dying embers of the consuming flame—a few trinkets and ribbons distributed—and the scene closes. The Lion rests his head on his paws, and roars not, except in an under-tone, which is natural to the species—the Bear ceases to growl—l'Aigle, glutted to satisfaction, is only known by the flapping of his wings and his patronizing strut.

Our own affairs here are not much better. It was hoped at one time, that from the fierceness of the struggle in Congress for the Speakership, we should have had some precious rows before now; but they have disappointed every body, and got along in peace—have they caught the European spirit, or are they billing and cooing for the Presidential contest? Kansas affairs have been quite amusing, but there is not much doing even there; Yankeedom has furnished her quota of men and Sharpe's rifles, while the "Sunny South" has sent her fire-eaters, with their "long toms;" but they have only killed one man for a long time, and it's feared he'll recover. Uncle Sam may be to blame in this, in holding the belligerents apart and not letting them show their valor—otherwise this might have been another Sebastopol on a smaller scale. It was hoped that, with the aid of the Mosquito difficulty and the enlistment question, we should have been enabled to get up another row with England, but both of them have flattened out. Even Walker is not doing much; the filibusters have been rather worsted. These Costa Ricans, with British guns, have been doing the mischief; it was hoped that the fillibuster could have done the business unaided; but, as it is found he cannot, indignation meetings must be got up, and help afforded in men and means. We can't get up a row with Britain on account of this gun affair, because we have rejected the Nicaraguan minister, Mr. French, ourselves, and repudiated Walker's pronunciamento and government. We may now, it is true, acknowledge the present minister, Padre Vigile—send out fillibustering companies in opposition to Government—take Central America, and then annex it; and if that won't raise up the lion, try something else—keep trying.

The famine in the Cape de Verde Islands is assuming importance, and the Oregon war with the Indians has been a little relief; but there have been too few killed to make it lively and interesting. There has been nothing very horrible done in Utah lately, and, with the exception of some few squalls about the approaching Presidential contest, all is dull. We may expect, however, some rich disclosures about the characters of the several contestants, unfolding all that they ever did do, thought of doing, or ever dreamed of; and they will all of them be made out the most precious rascals in the United States. This, of course, will be good for some as long as it lasts; but as these statements are not generally believed, even by those who write them, they soon become stale and insipid. All we can say is, when we get any news we will report it.

Up-down: Down-up.

"The changes of life like the tides ebb and flow."—LYON, Utah.

RECENTLY the New York Herald published a letter from M. J. B. Desplace, formerly one of the editors of the Courier de l'Europe in London, on the struggles of M. De Lamartine to keep his head above water. M. Desplace has come to the United States on a mission of "life and death." He represents this distinguished poet, historian, romanceer and politician heavily involved in debt and now without other resources than those procured by his pen. M. De Lamartine's estate being situated in a wine-producing district in France, he has been ruined by the failure of the vine crops during the last five years. Hundreds of families who have lived and labored on his estate have now almost entirely to be sustained by him as the custom of the country requires. To meet his liabilities, the poet is publishing in France a monthly periodical, entitled "A Familiar Course of Universal Literature," which he proposes to complete in two years. His friends believe that an edition of the work in English would meet with a ready sale in this country and relieve him from his difficulties. To obtain subscribers for this work has M. Desplace come here. He has gone the right way to work; senators, representatives, literary gentlemen and the press are with him. We have met with a piece from M. De Lamartine's pen, which will be interesting to those acquainted with his history—particularly contrasting with that period of his life when France looked to him for direction, and when his famous declaration of the march of the Republic made monarchs feel uneasy on their thrones:

"I will now speak with all the unreservedness of intimacy. There are things which a man says but once in his life, but which must be said once; otherwise you could not fully comprehend the all-powerful influences of literature over the public life of the politician and the heart of the individual.

"Away with all timidity of language! In these pages I will open my heart even to its inmost folds. The decorous scruples of timorous writers will not suffer them to lay bare the soul in public, but the heart swelling with bitterness in manlier bosoms will throw off such vain coverings with an unblushing sincerity far more chaste in reality than the mock reserve of conventional modesty. If the Laocoon writhing in marble within the serpent's folds were not naked, who would see his tortures? When the heart breaks, will not the vein burst?

"In spite of deceitful appearances, my life is not an enviable one; I will say more, it is ended; I no longer live, I survive. Of all the different characters which to a certain extent made up my being—the man of feeling, the poet, the orator, the man of action—the man of letters alone remains. Nor is the man of letters happy; my years do not weigh upon me yet, but they must be taken into account, and heavier far than my years I feel the weight of my heart. The former, like the phantoms of Macbeth, stretch their hands over my shoulders and point—not to crowns—but to a grave. Would to God I were stretched in it already!

"Nothing smiles upon me in the past, nor in the future; I am growing old without posterity in my empty home, surrounded by the graves of those I have loved. I cannot cross my threshhold without tripping against one of those stumbling-blocks of our love or our hopes. There they are, like so many bleeding fibres torn from my still living heart and buried before my eyes, while that heart beats in my bosom like a forgotten time-piece in a forsaken home, which continues to strike in solitude hours that no one reckons.

"What life I have left is concentrated in a few loving hearts and a small patrimonial estate. And even those hearts suffer through me, and I am not sure that I shall not be stripped of my inheritance to-morrow and sent, in the words of Dante, to die in a stranger's home. The hearth on which my father stood, and on which I stand to-day, is but a borrowed hearth, whose ashes may be scattered at a moment's notice; it may be sold to the highest bidder to-morrow, and resold again for a whim; so may my mother's bed, and even the very dog that licks my hands in pity when he sees my brow contracted with anguish. I must account to others for all I possess; on the faith of my honor and my labor they have staked the inheritence of their children and the fruits of their own industry. If I ceased to work daily for them, if even I slept my whole nights through, or if an illness (which may God spare me till his appointed time!) were to arrest my pen—the diligent instrument that I am wearing out for them—these honest friends would suffer with me, and would have to seek for their fortune among my ashes. They would recover it all—no doubt—but they would find it beneath my ruins."

While Lamartine had reached the zenith of his glory, Minister for Foreign affairs to the Great French Republic, Kossuth was the bright Star of Hungary. Both have held a high position in their respective nations, and both bade fair to receive the highest honors which men could accord to their fellows. They've been up—they're down. Lamartine is writing to obtain the necessary means of existence for himself and others dependant on him. Kossuth is wandering throughout the "Sea-washed isle," lecturing from the same necessity. Sudden and great have been their reverses—millions of men and money were at their command—now they are all but destitute, and next to quietly passed by.

Strange things have taken place since '48. We remember the London Times in October, 1849, publishing the following from the Paris Correspondent:

A Prefect, of one of the French departments, mentioned to a friend some days since, as a curious instance of the instability of human affairs, that about twelve months ago he received the following telegraphic dispatch:—"Monsieur le Préfet, arrest by all possible means the citizen, Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, should he present himself in your department. (Signed) 'Ledru Rollin.'" A year later, the same Prefect received another dispatch in the following terms:—"Arrest by all possible means the citizen, Ledru Rollin, if he presents himself in your department. (Signed) 'Dufaure, Minister of Louis Napoleon.'"

Ledru Rollin, the subject of the Nephew's solicitude, and at one time Minister of the Interior, is presently in England, eating his humble pie and "nursing his wrath to keep it warm."

Then there is Mazzini scarcely ever heard from, and a host of other great men—for be it said, we have yet to learn one word against their morality. To the foregoing list might be added, Royal wanderers, Louis Philippe's issue, Queen Christiana, and a whole batch of Pedros and Rajahs, but we must for the present let them slumber, and terminate with a change in the other direction.

Of the gentleman who now sports in France the portfolio that M. De Lamartine graced in '48, the following little story is going the rounds of the papers:

ADVENTURES OF M. WALEWSKI.—A Paris letter gives the following curious history which serves to exemplify the strange ups and downs of the lives of public men in France. In 1831, M. de Walewski, up to the neck in the Polish Revolution, was delegated from the Poles to the French nation. He passed by Berlin where he escaped narrowly with his liberty and life; for, had he been seized and given over to the Russian Government, he would have been executed in reality, as he was shortly afterward in effigy. But the Chief of Police in Berlin at that time was M. de Manteuffel; and the archives of more than one Prussian town possess to this day a document in which it is by him recommended to the authorities to arrest, by all possible means, "an adventurer styling himself Walewski, and pretending himself delegated by the Polish to the French nation." This was the last transaction in which were brought into juxtaposition the two men who have now been called upon to discuss the treaty of peace, as Prussian Plenipotentiary and French Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The unsuccessful adventurer at Boulogne and Strasburg, the prisoner of Ham, the captain of artillery in Switzerland, the exile wanderer in England and America, the neglected Louis Napoleon, is the present Emperor of France, Napoleon III., who rules the destinies of one of the most powerful and enlightened nations in Europe. Our little world is most certainly a stage.

An Editor Cowhided by a Fillibuster.

MR. SMITH, editor of the New York Sunday Courier was cowhided in his sanctum on Monday afternoon, by Capt. Wm. Lyster, late of Gen. Walker's forces. The son of Mars had taken offence at some criticism in the last issue of the Courier on his lecture delivered last week in this city on Nicaragua. The remonstrances of the editor brought the compositors of the establishment to "the seat of war," whereupon the captain and his friend Mr. Walters, adopted the Schlessinger step to the street door. One of the typos let fly a mallet at Walters who acknowledged the kindness by firing a pistol—blank cartridge—at him. The captain was taken before Justice Welsh, but the editor not appearing against him he was liberated after an hour and a half's detention.

Cowhiding an editor does not disprove the truth of his statements nor the force of his criticism. The captain should think of reformation some thing nearer home than Nicaragua.

Since the foregoing was in type we have learned that Messrs. Lyster and Walters, have been brought a second time before Justice Welsh, at the Lower Police Court, on charge of assault and battery preferred against them by Mr. Smith. The accused were held to bail each in the sum of $500, to answer the charge. The trial of Lyster and Walters will come off in the Court of Special Sessions to-day (Friday). There will be a large attendance of Nicaraguan and theatrical characters on hand to witness the result of the procedure. Great fun is anticipated.

MONEY AND TIME.—Money and Time are the heaviest burdens of life, and the unhappiest of all mortals are those who have more of either than they know how to use.

Arrival of Saints at Boston.

THE ship Enoch Train, which arrived in the harbor yesterday morning from Liverpool, brought a company of some five hundred and thirty emigrants, all of whom are bound for the Mormon "land of promise," Utah. By invitation of Capt. Albert G. Goodwin, Alien Passenger Emigrant Superintendent, a small party of gentlemen yesterday afternoon paid a visit to the vessel as she lay at quarantine, in the Superintendent's yacht, the "Whisper," to view the arrangements which are made on emigrant ships for the accommodation of their passengers, and to learn what sort of people are filling up that singular community in our western wilds which was founded by Joseph Smith the Mormon Prophet.

Upon arriving alongside, a large number of the emigrants were found to be upon deck, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather. They received the party with hearty cheers, and "Yankee Doodle" was played quite well by several musicians among them. The emigrants are of a very superior class for steerage passengers. They are composed mainly of English people, with parties of Scotch, Welsh and Irish. [A small company from the cantons of Geneva and Zurich, Switzerland, and some from the East Indies and Denmark.—Ed. Mor.] A few are from South Africa—so far have the Mormon missionaries pushed their travels in their zeal to make proselytes. The emigrants were generally very clean and healthy looking; and from the plump cheeks and ruddy looks of many of the males, one would hardly suppose they had undergone sea-sickness and close confinement on board ship for thirty-nine days, the duration of their voyage from Liverpool. The women appeared not to have borne the trip so well as the men, and some of them looked as though they would hardly reach the end of their contemplated journey. Probably a separation from home and kindred is more keenly felt by the sensitive feminine heart. The number of children is quite large, numbers of entire families being on board.

The emigrants' quarters in the between-decks, although of course crowded, were quite neat. The air was somewhat close, but the excellent arrangements for ventilation and the comfort of the passengers had eventually prevented that sickening condition of things which is too often found on board emigrant ships at the end of a voyage. The health of the emigrants on the passage was excellent, only two deaths occurring—one an aged woman and the other a child, both "ailing" when they went on board; there was little sickness, as one of the emigrants told us, except sea-sickness. The men looked cheerful, and seemed well pleased with their future prospects. Many of them are mechanics, and the whole of them are much more intelligent than the ordinary class of emigrants.

These members of the Church of Latter Day Saints are under the charge of four Mormon Elders, who make all needful arrangements for their transportation to Salt Lake Valley. The chief Elder is a young man, apparently about thirty years of age, shrewd and energetic looking. The entire expense of their journey from Liverpool to Iowa city is only £9, or something less than forty five dollars. The Mormons have an agent in nearly all the large cities and in every country in the world, and their proselytes are collected by them at a general rendezvous.

The visitors were well pleased with their visit, and as the party left the ship they were again saluted by the strains of "Yankee Doodle." The young lady Saints were hardly equal to our Yankee girls for good looks, and it was thought at the time that no member of the party had had his tender sensibilities touched while looking upon them; but on regaining the "Whisper," and getting under way, it was discovered that the "gentleman from Worcester" was missing, and his voice was quickly heard, calling to be taken on board. A boat was accordingly dispatched for him. It was hinted that he had been spell-bound by a pair of eyes "deeply, darkly, beautifully blue," set in the gentle countenance of a female Mormon neophyte. This, however, is uncertain, as the gentleman wisely kept his own counsel.

This, we believe, is the first cargo of Mormon emigrants that ever arrived at this port. They landed this morning at eight o'clock, and will start immediately on their long overland journey, by the way of New York and the Erie Railroad. After reaching Iowa City they will perform the remainder of their journey to Salt Lake by means of ox-teams and the like conveyances.

The above report of the arrival of the Enoch Train we clip from the Boston Journal. The company of Saints by this vessel arrived in this city on Saturday morning last by steamer from Boston. They stopped till the following evening, and proceeded on their journey to the frontier by the New York and Erie Railroad. The secretary of the company, Elder McAllister, has handed us a lengthy report of the incidents of the voyage from Liverpool to this port. The Saints had a good passage across the Atlantic, and everything was as agreeable and comfortable as a sea voyage permits. They weighed anchor in the Mersey on Sunday morning, the 23d of March, and arrived at Boston on the morning of the 1st inst. From the report we learn nothing of particular interest to the Saints in general. Our emigration has ever been characterized by order, cleanliness, good understanding and kindness among the Saints, and a willing obedience to those who preside over them. Such has been the case again on board the Enoch Train, so much so, that "the runaway lady" and a portion of her family returned to Liverpool, in obedience to the counsel of Elders Wheelock and Ferguson, even though no law could compel or other circumstance induce them to return.

Sister Maryanne, wife of Elder Thos. Lyon, was delivered of a daughter named Christina Enoch, during the night of the 21st of March before the vessel sailed; on the morning of the 24th, sister Agnes, wife of Samuel Hargraves, was delivered of a son named Enoch Train; the same evening, sister Elizabeth, wife of William Johnston, was delivered of a son named Hamilton. On Monday evening, the 31st of March, sister Esther Devereux, aged 60, wife of John Devereux, died of consumption; she was a native of Dimock, Gloucestershire, Eng.; she came with her family from the Herefordshire Conference; her remains were committed to the deep in lat. 41 deg. 32 min. north, long. 24 deg. 44 min. On the 24th of April, aged 2 years, Jane, daughter of Hugh and Jane Clotworthy, died of consumption of the bowels.

The captain and surgeon appear to have been very kind and attentive to the Saints during the voyage. In general meeting on board, the Saints passed a vote of thanks to the captain, and delegated President Ferguson to be their representative to him, whereupon the following correspondence passed between them:

SHIP ENOCH TRAIN, 95 miles E. of Boston, U. S. April 28th, 1856.

SIR: I have much pleasure in having been selected as the medium through whom to communicate the gratitude of the whole of our company for the multiplied displays of your kind attention to them and solicitude for their health and comfort during our voyage from Liverpool. By a unanimous vote of the company, I am requested to tender you the thanks of their hearts and their prayers most sincere that God may reward you by administering according to the richness of His bounty, health, peace and enduring happiness to you and yours.

Respectfully your sincere friend,
JAMES FERGUSON,
President of the company of Latter Day Saints on board Ship Enoch Train.
Capt. H. S. Rich, Ship Enoch Train.

When the above was presented to the captain, he handed the following copy to President Ferguson, written ten days previous, to be ready when he came in sight of Boston Lights:

To MR. JAMES FERGUSON and Elders on board ship "Enoch Train," from Liverpool for Boston.

GENTLEMEN: Boston lights are now in view and soon we must part—may we hope not for ever; but previous, allow us to tender to you our thanks for the spirit of kindness manifested by you all during the present voyage, tending to the health and comfort of our passengers under your charge. If such rules and regulations could be followed by all emigrating ships, we should hear less, far less, of sickness and distress at sea. Cleanliness is a part of your religion, and nobly you have carried it out. May your trip across our States be one of pleasure, and when these are passed, and you encamp upon our western prairies, may your thoughts wander back with pleasure to your ocean voyage. Gentlemen, farewell! May health, peace and prosperity go with you; and when your pilgrimage is accomplished on earth, may a bright immortality be yours—that world which is to come.

Most respectfully.
HENRY S RICH, Master of Enoch Train.
CHAS. B. JONES, Surgeon of ditto.

The Saints were almost all well and in good spirits passing through here. Sister Granger, from Scotland, was very poorly; her husband was unremitting in his attention to her, and, with the kind assistance of sister Hardie, from Edinburgh, was doing everything to assuage her sufferings. We take pleasure in noticing the favorable mention in the report of sister Hardie's services to her sisters during the voyage; we ever feel pleased to record the kindness and attention of the Saints to each other in a trying hour. Elder Nathan T. Porter has been left with us for a little, as we considered his health would be considerably endangered by continuing his journey at the present time. Those who have ministered to him during his voyage, and those now watching over him, have our blessings, for he is a good and worthy man, beloved of all the Saints who know him. Elder Thos. Lyon has likewise tarried here on account of the indisposition of his partner. With these exceptions, the Saints were looking well and rejoicing in prosecuting their journey Zionward. We were much pleased to see so many of our old acquaintances from the old world, and the Elders from Utah returning with joy. Among the leading men in this company we saw Elders James Ferguson, Edmund Ellsworth, Daniel D. McArthur, John D. J. McAllister, Spicer W. Crandall, Truman Leonard and John A. Hunt, who have been on missions and are now returning home. There were likewise several English and Scotch Elders, Presidents of Conferences, in the company.

The Famine in the Cape de Verdes.

ABOUT a dozen Portuguese residents of this city, met on Tuesday afternoon at the office of the Portuguese Consul for the purpose of devising some means of relieving the natives of the Cape de Verde Islands, from the horrors of the famine that has already laid in the dust tens of thousands in these small islands. The Consul Mr. Figaurere, presided over the small meeting and explained the object for which they were convened. The Vice-Consuls in other States are to be appointed to obtain subscriptions, and a committee of five gentlemen appointed in this city for the purpose of receiving relief for the sufferers. The sum of two thousand one hundred and eighty-five dollars was immediately subscribed.

A preliminary meeting for the same object was held the same evening in the Astor House. Mr. Hackett at whose call this meeting was held, subscribed one hundred dollars and offered his professional services for one night to any theatrical manager who would give one evening's benefit to the sufferers. A public meeting was determined on but it was deemed prudent to await the course of the Chamber of Commerce which had signified its intention to hold a meeting as soon as it received an account of the sufferings at the Cape de Verds from official authority.

The New York Herald of Wednesday says:—"We have letters from Porto Praya and Porto Grande, Cape de Verds, to the 28th of March. One of our correspondents states that the inhabitants of the islands had died by thousands of starvation during the winter, and that it was estimated that at least twenty thousand will perish by August next, unless relief be forwarded to them.

"It will probably be in the recollection of our readers that on the arrival of the Atlantic at the end of November last, we published the correspondence of Mr. Martens, Vice-Consul of the United States at Porto Grande, with Commodore Crabbe, Commander-in-Chief of the African squadron, communicating to him the dreadful state of destitution to which the inhabitants of San Antonio had been reduced by the failure of their crop, and appealing to him for aid. To these documents were appended memoranda drawn up from personal observation by Lieut. Bartlett, one of the passengers by the Atlantic, and to whom we were indebted for the information. From the details, furnished by the latter it appeared that the crop of 1855 had proved a total failure on that island, owing to the drought; and the proceeding crop having been only half an average, there were at the time Lieut. Bartlett visited it at least 30,000 of the inhabitants living on the banana stalk and the carcases of dead animals that had died or were dying of starvation. There were not of any kind provisions for one-sixth of the probable demand before the crop of 1856 could be got in, which would not be until December, 1856. But even supposing that the supply were larger, the people were so poor that they could not buy more than one-sixth of what they required. The consequence was that the inhabitants of the island were daily perishing in numbers from starvation. The Island of St. Nicholas, from which aid was expected, did not produce one-third of its usual crop, and it was anticipated that this deficiency would add at least 10,000 persons more to the aggregate of the sufferers. All the cattle had died on St. Vincent, as well as on the small islands, and it was expected that they would soon be extinct on the northern portion of the group. No aid could be hoped for from the southern islands, as they had barely sufficient for themselves."

LOVE.—Friendship often ends in love; but love in friendship—never.

Indian War—Oregon and Washington Territories.

GENERAL WOOL writes a long letter from Benicia, Cal., April 2d, to the editors of the National Intelligencer on the Indian war now raging in the Territories of Oregon and Washington. The General's letter is intended as a vindication of his military course and a condemnation of Governors Curry and Stevens. If the General's letter be historically true, "the powers that be" have made a fearful and wanton sacrifice of Indian life. The Governors will probably answer the General.

Red skin blood will have to be accounted for as well as that of pale skin. He tells what he had endeavored to do for the protection of the Territories, and charged the Governors with meddling unnecessarily. He says:—

Gov. Curry, however, had brought two regiments of mounted men in the field at an enormous expense. Nothing had yet been accomplished by them, and certainly not by the regiment intenced to operate against the Indians in Washington Territory. Something had to be done. A fight with the Indians, no matter whether friends or enemies, was indispensable to excite the sympathy of the nation, and especially Congress, or the propriety of paying contributions, so profusely levied on the people of Oregon, might be questioned. Accordingly Col. Nesmith was ordered by Gov. Curry with his command to march against the Walla-Wallas, where Major Chinn, with four companies, had been previously ordered. On an inspection of the horses of the Colonel's command, although but twenty days in the field, they were pronounced unfit for that service. Several companies, however, were prepared, and, under the command of Lieut. Col. Kelly, a member of the Legislature of Oregon, joined Major Chinn, who, instead of going to Fort Walla-Walla, where he was ordered by Gov. Carry, took post on the Umatilla thirty miles distant, because as he reported, there were one thousand Indians in and about the fort. Although in this position, for several weeks, and frequently sending scouts within a mile or two of the Indians, he was neither molested or interfered with. Lieut. Col. Kelly, on joining Major Chinn, moved against Fort Walla-Walla, but found no Indians there. He then moved up the river Touchet, where he was met by the chief, Pin-Pin-mox-mox, with a flag of truce. He said he "was for peace; that he did not wish to fight, that his people did not wish to fight, and that if any of his young men had done wrong he was prepared to make restitution." If he could not return the goods wrongfully taken, he would pay for them, being abundantly able to do so. When the volunteers said they were in want of provisions, he offered them cattle. He was rich in money and cattle. The volunteers replied he had better go back and fight. He refused, and with his companions, four (Lieut. Kelly says six) in number, was taken prisoner, and sent guarded to the volunteer camp. The volunteers then commenced the attack upon his people, which was continued for four days, without any great loss on either side, when the Walla-Wallas, having secured their women and children, crossed Snake river. The second or third day of the engagement the volunteers barbarously killed Pin-Pin-mox-mox and his companions. They took from the chief's head some twenty scalps, cut off his ears and hands, and sent them as trophies to their friends in Oregon.

A the volunteers, having no boats, could not cross Snake river, the retreat of the Indians closed their winter campaign except to plunder the friendly Cayuses of their horses and cattle. [See my letter dated the 12th February, 1856, to Gov. I. J. Stevens.]

Owing to the severity of the winter, except those captured by the Indians, most of the volunteers, horses died from fatigue and the want of forage or grass. Major Chinn said that about 225 of their best horses were captured by the Indians. It is reported that Gov. Curry has in part replaced them with a fresh relay. In February thirteen wagons loaded with supplies, including ammunition, for the volunteers, guarded by only four men, were captured by the Indians betwaen the Umatilla and Fort Walla-Walla.

Such have been the results of one of the most unwise, unnecessary, and extravagant expeditions ever fitted out in the United States, and for no other reason than to plunder the treasury of the United States and to make political capital for somebody. It could not have been projected for the defence of the Inhabitants of Oregen, nor for the protection of Oregonians in Washington Territory, for none resided there. What, then, could cave been the object? Nothing but a crusade against the Indians, and a long war to enrich the country. If such was not the object, Gov. Curry, instead of sending his troops against the Indians in Washington Territory, and beyond his jurisdiction, would have sent all of them to Southern Oregon, where the war raged, and nowhere else in his Territory. The Oregonians say that the war "is a god-send to the country."

It would, however, appear from the Governor's proclamation that he did send a regiment to Southern Oregon; but, from all the information I have received from that section of country, they have been of little or no service, so far as giving protection to the Inhabitants; and yet the war has been carried on between the volunteers and the Indians in a most signally barbarous and savage manner. My information is derived from citizens and regular officers under my command, and not from any of the civil or military functionaries of the Territory of Oregon. I have never been informed by any one, not even by the Governor, of the military wants of the Territory. But has never called on me for troops to defend it or to protect the inhabitants from savage barbarity, although he has, as it would appear, purposely avoided all communication with me on the subject. I have not been unmindful of the condition and wants of the Territory. I have not failed, as far as it was in my power, to defend and protect such parts as were exposed and assailed by the Indians, and I have no doubt but for the indiscriminate warfare carried on against them, and the massacres of several parties of friendly Indians by the troops of Gov. Curry, the war would have long since been brought to a close in Oregon. Although the Indians are retaliating with fearful vengeance on innocent citizens for the murder in October last, by Major Lupton and his party of twenty-five friendly Indians, eighteen of whom were women and children, all going to the military reservation at Fort Lane for protection; and notwithstanding the massacres on the 23d and 24th December last, when volunteers murdered about forty unarmed friendly Indians, belonging to the band of the chief Jake, who was among the killed. I think, if the volunteers, who expect to be paid largely for their services, were withdrawn, and private war prevented, I could soon end the war in Rogue River Valley, and indeed throughout Oregon and Washington; but the determination of the Oregonians to exterminate the Indians, which I am wholly opposed to, if not discountenanced by the United States government, may prolong the war almost indefinitely.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

By the arrival of the North America at Quebec, we learn that the armies of the late belligerent powers are being placed on a peace footing, and friendly relationship manifests itself everywhere. In the Crimea there was a grand review of the entire French army on the 17th ult. The epidemic had ceased in the Crimea. A grand naval review, at which her Britannic Majesty would be present, was to take place on the 23d ult. at Spithead; there were to be 240 steamers of various sizes, carrying 3000 guns, propelled by 30,761 horse power, and manned by 30,000 seamen. The Russian militia has been disbanded. The Admiralty has ordered all the lighthouses to be lit, and all the buoys to be laid down in the Gulfs of Bothnia and Finland, as also in the Baltic and White Seas. Grand exhibitions of fireworks are in contemplation in London, for which purpose the Chancellor of the Exchequer had signified his consent as to the expense, provided it came within the sum of eight thousand pounds. Gen. Williams, the gallant defender of Kars, is said to be recovering from his illness, and was on his way, prisoner of war, to Moscow. Accounts from the East state that the insurgents against the Porte in Arabia had suffered so much from cholera as nearly to put down the insurrection, 18,000 insurgents having died of the disease.

THE MORMON.

Religious Gatherings.

The month of May, upon which we have just entered, is known over the wide world as the month particularly devoted to religious interest. "The May meetings" are looked forward to with great interest by our Christian neighbors. They have commenced here; the churches and halls of the Empire city, the commercial metropolis of the United States, are unusually filled with the sanctified. Exeter Hall, and the churches in the English capital are, we may safely calculate, filled with similar assemblages. What may be done for the amelioration of the condition of the children of men by the present holy gatherings; time will show; but the past does not speak flatteringly of them. Some big little men generally find opportunities of displaying their elocution and erudition to the bewilderment of the general hearers, and to the chagrin of their lesser privileged and lesser gifted brethren. When they've told how lowly Jesus was ushered into the world, how wisely he questioned the learned doctors at Jerusalem, how humbly he washed the feet of his disciples, how he was full of love and goodness, an example to all men, they descend from the pulpit to the committee rooms, and then begin the bickerings. There is, no doubt, a great many folks, speakers and hearers, at these gatherings worthy of their profession, but we allude to scenes that too often have characterized May meetings. A German traveler, in describing his tour through Scotland, speaking of Glasgow says: "In the morning the streets are filled with people going to Church, parading their Bibles and Psalm books as they strut along; a stranger would think it was a city of Saints. In the evening, when the sun had withdrawn the light of his countenance, these same streets are filled with prostitutes, pickpockets and drunkards; the same stranger would think the city transformed to a Pandemonium." Our historical illustration of course must be very carefully applied.

Some of the New York papers announced two months since that there was to be at the same time of the religious "anniversaries" in our city a "World's Anti-Bible Convention." Why the convention has not been held we know not, and indeed had forgot it, till our memory was refreshed this morning by the Virginia Telescope, who comes out rough-shod against the leader, Mr. Joseph Barker, whom he styles an apostate. The Telescope says some hard things hurriedly of "the daring infidel," as he calls Mr. B. The Council Bluffs Bugle informs the world that Mr. Barker is up in that quarter "delivering lectures to crowded houses." The Bugle recommends orthodox ministers to have a discussion—that is better than bad language. We are something acquainted with Mr. Barker's writings, lectures, discussions, and life, and feel pleased that Mormonism is not sectarianism. Mr. B. has taken a heartless mission: to destroy faith without a better substitute is a poor business.

Nicaragua.

General Walker has written a long letter to Senator J. B. Weller, thanking him for his manliness in defending the character of the Nicaraguan warrior, when his course towards the Transit Company was the subject of conversation in the Senate. Walker speaks very moderately of himself—duty is his only motive for wielding the sword and putting things on another footing in Central America. There are rumors at Washington that Gen. Pierce's government is about to recognise the present Nicaraguan government, and to receive as her Minister at Washington, Padre Vigilly, who arrived there with his Secretary on Monday.

According to public invitation, the Hon. Pierre Soulé, of New Orleans, was to have met with a number of fellow-citizens in the St. Louis Hotel of that city, on the 28th ult., "in order to lay before them his views on Central American affairs." The New Orleans papers of the 29th, report that what was intended to be an "informal meeting" of somewhere about seventy or a hundred patriots and friends of Gen. Walker turned out "a very large and enthusiastic crowd.

Mr. Soulé is reported to have spoken very eloquently in favor of Walker's movement, and the certainty of our government acknowledging the present government of Nicaragua at no distant day. He urged dollar help, pluck and men were on hand, but without the almighty dollar it might be a prolonged struggle. After his address "subscriptions in aid of the cause of Nicaraguan freedom were opened," and a good amount put down. Col. Parker H. French, the rejected Nicaraguan Minister at Washington, spoke very flatteringly of Gen. Walker, and thanked the New Orleanists for their sympathy and assistance for the Republic he represented. Before the meeting adjourned several gentlemen were appointed a Committees to receive subscriptions to make the needful explanations.

A meeting of the friends of General Walker and of those who sympathize with his cause in New York was also held on Tuesday evening, in the St. Charles Saloon, Broadway.

At about eight o'clock P. M. over fifty gentlemen had assembled.

Alderman Clancy, of the Sixth ward, took the chair, and Alexander Robinson, Esq., acted as Secretary.

After a few brief but enthusiastic remarks on the subject alluded to in the placard that had called them together, a resolution was passed to the effect that a mass meeting of Central American sympathizers be held this (Friday) evening in National Hall, Canal street, at eight o'clock.

A committee of arrangements were appointed, in order to carry out the object of the resolution, and the meeting adjourned.

Kansas.

In our last week's issue, under the heading Telegraphic, it was reported that Sheriff Jones, of Kansas Territory, had been shot while guarding prisoners under arrest. Sheriff Jones is said to be convalescent. The citizens of Lawrence held a large meeting the following evening, to express their condemnation of such an atrocious crime. The Free Soilers are reported to have said at the meeting, that the attempt upon the life of the Sheriff was made by a pro-slavery man for the purpose of charging it upon the anti-slavery party thereby raising an influence against them and their cause. Poor Kansas!

The Tribune says:—"It was undoubtedly the act of some individual for some personal consideration, as Jones has many personal enemies. It is feared that retaliatory measures will be taken against individuals, and that assassinations will follow, on both sides perhaps, as the result of this act, and possibly a general war will again be excited in our midst. The Governor has offered a reward of $500 for the apprehension of the would-be murderer."

Utah.

At the moment of going to press we have received some straggling numbers of The Deseret News. As our eyes caught a glimpse of No. 52, we felt and said, "Welcome—a treat this morning." All that we felt and expected but our first feeling was soon changed to—what? We very nigh said—but we'll call it mildly—disappointment. No. 52 alluded to a subject in No. 50; we were interested, and hastened to undo other numbers, and what did we find? Nos. 39, 40, 43, 44, 45, 52!!! Now, that is really too bad. Were it the first time we had been thus served we could have passed it over, but the fact is, our full file scarcely ever arrives. Who is the transgressor? The Deseret News office? No—confusion does not reign there. Who then? Aye, that is the question we should like answered. All we can say is, our spirit groaneth, "Oh, ye post office employees, when will ye be honest?" There are many honest, honorable men in that branch of the country's service; men above mean, paltry pilfering; to such we say, Gentlemen, purge yourselves of the other kind about you for such offences, and your occupation will be as honorable and respected as your services, when well done, are highly appreciated.

Our office is The Mormon office; our exchanges have, of course, that now interesting name on the wrapper, and that accounts for our file being plundered, white private gentlemen receive theirs untouched. To the politeness of Elder Angus M. Cannon are we indebted for the use of his full file, from which we make the following extracts:

MASS MEETING.

Pursuant to adjournment on the 26th of January, a large assembly convened in the Tabernacle on Saturday, the 2d inst; Gov. Young, President of the meeting, took the chair. Prayer by Pres. J. M. Grant. Ballo's Band played the "Star Spangled Banner," and several other enlivening tunes. Hon. E. Reese delivered the opening speech, and was followed by Pres. J. M. Grant, Chief Justice Kinney, Capt. L. W. Hardy, O. P. Rockwell, Esq., and His Excellency the Governor, who, at the close of his remarks, individually proffered to take stock and furnish 300 miles of the route. One thousand miles were subscribed for, and the large number present unanimously voted to sustain the chartered company in carrying a daily express from the Missouri river to California, and in extending the line as fast and as far as circumstances may permit. Adjourned without date.

EDUCATIONAL MEETING.

The Chancellor and Regents of the University of the State of Deseret held a meeting on the 4th inst., at which his Excellency the Governor, Presidents Kimball and Grant, Bishop L. D. Young, and Elders F. Kesler and R. L. Campbell, were present. The time was mostly occupied in the discussion of preparing copy for the publication of elementary schoolbooks in the Deseret alphabet, and Elders W. Woodruff and S. W. Richards, Regents, and Elder George D. Watt, Secretary of the Board, were appointed a committee to prepare and arrange the matter for said publications, and to report progress at each successive meeting, that they may have the advantage of the information, judgment and experience of those who feel interested in the subject of education. The meeting adjourned to meet at early candle-light on Monday, Feb. 11, in the room over the President's office.

FESTIVITIES.

The party given by the Governor and Legislative Assembly came off in the Social Hall on Tuesday, the 29th ult. His Excellency Gov. Young, Hon. H. C. Kimball, President of the Council, Hon. J. M. Grant, Speaker of the House, Hon. A. W. Babbitt, Secretary, Judges J. F. Kinney and G. P. Stiles, Dr. G. Hurt, Indian Agent; Messrs. Bell, Livingston, Williams, Gerrish and Hooper, and a large number of other prominent citizens and a bevy of Utah's fair wives and daughters were present. The hall and dining-room were tastefully and beautifully ornamented for the occasion; the supper and arrangements were excellent, and all cordially participated in the frank and free enjoyment of the occasion.

On the 31st ult. the Dramatic Association gave a dance and supper in the Social Hall, to as many of their friends as the room could accommodate. The decorations were the same as on the evening of the 29th, and not being crowded, the guests had ample range and free scope for rendering themselves mutually agreeable, which all appeared to do with great zest, and with that pure and unalloyed hilarity known only to the Saints.

PARTIES.

That of the 'Mormon' Battalion came off on the 6th inst., the Second Annual Festival of the Typographical Association on the 8th, and the Life Guards gave a party on the 11th.

On each occasion the Social Hall was well filled by those who endeavor to wisely appreciate the various blessings profusely strown in their path, and to properly distinguish "times and seasons," giving to rest and recreation, as well as to labor and the sterner duties, that share of time and attention adapted to fully subserve the best use and development of each individual.

The Theatre will open in the Social Hall, on Wednesday the 13th instant, with "Luke the Laborer," and, "His Last Legs."

Luke.....W. H. Wilson.
Song, "Nelly Gray,".....W. Willes.
O'Caligan.....Patrick Lynch.

The Dramatic Association will continue their performances on each succeeding Wednesday and Saturday evenings, until further notice. They have several new plays, farces, &c., in readiness for the entertainment, amusement and instruction of the public.

DISTURBANCE WITH INDIANS.

For some time past a few Indians in Utah and Cedar Valleys have been disposed to be mischievous, stealing cattle and horses when opportunity offered, threatening to kill cattle when they pleased, and resisting a legal examination into their conduct. Matters were in this condition until recently, when, from all now known (10 A. M. of Feb. 26th) some Indians killed two herdsmen on the west side of Utah Lake on the 21st, or early on the 22d inst., and another herdsman is missing.

On the 22d, a posse of ten men, with writs from the first and second U. S. District Courts, called at an Indian camp near the south fort in Cedar county, to arrest the Indians named in those writs. Soon as the attempt was made to execute the writs, the Indians showed fight and fired upon the officers, and in the melee one Indian and one squaw were killed, the latter accidentally, and Bro. George Carson was mortally wounded, and died about 2 A. M. of the 23d.

Since writing the above we have learned that the two herdsmen killed were Henry Moran and Washington Carson, and Lewis Hunsaker is the one missing.

From all yet known (3 P. M. of March 1) it is probable that Hunsaker was taken prisoner.

On the 26th of February, just before dark, and not far from Kimball's creek, west of Utah Lake, some Indians surprised a camp of men who were out gathering stock, killed John Catlin and —— Cousins, mortally wounded John Winn, who has since died, and drove off 15 horses and mules belonging to the party.

Tintick, head chief of the disaffected band, and who was wounded in the skirmish near the south fort in Cedar county, is reported dead.

The noted Washear, or Squash, who was arrested on a writ from the U. S. District Court, while momentarily from under the eye of his keepers, so effectually cut his throat, with a case knife furnished him to eat with, that he soon died.

He had been frequently heard to say that he would not go to G. L. S. City to be hung up like a dog, alluding to the fate of the two who were hung during the administration of the Hon. Leonidas Shaver, late U. S. Associate Justice.

When informed of the event, the Indians in that neighborhood remarked that he had killed himself to avoid being hung, a mode of death very repugnant to his feelings.

Gen. Peter W. Conover was to start on the 1st inst., from the rendezvous on the west side of Utah Lake, with some 200 men. They go out to recover Bro. Hunsaker, if still alive, and the horses and cattle driven off by the Indians.

MISSIONARIES.

The names of a very large number of Elders, appointed to missions, were read from the stand in the Tabernacle in G. S. L. City, Sunday, Feb. 24, 1856. The greater portion of the Elders named have missions assigned them to Green River, the North, and Los Vegas, within the Territory and California. DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

The Military Commission sent by this government to visit Sebastopol, have lately returned to Washington. Passing through Paris they called on the Minister of War for permission to visit and examine the fortifications around Paris. They were refused permission, and treated rather uncourteously, as the relations between this country and France were not so very sweet and easy. Of course there must be some pen and ink used over this matter.

General Harney has not got all the Indians square yet. As scapegoats from society have been known to foster enmity in the Indians against emigrants, he has ordered all white persons in the section of country around Fort Pierre to quit their relations with the Indians, unless they show that they are in the service of the government, or any fur company. The Ogallahs and Bruley bands of Sioux were not expected to be present at the Grand Council that the General intended holding last week.

At midnight, on Sunday, two men were run over and instantly killed by the milk train of the New York and Erie Railroad, about four miles from the Jersey City ferry. They were badly cut to pieces.

The Washington Common Council have passed a resolution tendering a public reception to Mr. Buchanan.

FOR THE MORMON.

Self-Government and Self-Knowledge.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

In the majestic stillness of the night, when Luna with maiden-like modesty has appeared from behind her bridal retreat, and is clothing everything with her gentle, soul-melting, silver light; when the stars, like glittering chariots are rolling through the immensity of space; when all nature is enjoying its nocturnal rest, and only Zephyr's gentle whisperings like the sighs of the Aeolian harp are heard; when man after having passed through the various scenes of busy day life, has thrown off all his harrassing cares and sorrows, and his mind is quiet and settled, then he may be qualified to engage in sweet meditation, and reflect on his own littleness.

Nothing is so interesting to the inquiring psychologist as the study of the mind; though great men have tried to fathom its depth, they have often like the mariner on the sea got no soundings; it takes an Ariadne to find a path through the labyrinth of human feelings. The mind may be compared to a vast ocean; it is calm and serene and deep emotions seem to be hushed up in slumber, when the wind is fair and everything goes right; but the least change of the moral atmosphere disturbs the mental harmony, and like the mighty waves on the tempestuous ocean, a storm of feelings arises, that nothing but self-government can subdue.

The mind, being the acting part of the soul, is more or less liable to receive and make impressions, to create feelings, to reveal the inward winds of passion; these psychological phenomena take place in proportion to the greater or smaller development of the nervous or ganglion system, and arise from the intimate connection that exists between the body and the soul; every little disturbance in the neurological equilibrium, is felt by the spirit. For example, strike a person; as soon as he feels the blow, his flesh seems to creep, and the idea of taking revenge will directly enter his mind, so you see the shock felt by the blow was not only a physical, but also a moral or mental one; enter a room impregnated with the most exquisite perfumes, Oriental luxury can command, the sensation you experience is not confined to the olfactory nerves, but is through those channels conveyed to the mind—conjuring up images of the highest rosy hue. From the above illustrations the reader will understand to a certain extent, why a physical shock is at the same time a moral one.

Self-government is one of the most important principles of ethics; man ought to know how to control his feelings and affections, as he is very often placed in circumstances, in which he has to show his mental independence, and demonstrate that his mind is steeled against every pernicious influence, that faith in God, reason and common sense are his only beacon-lights in the pathway of life, and then he will be the master and not the slave. He, who cannot control his feelings and passions, is a slave of the same, and will never realize that mental happiness which God has assigned to man; he will always feel like a prisoner, or a man in bondage, and be ignorant of the freedom of the mind.

There are moments, when man is more than ever provoked by adversity, and a variety of irritating causes are operating upon the mind; when the breast is most active; when feelings of hatred and revenge rise like fiendish spirits struggling with him, trying to overpower his faith and reason, and using with satanicly cunning craftiness all their eloquence and sophistry, to make him believe, that he is the oppressed, crushed victim of a stern Providence, that there is no hope, but destruction; the poor man in the fangs of those persuading, perfidious spirits, is lost, without self-government. Again there are moments, when gentle feelings seem to smile upon him; when everything appears arrayed in purity and innocence; when peace and affection seem to invite him to partake of the golden fruits of mortal bliss; when the whole world puts on the beautiful garment of personified happiness and the Future is clothed with the sunshine of eternal felicity; but alas, those lovely phantoms flee at his approach like an ignis-fatuus, or vanish like shadows in the mist of sad reality; thus tantalizing him, and causing an ocean of feelings to agitate his breast, till he sinks exhausted and despairing in the arms of death, if he has not a sufficient energy of mind to ward off those tempting visions.

Self-government is like a breast-plate that the warrior puts on previous to his meeting an enemy face to face; it is the talisman, that enables man to brave and face the temptations of a corrupt world, without getting polluted; it is the shield against the invectives of wild passion; it is a bulwark against destruction. How many, that could not control themselves, had to atone for their rash, inconsiderate deeds with their blood, yea, with their lives, and thus ruined themselves and their connections; how many have blasted the hopes of their aged parents, who clung to them for support, through the want of self-government.

History, that moral mirror of the Past, has recorded the names of such men as Constantine, Nero, Domitian, Danton, Robespierre, Carrier, who trampled under their feet every feeling of humanity and rectitude, in order to gratify their indomitable, fiendish lusts and passions. Time may stride over centuries, and bring about great changes, but the horrible actions of those monsters of bygone times, will never be obliterated; succeeding generations curse their memory, and instigate the awful choir of the Eumenides to inflict all the punishments of the gloomy Tartarus upon them.

Well then, let us try to govern ourselves; it is true the execution of the principle of self-government is at the beginning exceedingly difficult, but with a firm determination, with a sufficient energy of mind, we will learn not to pay the least attention to those that would fain wound our feelings, and thus mar our happiness; no matter what stigma or odium slanderers and backbiters may endeavor to throw upon our names, and thus try to undermine our reputation, our feelings will remain unruffled.

Intimately connected with self-government is self-knowledge, before we realize the importance of the former, we have to understand the latter, viz., to know ourselves. The musician, who desires to perform on the violin, must be familiar with the nature of the chords and strings, with the harmony of notes, in fact he must have a key into the realm of music, and then he will know what chords to strike, how to keep time, and thus the performance will be in strict accordance with the laws of harmony; and so in relation to the human heart, we have to understand its nature, in order to know what chords to strike, that we may not produce a moral pain, but produce sensations of joy and happiness. The anthropologist will peep into his very heart, and read the entire feelings, emotions, and passions, as they are caused by certain events and circumstances; he will analyse every fibre and filament of the mind, and watch with the utmost attention every movement of his heart; the experienced man will do the same concerning other persons, while conversing with them, and without their knowing it, he will try to dive, as it were, into their very soul; he will endeavor to find out whether their ideas and reflections are the correct interpreters of their feelings, and by combining, and comparing one with another, he will form an opinion concerning their moral status quo. To make this metaphysical question plainer to the reader, I will give the following illustration: there is a man, whose character and the secret strivings of his heart I want to know, in order to accomplish that, I tell him, "Show me what thou truly lovest—what thou seekest and strivest for with thy whole heart, when thou hopest to attain to true enjoyment—and thou hast thereby shown me thy Life. What thou lovest, in that thou livest. It is by the divine and eternal power of Love, that thou surmountest all difficulties with the greatest ease. This very love is thy life—the root, the seat, the central point of thy being. All other emotions within thee have life only in so far, as they are governed by this one central emotion."

From the above the reader will see that self-government is to be preceded by self-knowledge; man must first understand his own nature, before he knows what course to pursue, what feelings and passions he has most to struggle with.

May the reader feel his heart thrill with aspirations, to satisfy the movements of reason and common sense, under the immediate guidance of the Divine Spirit; may he always yield strict obedience to any call made by that unseen agency. No matter in what beautiful forms temptations may assail him; may he always consider first, what is more reasonable and suitable to his noble position as Saint of the Most High, to have his time consumed in frivolous or debasing occupations; to squander away his earnings in intoxicating and injurious stimulants, or to show an exemplary temperance in all things, a characteristic frugality, and untiring perseverance. No matter what difficulties and obstacles may beset him, always remember that the watchword of Mormonism is that of Julius Cæsar, "Veni—Vidi—Vici." "I came—I saw—I conquered!" Yes, let the tempest roar, the waves run high on the ocean of life; let the lightning flash, the thunder roll, and all hell be combined against him, with the herculian power of self-government and energy of mind, he will overcome dangers, remove obstacles, prostrate every barrier, traverse mountains, ravines, labyrinths, he will go from victory to victory, until by his conquests he has attained the acme of human attainment and perfection, then unfurl and wave the banner of triumph, and cry to the benighted nations of the earth, "Do ye likewise," that the world may know, that no institution affords such facilities for intellectual, social and physical progress as Mormonism, the Sun of improvement and exaltation.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, May 1, 1856.

Mr. Weller submitted a resolution calling on the President for any correspondence with our Minister to Nicaragua (not heretofore communicated) regarding the recognition of the new Nicaraguan Government. Mr. W. took occasion to state that he entirely disagreed with the policy of the Executive towards Nicaragua, and represented Walker as "a man of the purest motives." The Senator read a letter from the General respecting the supply of fire-arms to Costa Rica by Great Britain.

Mr. Seward remarked, that several weeks ago, on his motion, a resolution was adopted, calling on the President for information on this subject, but as there had been no response, the President probably had good reasons, in view of the complicated state of affairs, for delaying to answer the resolution.

Mr. Weller replied that he was not aware of that fact, else he would not have offered this now.

Mr. Seward thought it was better to let the subject rest a day or two, as information concerning it was daily being received, and it was important that the President should be left free to exercise his discretion in this delicate matter.

Mr. Douglas believed that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was being violated every day by Great Britain, and thought something ought to be done about it. He regarded the present Government of Nicaragua legitimate—as much so as the other existing Governments of Central America.

Mr. Butler thought we ought to be careful not to involve ourselves in a war with any nation through the acts of intermeddling adventurers.

Mr. Weller withdrew the resolution. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed the Indian Appropriation Bill and the bill reviving the act of 1853 relative to suspended entries of public lands, and the act of 1846 concerning suspended preemption land claims.

Several motions of little consequence were made, but not sustained. Adjourned.

SENATE. May 2.

Mr. Benjamin made a speech on Kansas affairs.

Mr. Cass sustained Mr. Benjamin's speech.

Mr. Seward replied to observations of a personal character. He thought it undignified thus to elevate party, and give it a place in the history of the Senate. He had not risen to assign the objects or purposes of his public action. They explain themselves; if they do not, he was willing to rest under all the reproach which posterity might cast on him.

Mr. Hale, alluding to what, he said, were grossly personal attacks on him in Mr. Clay's recent speech, remarked that he had but one word to submit in reply: that it will take something besides malignity to redeem imbecility from contempt.

Mr. Clay—(Springing to his feet, greatly excited)—I defy the Senator's malice as much as I contemn his baseness. No man shall assail my rights or those of my constituents and shirk his responsibility by skulking behind the plea of non-combatancy. If he were animated by those heroic feelings which he professes he would not come upon this floor and under the protection of its rules, seek immunity for his insolence. I know he is pleased by this attention. There are those of his class who, like the London attorney, Mark Meddle, in the play, are ambitious of a kick. [Sensation.] Mr. Clay concluded by remarking that he had nothing more to say to that Senator, having twice declined his acquaintance; and he asked pardon of the Senate for consuming so much time about a Senator who soils the carpet upon which he treads.

Mr. Hale replied that he had never sought an introduction to Mr. Clay but once, and that was on professional business for the benefit of a citizen of Alabama.

Mr. Clay rejoined that he did not think his reputation for veracity would suffer by comparison with one who had repeatedly eaten his own words.

Mr. Hale replied that if he did eat his own words he would have a more palatable meal than the Senator from Alabama if he should undertake to eat his. [Laughter.] Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Ritchie presented the memorial of Judge Irvin of Pennsylvania, in response to the charges of the Pittsburgh Bar against his official conduct, and asking a full investigation. Referred to the Judiciary Committe.

Private bills were then taken up and considered, and thirteen of them passed. Adjourned till Monday.

SENATE. May 5.

Mr. Pugh of Ohio presented resolutions of the Legislature of Ohio in favor of the admission of Kansas with the Topeka constitution.

On motion of Mr. Clayton of Del., the Secretary of State was requested to transmit to the Senate the original journal of the proceedings of the Board of American Commissioners convened at Paris, to liquidate and audit the claims of our citizens for French spoliations.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

At the instance of Mr. Haven, the House took up the Senate bill appropriating $45,000 for deepening the channel over the St. Clair Flats, Michigan. Passed by 68 majority. The same bill passed both branches at the close of the last Congress, but for want of time failed to receive the Executive approval.

The House passed, by 74 majority, the bill specifically defining the objects for which the balance of the appropriation for the improvement of the Savannah river shall be expended.

The bill to give the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad Company the right of way through lands occupied by Jefferson Barracks, passed.

Mr. Clingman of N. C. asked leave to submit a resolution for the protection of Americans on the Isthmus. After considerable talk for and against the introduction of the resolution, Mr. Jones of Tenn., in order to see the resolution in print, moved an adjournment, in which case the proposition would go over till Monday next.

After an ineffectual motion for a call of the House, an adjournment was effected, by a vote of 65 against 63.

SENATE. May 6.

The morning hour was chiefly occupied in a discussion relative to the proper location for the District of Columbia armory.

The bill making appropriations for the construction of harbor works at Marquette, on Lake Superior, Northern Michigan, was considered.

Mr. Cass said it was a dangerous coast, and that the sudden storms rendered a harbor's refuge extremely necessary. It was only proposed to construct two of these works for five hundred miles of coast.

Mr. Stuart remarked that the bill appropriated but $25,000. There were eleven bills for harbors on the lakes surrounding the State of Michigan, but each called for only a small amount, in the aggregate, less than the single appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi.

After further debate, in which the propriety of embracing all such measures in one bill was advocated, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed the bills making appropriations for consular and diplomatic expenses.

Mr. Bennett, of New York, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill granting alternate sections of lands to Iowa in aid of railroads now in progress of construction.

It is said that three millions of acres have been granted to Missouri and Arkansas each. This bill will not require more than half that quantity, and contains the usual restrictions, guarding the rights of the United States.

A substitute for the original bill recommended by the Committee on Public Lands, for the same objects, was then adopted, but the morning hour expired before final action.

SENATE. May 7.

The Senate appointed a third Conference Committee on the Deficiency Appropriation bill, the two former committees being unable to agree.

Mr. Bayard, of Del., concluded his speech, commenced on Monday, on the best means of promoting the efficiency of the navy. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Pringle, of N. Y., reported that the second Committee of Conference on the Deficiency bill had failed to agree, and offered to discharge the committee on the part of the House, and recommended the House to adhere to its amendments, and its disagreements to those of the Senate.

Considerable debate followed between the pro and anti-slavery Representatives. Without final action, the House adjourned.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des milliens de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu!

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

FOR THE MORMON.

Utah Knocking at the Door.

TUNE—"Stop that Knocking at the Door."

I know a pretty Mountain Gall—her name is Deseret;
Her nunky nicknamed her Utah when he was in a pet.
Her daddy's name is Jonathan; her uncle is ycleep'd—Sam;
The saucy chub says she's of age, and she'll her rights proclaim.
With a rap-tap, rap-tap, ran-tan at the door,
Let me in!
Stop that knocking! Let me in!
Stop that knocking! Let me in!
Oh, you'd better stop that knocking at my door.
Let me in!!

I do not like you, mountain gal; your sisters say you're bad;
And Nunky Sam, too, is quite 'fear'd you'll trouble your old dad.
Your sisters mock and taunt at you, and say they'll be disgrac'd,
If you possess your proper seat, and 'mong the rest are placed.
With your rap-tap, rap-tap, &c.

What will you do then, daddy dear? Ain't I your gall? Do say?
You would not keep your missy here, till she is turned grey.
I know I'm not your darling child—you never call'd me pet;
But still I am your flesh and blood—your daughter Deseret.
With a rap-tap, rap-tap, &c.

You do not like me! This from you! Why, dad, now that is smart!
What think you then of Sissy Kans's? Does she not break your heart?
No matter what your darters be—pesky, or black as sin,
You allers treat 'em quite perlite, and say "You can come in."
With my rap-tap, rap-tap, &c.

My sisters, too, complain of me! my flesh, and blood and bones!
Why, dad, you say, "who live in glass ought never to throw stones."
Besides, you know I am your child, and for relation's sake.
You'd better take me in, you know—you cannot me forsake.
With my rap-tap, rap-tap, &c.

My sisters all may be more pert, and sassier than me;
But, dad, you know I'm as I am, just as the others be.
And why should they all flout around, turn up their nose and rage,
I guess I'll be as smart as them, now that I am of age.
With my rap-tap, rap-tap, &c.

Well, sissy dear, your dad's your dad; and since you are of age,
You may come in and take your place upon the nation's stage.
You have been wrong'd—come to my arms—your pleading does prevail,
And Uncle Sam, and all the galls, shall greet the Mountain Gall.
With a hip, hip! hip, hip! Hurrah! for Deseret;
The little saucy Mountain Gall shall yet
Be daddy's pet.
Stop that knocking. And come in.
Stop that knocking. And come in.
Oh you'd better stop that knocking, little minx,
And come in.

T.

Vegetable Poisons.

At this period, when so much attention has been directed to the subject of vegetable poisons from the frequent deaths that have occurred, I have thought that my readers might be interested in learning which of the showy inhabitants of our English gardens are most inimical to human life. Unfortunately, there is nothing in the outward appearance of these plants to indicate, their deadly nature. They are generally bright in color, and sometimes very elegant in form; and the greater part of them are common in every flower-garden. Among these last may be mentioned the Aconite, also called Wolfsbane, or Monkshood of which there are various species, all ornamental. The common Monkshood is well known from the amusement children find in pinching the flowers, so as to make the curiously-folded petals start from beneath the hood, like two great eyes. These petals look like gigantic and crested stamens, and the hood, which is only a calyse, is generally supposed to be formed of the petals of the flower. The real stems are, however, the centre of the flower, and they surround a group of three or five seed-vessels or follicles, which, when ripe, burst open at the top to discharge their seeds. The leaves are deeply cut and the stem, which is tall and upright, is thickened at the bone, where it joins the root, so as to give it the appearance of celery; and persons have been poisoned by eating it in mistake for the vegetable. The part of the root which is buried in the ground is also thickened, and resembles horse-radish so much, that a party of friends dining together at Dingwall, in Scotland, were poisoned by the cook fancying it was a root of horse-radish she was scraping, when she was, in fact, offering to her master's guests a most deadly poison. There is nothing in the taste of this plant to warn the eater of it of his danger. It is slightly acrid, but not more so than many plants that are perfectly harmless. The Aconite is very nearly allied to the Larkspur which is also poisonous, the seeds acting as a violent emetic. The Anemone is another poisonous plant, from its acidity and its emetic qualities; and the juice of its leaves will raise blisters. This is also the case with various kinds of Clematis and Ranunculus. The juice of the common Buttercup is extremely acrid, and the species with a creeping, fleshy root is a deadly poison to human beings though pheasants seem to eat it with impunity, as its tuders have been found in the crops of birds that have been shot.

The seeds of Peony will occasion symptoms resembling cholera, with violent sickness; and the Poppy is as everybody knows, highly narcotic. Opium is prepared from the capsule, or seed-vessel, of the large White Poppy, which is cultivated for that purpose to a great extent in the East, particularly in Turkey, Persia, and some parts of India.

The capsule of the Opium Poppy is much larger and more fleshy than that of the Corn Poppy, and this fleshy substance is full of a milky juice, which hardens by exposure in the air into a gum which we call opium. In countries where opium is cultivated as an article of commerce, the Poppies are grown in large fields, and planted in rows to enable the people to reach their heads easily. When the petals of the flowers have fallen, and while the Poppy-heads are yet green and full of juice, the cultivators of opium wound the capsules with a kind of lancet having two blades, so that two cuts are made with each stroke. The milky juice which exudes hardens in the course of the night, and is scraped off the next morning with a blunt knife, before the sun has time to melt it. It is afterwards kneaded into cakes, and packed in leaves for sale. Laudanum is opium steeped in spirits of wine; and paregoric is laudanum with aniseed and camphor added to it; morphine is the sedative part of opium separated from its intoxicating quality. In England all Poppies are more or less narcotic, and of course poisonous; but the milky juice is not secreted in sufficient quantities to render it worth while to cultivate the Poppies for their opium.

Nearly all the umbelliferous plants are poisonous in a wild state. Even Celery is only rendered wholesome by cultivation. Wild Chervil also is poisonous, but the cultivated is eaten in salads. Of all the umbelliferous plants, Water Hemlock, or Cowbane, is, perhaps, the most deadly. It grows in marshy land in several places in the neighborhood of London; and, as it has no bad smell it is sometimes eaten by cows, who die immediately. Children are also frequently poisoned by chewing it. It is an acrid poison, and destroys life by burning the coats of the stomach. Fool's Parsley is very dangerous, as it often comes up in gardens with the other parsley—and when both are quite young, it is not easy to tell the difference between them. When in flower, it is distinguished by two long beards hanging from each flower, while the common parsley has none. But even when not in flower the two kinds may be distinguished by the leaves of the Fool's Parsley being of a darker and bluer green, and having a smell like garlic. Hemlock is also often mistaken for parsley.

Water Parsnip is sometimes mistaken for Skirret, the tubers of which are eaten in Scotland under the name of Crummock. The Water Parsnip, however, may be known by its always growing in water, which the Skirret does not. The Water Dropwort is still more dangerous from its strong resemblance to Celery; and this last plant is so poisonous that many persons feel giddy only from smelling it. —[London Newspaper.

Plant Trees.

Trees are Nature's gift to the country, but their growth is not inhibited in the dust and turmoil of town. They are gentle and beautiful reminders of the innocent pleasures of country life—hints of the purity of younger days when the anxious denizens of the great and wicked city were lads and lasses, and disported, with the glee of childhood, beneath the spreading branches that overhung the old homestead, that shaded the quiet nook, that tossed and waved on the hill side, throwing changing and fantastic shadows on the turf beneath. If for nothing else—for your childrens' sake, plant trees. Do not bring them up without a knowledge of what it is to love Nature in one of her most beautiful manifestations. Let not their young affections be crisped up by the bare brick walls of shadeless streets along which the sun at noon-day pours down his hottest beams. Plant trees, and let the wee things assist you while you do it. Let toddling Jimmy help you while you prepare the bed in which it is to be placed; let Charley bring the water with which you moisten the roots and mulch them in the quickening earth; let Ann or Jennie hold upright its slender trunk while you shovel in the soil. Plant one for each. Let this be Charley's, that Ann's, this in the corner is Nellie's, and that at the end of the walk shall be Jim's. Think you they will not love them? Think you, when you are dead and gone they will not make pilgrimages to the spot with their children and point out where you stood; that they will not repeat what you said; that they will not struggle to repress the rising tear that the old place calls up? Oh, you of little faith!

Plant trees for yourself. The walls inside your rooms are hung with landscapes in which trees are the principal feature. You insist that your friends admire them, and you declare that you love and appreciate them yourself. You point to the delicacy of tint here, the reflected sun light there and the sombre shadows beneath. But, though in a gilt frame, and a room where gaudy painters and vulgar upholsters have done their worst, they are all mean and tawdry compared with the living trees that the Great Master was caused to grow. That daub cost you a handsome sum; but you cannot or do not spare the trifle which, expended as we would wish, would give you a pleasure that the painting never can confer.

Plant trees for your neighbors. We fear that you are doing nothing to insure your remembrance in the busy world that you cannot be a part of forever. You have been lucky in trade; have amassed money in corn; have become a half-millionaire in real estate. Trees outlast fortunes. Storms toss their branches and sway their trunks, but the gentle breeze kisses their foilage to-morrow and they give no sign of the trial they have passed. Not so your riches. You have done little in the way of making the world more beautiful or happy. It is not to late to begin now. Begin with the cheapest method: plant trees that will live when you have given up riches and gone where they are of no use; but where a cultivated sense of the good and the beautiful count more than all the gold of Ophir.

Plant trees, if you will speculate, for their money worth. Make that vacant lot, every year rising in value, rise more rapidly as the trees that you put on it, cause it to be more and more attractive and marketable. Hide the decaying front of that tenement occupied by your poorer neighbor, off whose industry you live, and who by the way, you are grinding rather harshly in the way of rent,—hide it with a coronal of living green that will more than compensate for the want of paint or the lack of skill in the wooden architect who designed it. Trees are money in every city; and more than anywhere else, where Nature in her gifts of the beautiful has been so niggard. Relieve the flatness of surface, and destroy the unbroken continuity of view, by trees. If the lot is wet and of little value, there is the more necessity for the beauty that trees will give. If it is high and dry, trees will grow the better thereon. Put money in thy purse—and plant trees!

Pruning and Culture of Currants.

No fruit pays better for culture than the currant, yet none are more generally neglected. As there is likely to be a scarcity of summer fruits this year, owing to the destruction of peach and cherry buds, &c., all who have currant bushes should bestow upon them special attention so as to increase their fruitfulness. Old and neglected bushes have some of the old branches cut away so as to give the young shoot a chance to fill their places, and these should be thined out, if numerous, and shortened if long, so as not to crowd each other. But especially dig out the grass, if any, about the roots, and apply a good dressing of manure and ashes, spading it in; and when the hot weather commences, cover the entire surface under the bushes, with tan bark, saw dust, old leaves from the woods, or chip dirt from an old wood pile; this will prevent the growth of weeds, and keep the ground moist, greatly promoting the quantity and and quality of the fruit.

Gooseberry bushes should be treated in a similar way, only more attention should be given to pruning, so as to keep the bushes open and the leaves and fruit fully exposed to the air—cutting away half of the last year's shoots, and shortening the rest one half.

Cutting of gooseberry and currant bushes should be taken off as early as possible, selecting the shoots of last season's growth, and shortening the tops, say to 8 or 10 inches in length. They may be placed in the cellar with the butts in the earth or sand, until the ground is fit for planting, then set them in warm sandy soil, about two-thirds of their length in the ground.

The Lace Vail.

The following good story is told by The Columbian and Great West:

Not many days since a gentleman who had lost a bet with a lady and had heard her say that she had lost a lace vail which she prized much, thought he would pay his debt and do the polite thing by purchasing a new vail of fine quality and present it to his fair creditor.

It must be stated for a fair understanding of what followed, that the gentleman was a bachelor of long standing, and a man of little information touching the world of fancy goods, though a proficient in sugar, cotton, and provision speculation.

He accordingly stepped in a fashionable miliner's establishment, and asked to see a lace vail of fine quality.

"Here is one, Monsieur," said the amiable priestess at the head of the temple.

"How much is it?"

"It is only fiftee, sair."

"What! only fifty?" Dear me! I thought these things were exceedingly dear. If that's all they cost I don't wonder at the ladies being fond of wearing such flimsy knick-knacks. Only fifty! Dear me! Show me something better."

The priestess stared; the bachelor remained perfectly cool. Here was a customer! A man who wanted something better, dearer. More vails, lace ones, were displayed.

"Dis is only sixtee, sair, and dis one seventy-five."

"Dear me, only seventy-five? Well that is wonderful, to be sure. It is a very pretty article, I see, but can't you show me something better?"

"No, sair; dis is the most dear—de plus cher article in de cittee."

"You don't say so! Well, well, who would have thought it! These women, these women! they always were a mystery, ever since the days of Adam. Give me the change for a dollar—in quarters?"

The milliner did so.

"I'll take this one," said the simple-minded bachelor, folding up the seventy-five vail. 'Give me a quarter and keep the seventy-five for yourself. Dear me, how cheap! Who would have thought it?"

"I see no seventy-five, sair. You have no hand them to me," said the milliner."

"I beg your pardon, ma'am," said the bachelor, amiably and smilingly; there they are on the counter," pointing to the three quarters.

"Dis!" exclaimed the milliner, with an astonished look.

"That," said the bachelor, more smilingly than ever, preparing to put the vail in his pocket.

"Ah, de man fou—crack-o-brain! I tell you, Monsieur, dat article be de most dear in the cites! You onderstan me—you no onderstan de English? De most dear, I tell you—seventy-five dollar."

"What!" said the bachelor, turning rather pale and dropping the vail as if it had suddenly turned to a coal of fire in his hands, "Seventy-five dollars!"

"Yes, sair, and very sheep at dat."

"Seventy-five dollars for that cobweb! I thought you meant seventy-five cents!"

If ever a bachelor walked fast, that one did. He goes around in a stew of indignation, relating his adventure, and winding up his story with the words—

"Yes, Sir, the female French woman actually asked me seventy-five dollars for the short end of a cobweb."

An experienced bachelor going into a fancy milliner's store is pretty much like an innocent fly venturing into a spider's nest."

St. Louis Correspondence.

St. Louis, Mo., April 30, 1856.

Dear President Taylor—Having a wish for the restoration and salvation of those who have a desire to do right, but who, doubting the incompetency of those who have been placed to direct us, have permitted themselves to be turned aside by slander, lying and misrepresentation, I formed the idea of writing an epitome or short history of the commencement and advancement of the St. Louis Stake since its organization to the present time.

I casually mentioned my intention to our esteemed President, James H. Hart, and he gave it his unqualified approbation.

Any errors I may make unintentional, will, I trust, be excused, as my only object is to set forth truth.

At the Conference held in Great Salt Lake City in April, 1854, Elder Erastus Snow, one of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, was appointed to come to St. Louis and organize the Saints here into a Stake of Zion. Elder Milo Andrus was appointed at the same Conference, to accompany Elder Snow. The latter arrived in St. Louis about the 30th of May following, and it is scarcely necessary to say, immediately received the reins of government from the hands of his predecessor, (Elder Horace S. Eldredge,) who left St. Louis for his home in the mountains on or about the 7th of June following.

The first item relating to this part of the subject is found in the record book, dated June 2, 1854, page 149, as follows: "President Eldredge moved that Elder Milo Andrus be sustained as President over the St Louis Conference, which motion was seconded and carried.

Elder Andrus commenced to make himself acquainted with the spirit, disposition and standing of the people generally, by visiting, and other ordinary means.

He found a person here named Thompson, claiming to be the identical Baneemy, spoken of in the Book of Covenants, who had gathered some few adherrents, and was holding weekly meetings in the city. The gauze covering over him had been sadly too thin to protect him from the powerful opposition he encountered even before the arrival of Elder Andrus. Very soon after Elder A. arrived here, this self-styled Baneemy finding his progress so much impeded, and his foolish mission set so much at naught, left the city, having gathered—so far as the writer has knowledge—about twenty or thirty into a branch. Very few of those went with him, and several who staid behind rejoined the Church, and are steady members to this day. Those who did not rejoin the Church, could be very well spared.

Elder Andrus continued to preside, and was not only favorably received, but through a wise, judicious, and even-handed course, continued to gain the confidence of the Saints; he became almost universally esteemed, and his company sought after at home and abroad.

The next item we shall notice is, the subject of re-baptism. It was resolved in a council held August 25th, 1854, Gen. Record, page 166, That the Saints be re-baptized, and a commencement was made on the 26th, at half-past 4 o'clock, A.M. Elder Andrus re-baptized most of the Presiding Elders and Counselors, and gave instructions for said Presidents to re-baptize those under their care, and in the course of two or three months, the majority of the Saints were re-baptized.

President Snow, accompanied by other Elders, arrived in St. Louis about a week previous, and, among other important business transacted, it was deemed necessary to have a more convenient place for worship. A committee was appointed to procure one, and the large and commodious church—then to rent, corner of Fourth and Washington Avenue, was engaged, thoroughly cleaned and repaired, the Sisters taking a very active part—and on Sunday, the 1st of October, opened, by discourses from Presidents Snow and Andrus.

At a council held September 5th, (Record, page 170,) President Snow first brought forward the publishing of a paper, and wished to be sustained in doing so. It was voted to sustain him by our means, and to assist him all we could. He also introduced the organization of the Stake, and gave some preliminary instructions relative to it.

On the 3d of October, the propriety of holding a general Conference was considered, and it was moved to hold one in the new church on Saturday and Sunday, the 4th and 5th days of November following, President Snow counselling the brethren to give up their business, and attend the Conference during its sittings.

On Saturday, November 4th, the Conference was opened at 10 A.M. President Snow laid before the Saints a general outline of the organization of a Stake, explaining its necessity and benefit. He also put forward the law of tithing, which was responded to by acclamation, and a vote taken to obey it. The officers of the Stake were chosen as follows: Milo Andrus, President, Charles Edwards and George Gardiner, his Counselors, Kleber Worley, Presiding Bishop, with Thomas Harris and Edmund Holdsworth, Counselors.

The following were appointed a High Council: James H. Hart, Andrew Sprowle, John Evans, William Morrison, Jas. S. Cantwell, Wm. Lowe, Samuel J. Lees, Edward Cook, James Brooks, William Gore, Charles Chard, and John Clegg; Robert Windley, President of Elders' Quorum; Joseph Barker and Alexander Dow, Counselors; William Bricker, President Priests' Quorum; Joseph Seel, President Teachers' Quorum; John Bodfish, President Deacons' Quorum.

Bishops were appointed over each ward, and all things set in order, according to the mind and will of the Presidency in Zion.

The numbers reported at the Conference were 10 branches, containing 1,320 members.

It is needless to dwell on the various transactions during the next half year. Suffice it to say, that the movements were entirely new to nearly all of us. Some of the lazy and fearful said there was no necessity for a Stake; others said the corruption at the head would soon sink it down, or they hoped it would. Some very knowing ones said it was ridiculous to think of establishing "a Stake" this side of the mountains, &c. But the God of Israel had a purpose in view, he had the salvation of the people at heart, and in defiance of the sneers of the hypocrite, the lazy, the unbelieving, and the wickedly corrupt, the St. Louis Stake of Zion continues to prosper unto this day.

We were now thrown into altogether a different position than in the old regime, the hurried and hasty spirit of gathering left us; we felt more at home; we had other thoughts and ideas than before; very many, indeed, who were hanging back, began to show themselves, and drank into the Spirit of the Lord again; they were taken by the hand and encouraged; The bishops looked after the poor, and considered them as much of the flock as those in better circumstances, and many who were in apostacy commenced to retrace their steps and work righteousness; the law of tithing was obeyed, and the Devil got mad, and raised up a few of his own sort to show the presiding Bishop that he had no right to do this, and that, and the other; they told him he had no authority to put the law of tithing on the people, or to cut off and deal with such great nothings. Nevertheless, the Stake prospered in spite of all their whining, the corrup. were dealt with, and the Saints rejoiced and felt to praise the Lord.

The High Council being shown that they had to become the conservators of the Saints, (being instructed by President Snow,) wrote several articles on doctrine and general instruction, and the spirit of such went to increase the union and prosperity of the Stake.

The next general Conference was held April 6th, which presented altogether a better tone of feeling, more union and confidence; the church was densely crowded, and the report showed there was an increase of 841 members, and 742 having been re-baptized during the half year. It is needless to dwell long upon statistics, my object being to show that the Stake has risen in numbers, and increased in grace.

I pass on to the next half year without entering much into detail, but would remark in passing that at the Conference of October 6th, there were 27 branches represented, showing an increase of 17 branches over the last half year, several having been organized since April, and some that were in a decaying position were revived, and sought to be associated with the rest. There were 2,044 members represented, many of the delegates had travelled hundreds of miles by horse, coach and steam to be present.

I may state that three of the branches represented were Danish, who had been left in the Danish emigration, but had been cared for and watched with a vigilant eye that they might not lack anything.

Several travelling Elders had gone among the Saints in the Stake, and had hunted up and brought to life very many who had been led astray by all kinds of isms. Among these Elders we might make honorable mention of Elder James Case, whose faithful labors and ministrations will be long remembered.

Not being content with building up the Kingdom of God around here, the Conference of Oct. sent five Elders to the Cherokee Nation, on the borders of this State and Arkansas. There names are, James Case, William Bricker, George Higginson, Henry Eyring, and Wm. O. Flavel. The latter left the company and turned back again, the rest pursued their journey, and (after much opposition from sectarian missionaries) have succeeded in laying the foundation of the dawn of righteousness in the Cherokee, Choctaw and Creek Nations, and have organized branches among those noble descendants of the house of Joseph.

Those Elders were preceded by Elders from the Valley, Elder H. W. Miller having the presidency of that mission.

You must excuse this digression, and I will proceed to the conclusion of this lengthy article, and come to the Conference of the 6th and 7th of this month. It will be necessary to state that the business of the emigration, called Presidents Snow and Andrus, home to Utah. They left Atchison about the month of August last, but before they left, they called a Council, and appointed Elder James H. Hart to preside over this Stake; and it is but justice to say, we had lost nothing by the change, except the company of Elders Snow and Andrus, as the mantle of Milo evidently rests on the shoulders of President Hart.

At the Conference just over, there were thirty-six English, eight Danish, and one Italian branches represented, showing an excess of eighteen branches, and 514 members over the last Conference report.

I have now but little more to add, only that facts are stubborn things, and I think I have proved that the germ of life from Zion has grown, even beyond the expectations of the most sanguine when the Stake was first organized, and also shown that the insinuations of the hypocrite and unbeliever, are levelled with the dust to rise no more.

With sentiments of esteem for your welfare, and strong desires for the continued prosperity and the uprise of the Kingdom of God, I remain, yours, truly,

James S. Cantwell.

Brother Cantwell has, undoubtedly unintentionally, forgotten to name the late Elder Orson Spencer in the brief history of the St. Louis Stake. His stay was certainly very short in St. Louis previous to his fatal sickness, but he was there and presided over the Stake, accordings to the direct appointment of the First Presidency in Zion, till he fell asleep in death.—[Ed. of Mormon.

Too Well Taught.

A gentleman who had carefully trained up his servant in the way he should go, so that when his wife was present he should not depart from it, sent him with a box ticket for the theatre to the house of a young lady. The servant returned when the gentleman and his wife were at dinner. He had of course been told—in giving answers to certain kinds of messages—to substitute the masculine for the feminine pronoun in speaking of the lady.

"Did you see him?" asked the gentleman, giving him the cue.

"Yes, Sir," replied the servant; "he said he'd go with a great deal of pleasure, and that he'd wait for you, Sir."

"What was he doing?" said the wife carefully.

"Putting on his shawl, ma'am!" said the idiot.—[Comic Times.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1856.

The Virginia Telescope and the Mormon

The Virginia Telescope, a small, dim "family newspaper devoted to religion," &c., has given us, with others, particular attention for making remarks on an article "Where is Eden?"

We have had apportunities before this of noticing the editor's proclivities for slander. To critics he is very crabbed. Some have dared to question his article. One he stiles "the ninnyhammer of the Parkersburg News," and "wonder if he borrowed our paper, as we don't exchange with him;" speaks of "another very sagacious personage, in the editor of the Wheeling ———," and "numb-skulls like the editor of the ———;" all this because they could not appreciate "the idea we advanced."

The article, "Where is Eden," had a place in the columns of The Mormon for variety's sake. Having all classes of readers, we thought some might wish to know what others find time to write about. Our remarks, so few and of such a marked jocular character, showed how little interest we attached to the "idea" of the Telescope. They have, however, been sufficient to call forth the holy ire of the editor.

There is a great deal of the weathercock in the composition of some Christians. When occasion suits them, they calumniate their publicly avowed faith, and blacken at one time, in certain circumstances, the very thing they set forth at another time and in other circumstances to be the purest and fairest of things known among men. The editor we refer to belongs to that class that are eternally prating and ranting about the Bible, "the blessed Bible," "the Book of Books," "Holy Abraham—Father of the Faithful," "persevering Jacob—the blessed of the Lord," "the meek man Moses—the deliverer of Israel," and the devout Psalmist David—the man after God's own heart;" yet, when he finds men walking in their footsteps, he bespatters them with the filthiest language his christian heart can suggest—calls the marital relations of these same holy, persevering, meek and devout men of Israel—"the hellish crime of Polygamy," "concocted in the domain of the devil," "and wafted to earth by one of the tallest sons of the prince of perdition."

We would kindly recommend the writer to think before he writes again on this subject—far better set the Bible aside as an inconvenience, than be guilty of such gross inconsistency.

We take the present occasion to finish our extract on Polygamy from Dr. Allen's work, page 606:

"4thly. But there is a passage (Deut. 21: 15) which is express to the point, and amounts to a demonstration of God's allowance of polygamy. If a man have TWO WIVES, one beloved and another hated, and they have borne him children, both the beloved and the hated; and if the first-born be here that was hated, then it shall be, when he maketh his sons to inherit that which he hath, that he may not make the son of the beloved first-born before the son of the hated, which is, indeed, the first-born, by giving him a double portion of all that he hath; for he is the beginning of his strength, and the right of the first-born is his. On the footing of this law, the marriage of both women is equally lawful. God calls them both wives, and he cannot be mistaken; if he calls them so, they certainly were so. If the second wife bore the first son, that son was to inherit before a son born afterwards of the first wife. Here the issue is expressly deemed legitimate, and inheritable to the double portion of the first-born; which could not be, if the second marriage were not deemed as lawful and valid as the first.

"5thly. To say that polygamy is sinful, is to make God the author of sin; for, not to forbid that which is evil, but even to countenance and promote it, is being so far the author of it, and accessory to it in the highest degree. And shall we dare to say, or even to think, that this is chargeable on Him who is of purer eyes than to behold evil, and who cannot look on iniquity? (Hab. 1 : 13.) God forbid.

"When God is upbraiding David, by the prophet Nathan, for his ingratitude towards his Almighty benefactor (2 Sam. xii.) he does it in the following terms:—ver. 8,—I gave thee thy master's house, and THY MASTER'S WIVES unto thy bosom, and I gave thee the house of Israel and Judah, and if that had been too little, I would moreover have given thee such and such things.

"Can we suppose God giving more wives than one into David's bosom, who already had more than one, if it was sin in David to take them? Can we imagine that God would thus transgress (as it were) his own commandment in one instance, and yet so severely reprove and chastise David for breaking it in another? Is it not rather plain, from the whole transaction, that David committed mortal sin in taking another living man's wife, but not in taking the widows of the deceased Saul; and this, therefore, though the law of God condemned the first, yet it did not condemn the second?

"6thly. When David took the wife of Uriah, he was severely reprimanded by the prophet Nathan; but after Uriah's death, he takes the same woman, though he had other wives before, and no fault is found with him; nor is he charged with the least flaw or insincerity in his repentance on that account. The child which was the fruit of his intercourse with Bathsheba, during her husband Uriah's life, God struck to death with his own hand (2 Sam. 12 : 15.) Solomon, born of the same woman, begotten by the same man, in a state of polygamy, is acknowledged by God himself as David's lawful issue (1 Kings 5 : 5,) and as such set upon his throne. The law which positively excluded bastards, or those born out of lawful wedlock, from the congregation of the Lord, even unto the tenth generation, (Deut. 23 : 2,) is wholly inconsistent with Solomon being employed to build God's Temple—being the mouth of the people to God in prayer—and offering sacrifices in the Temple at its dedication—unless David's marriage with Bathsheba was a lawful marriage—Solomon, the lawful issue of that marriage—consequently poligamy no sin, either against the primary institution of marriage, or against the seventh commandment. But so far from Solomon being under any disqualification from the law above mentioned, he is appointed by God himself to build the Temple (1 Kings 8 : 19.) His prayer is heard, and the house is hallowed (chap. 9 : 3,) and filled with such glory, that the priests could not stand to minister (chap. 8 : 11.) Solomon, therefore, as well as Samuel, stands as a demonstrable proof, that a child born under the circumstances of polygamy is no bastard—God himself being the judge, whose judgment is according to truth.

"A more striking instance of God's thoughts on the total difference between polygamy and adultery, does not meet us anywhere with more force and clearness in any part of the sacred history, than in the account which is given us of David and Bathsheba, and their issue.

"When David took Bathsheba, she was another man's wife; the child which he begat upon her in that situation was begotten in adultery—and the thing which David had done displeased the Lord (2 Sam. 11 : 27.) And what was the consequence? We are told, 2 Sam. 12 : 1, the Lord sent Nathan the prophet unto David. Nathan opened his commission with a most beautiful parable descriptive of David's crime; this parable the prophet applies to the conviction of the delinquent, sets it home upon his conscience, brings him to repentance, and the poor penitent finds mercy—his life is spared, ver. 13. Yet God will vindicate the honor of his moral government, and that in the most awful manner—the murder of Uriah is to be visited upon David and his house. The sword shall never depart from thine house, ver. 10. The adultery with Bathsheba was to be retaliated in the most aggravated manner. Because thou has despised me, and has taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be thy wife, thus saith the Lord, I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house, and I will take thy wives and give them unto thy neighbor before thine eyes; and he shall lie with thy wives in sight of the Sun; for thou didst it secretly, but I will do this thing before all Israel, and before the Sun. All this was shortly fulfilled in the rebellion and incest of Absalom, chap. 16 : 21, 22. And this was done in the way of judgment on David for taking and defiling the wife of Uriah, and was included in the curses threatened (Deut. 28 : 30) to the despisers of God's laws.

"As to the issue of David's adulterous commerce with Bathsheba, it is written, 2 Sam. 12 : 15, The Lord struck the child that Uriah's wife bare unto David, and it was very sick. What a dreadful scourge this was to David, who could not but read his crime in his punishment, the following verses declare—wherein we find David almost frantic with grief. However, the child's sickness was unto death, for, ver. 18, on the seventh day the child died.

"Now, let us take a view of David's act of polygamy, when, after Uriah's death, he added Bathsheba to his other wives (ver. 24, 25.) And David comforted Bathsheba his wife, and went in unto her and lay with her, and she bare a son, and he called his name Selomoh (that maketh peace and reconciliation, or recompense,) and the Lord loved him. Again we find Nathan, who had been sent on the former occasion, sent also on this, but with a very different message. And he (the Lord) sent by the hand of Nathan the prophet, and he called his name Jedidiah (Dilectus Domini—Beloved of the Lord,) because of the Lord,—i. e., because of the favor God had towards him (ver. 24.)

"Let any read onward through the whole history of Solomon; let them consider the instances of God's peculiar favor towards him already mentioned, and the many others that are to be found in the account we have of him; let them compare God's dealings with the unhappy issue of David's adultery, and this happy offspring of his polygamy, and if the allowance and approbation of the latter doth not as clearly appear as the condemnation and punishment of the former, surely all distinction and difference must be at an end, and the Scripture itself lose the force of its own evidence.

"7thly. I have mentioned the law being explained by the prophets. These were extraordinary messengers which God raised up and sent forth under a special commission, not only to foretell things to come, but to preach to the people, to hold forth the law, to point out their defections from it, and to call them to repentance, under the severest terms of God's displeasure unless they obeyed. Their commission, in these respects, we find recorded in Isa. 58 : 1, Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet: Show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins. This commission was to be faithfully executed at the peril of the prophet's own destruction, as appears from the solemn charge given to Ezekiel, chapter 3 : 18, When I say to the wicked, Thou shalt surely die, and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked to save his life, the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand.

"These prophets executed their commissions very unfaithfully towards God and the people, as well as most dangerously for themselves, if polygamy was a sin againts God's law, for it was the common practice of the whole nation, from the prince on the throne to the lowest of the people; and yet neither Isaiah, Jeremiah, nor any one of the prophets, bore the least testimony against it. They reproved them sharply and plainly for defiling their neighbor's wives, as Jer. 5 : 8. 29 : 23, in which fifth chapter we not only find the prophet bearing testimony against adultery, but against whoredom and fornication (ver. 7,) for that they assembled themselves by troops in the harlot's houses. Not a word against polygamy. How is it possible, in any reason, to think that this, if a sin, should never be mentioned as such by God, by Moses, or any one of the prophets?*

"Lastly. In the Old Testament, polygamy was not only allowed in all cases, but in some commanded. Here, for example, is the law (Deut. 25 : 5–10,) If brethren dwell together, and one of them die and have no child, the wife of the dead shall not marry without unto a stranger: her husband's brother shall go in unto her, and take her to him to wife, and perform the duty of an husband's brother unto her. And it shall be that the first-born which she beareth shall succeed in the name of his brother which is dead, that his name be not put out of Israel, etc.

"This law must certainly be looked upon as an exception from the general law (Lev. 18 : 16,) and the reason of it appears in the law itself, namely, 'To preserve inheritances in the families to which they belonged.' . . . As there was no law against polygamy, there was nothing to exempt a married man from the obligation of marrying his brother's widow. . . . For, let us suppose that not only the surviving brother, but all the near kinsmen, to whom the marriage of the widow and the redemption of the inheritance belonged, were married men—if that exempted them from the obligation of this law—as they could not redeem the inheritance unless they married the widow (Ruth 4 : 5)—the end of this important law must in many cases be defeated—the widow be tempted to marry a stranger—to put herself and the inheritance into his hands—and the whole reason assigned for the law itself, that of raising up seed to the deceased, to preserve to inheritance in his family, that his name be not put out of Israel—fall to the ground. For which weighty reasons, as there was evidently no law against polygamy, there could be no exemption of a man from the positive duty of this law because he was married. As we say, Ubi cadit ratio, ibi idem jus."—Vol. i. pp. 108, 131, 260, 267; vol. ii. p. 244, 402.

We wonder if the Virginia Telescope will publish this, on Polygamy, as we published his, on "Where is Eden?" We shall see.

* Some have considered Malachi 11 : 14, 15, as a denunciation of polygamy. But a careful comparison of these verses with the 11th verse and with the state of the Jews at that time, as described in Ezra 10 and 11 chapters, and Nehemiah 13 : 23—31, will show that the prophet had then no reference to polygamy, but was reproving the Jews for "having married the daughters of a strange god;" that is, heathen wives, which was strictly forbidden by the laws of Moses. Deut. 7 : 3. Exo. 34 : 16.—D. O. A.

Strong-minded Women and Mormonism.

A strong-minded woman, alias weak-minded man, habilé en femme, writing in the New York Despatch, is in high dudgeon about an article which appeared in Harper's Magazine on the subject of "Free-love." She thinks the writer had better attend to some of the greater evils associated with Mormonism, send out missionaries to the Mormons, convert them from the error of their ways and leave some of these little things alone. Of course, such a recommendation is very natural—very good tactics in war, an elegant ruse, a regular coup de main; don't say any thing about ourselves here, gentlemen, of course not—turn your fire another way. If we have a nice little love affair, un petit pas d'amour, or thousands of them, what does it all amount to? it is only to be expected, very natural—a little weakness of the sex; but then it is très charmane. Besides, it is so elevating, so exciting, to seek out congenial spirits—for men to have passional attractions for other men's wives, and women for other women's husbands. These elevated notions tend so much to domestic tranquility, and place the children of such parties in an enviable position. We are astonished that the writer in Harper's Magazine should notice such trifles; besides, our strong-minded women might have argued that these attractive congenialities, with the addition of the delectable cyprians, are so much superior to the stale, old fogy system of conducting love affairs. These are so gross and sensual, whereas, the others are the height of refinement and spirituality—love in its highest and most exalted sphere. Why, you must be dull if you can't see it! Send out missionaries to the Mormons. They are so degenerate as to do what Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David and Solomon did. The Mormon women are actually as low and degraded as were Sarah, Hagar, Rachel, Leah, Hannah, Saul's and Pharaoh's daughters, and thousands of others equally low and corrupt. Why, the Mormons have so far departed from civilization as to marry their wives, and acknowledge them, and to maintain ALL their children!! They certainly need converting. The missionaries must go and take upon themselves the reformation of the Mormons. What is wholesale seduction? What our delectable stews? What our nymphs du pave? What our houses of assignation? What the wretched victims of debauchery? What the shoals of desecrated hearths and desolate, broken-hearted wives? What our dishonored, ragged, deserted, fatherless children? What the thousands of crushed, withered hearts, whose only sin was trusting their betrayers, and who now feel themselves proscribed, polluted, loathsome things? What of all these small affairs, and the thousands who visit Randall's Island? These are all small matters—very little trifling concerns. There is nothing to do here! no reformation to make! No! send your missionaries to the Mormons; tell them of your purity, your virtues, the high standard of your morals, the elevated tone of your society—that they may admire your virtues and learn your delectable purity. But hark! one word of advice in your ear. Don't go too close to the Mormons, lest they should shrink from your fœted, loathsome, contaminated touch.

Pacific Railroad.

New Plans alias Old Plans.

Some time ago we published a long article giving our views upon the most practical railroad route to the Pacific; in doing this, we carefully investigated the subject, and from a critical examination of the maps, the position of the various railroads now in operation and projecting, the directness of the route, its practicability as the great centre of business operations in the United States, rendered it in our opinion superior to any other designated. We then referred to a junction of the southern and northern routes, in the following terms:

"Again, there are railroads already in operation leading to this route.

"Pass from Pennsylvania, on a southern branch, to Cincinnati, and there is a railroad in progress, going direct to St. Louis; passing that westward, up the Missouri, on what is called the Pacific Railroad, and you strike off almost directly west. The same will apply to Baltimore and Washington. If a little farther north, you go through Pittsburgh, Columbus, Indianapolis and Terrahaute, to Alton, and then again up the Pacific from St. Louis.

"Taking a more northerly route from New York or Boston to Albany, by Buffalo, Cleveland, Michigan City, Chicago, and so on to Peru, Rock Island, or Burlington; thence, as in contemplation, to Iowa City, Bluff City, (Florence, near Bluff City, is to be the point, we are informed; at least it is surveyed there,) and up the Platte river, to join the St. Louis Pacific Railroad. These are the most feasible and natural routes, and combine the most advantages for trade; add to this, the great lake and river trade, and the numerous railroads between these great leading trunks already mentioned; all adapted to sustain a great railroad legitimately, and inviting into its ample embrace the rich treasures of the Pacific. This looks more natural than going round the immense circuit of Texas, New Mexico, the El Passo and the Gila, which some have been pleased to designate 'the nearest way to the Pacific.'"

We are not therefore surprised that a committee appointed to examine into this subject should report the same route that we pointed out; they could arrive at no other possible conclusions. The following we clip from the New York Daily Times:

NEW PACIFIC RAILROAD SCHEME.

The Pacific Railroad Committee of the House has nearly or quite agreed upon a report at last, and the bill they propose is entirely different in its details from that which was entertained a month ago. The present plan is to grant six sections of land to the mile to each of the eight railroad companies now carrying roads westward through Iowa and Missouri,—eight in number,—to aid them in extending their several roads to a common junction at Fort Kearney, on the Platte River,—and then give them jointly thirty sections to the mile to aid in building a single main trunk road from that point to the navigable waters of the Pacific. Agents in behalf of several of these roads are here asking to be permitted to carry out their plan of constructing the Pacific Railroad; and it is urged that the scheme will combine large influences in its favor. The bill also proposes to make a grant of thirty sections of land to the mile to C. K. Garrison, of San Francisco, and others, for the construction of a road from the Mississippi River, south of the 38th parallel, to San Francisco, and to any other point they may select on the Pacific Ocean.

The editor then says:

"While Mr. Weller, Chairman of the Senate Committee upon the Pacific Railroad, amuses himself with the politics of Central America, the House Committee, it appears, is on the eve of reporting a very sensible scheme for that great enterprise. It embodies three leading features, the first providing for the extension of several lines of railroad now proceeding westward to Fort Kearney, upon the river Platte, as a point of concentration; the second granting thirty sections of land per mile for the continuation of a single line from that point to any navigable point on the Pacific; the third conceding an equal amount of land to Mr. C. R. Garrison, of San Francisco, and others, as a bonus for the construction of a line from the Mississippi, somewhere south of 38 deg., to the great South Sea. Thus, all the conflicting interests will be harmonized, the competition of sections appeased, and a sufficient thoroughfare for such travel as there will probably be these many years over the wastes, rocks and canons of the inter-continental wilderness, furnished forthwith. Our correspondent states that parties are in Washington pressing the measure as proposed, and avowing their readiness to reduce it to immediate execution. We thus have not only a plan, but the highest evidence of practicability, a startling novelty in such matters.

Much of the labor attending the initiation of such enterprises has been already accomplished. The immediate need of a rapid means of a communication with the West, and with the waters of the Pacific and South and Indian Seas, all under our sole authority and control, and upon our own soil, no longer requires demonstration.

Nothing but that can retain and develop that important and rapidly increasing interest in Asiatic trade, which England is proposing to engross by a Railroad of still vaster conception across the deserts of Syria, Mesopotamia and Persia. A contest costing millions may result in such ticklish security for the middle routes as shall remove pressing apprehension. But those millions, we now discover, may construct a channel of intercourse over our own territory, beyond all contingency of revolution or peril, such as surround the Isthmian traveler, and save the time as well as the danger of a duplicate sea-voyage. Let the Pacific Railroad or Roads—three are better than one—enjoy all the benefit of the late transactions upon the Southern routes. Let the measure now proposed be put through with railroad speed, if such celerity is possible in legislative matters at the capital, aided with all the impetus Gen. Walker and the Panama police can afford it, and the lesson taught by the recent riot, and the existing war will have yielded its modicum of profit. If we except the admission of Kansas, Congress has no business before it half so important."

Emigration.

From the Millennial Star we learn that the ship S. Curling, left Liverpool for Boston on the 19th of April, with 707 emigrants, under the Presidency of Elders Dan Jones, John Oakley and David Grant. 550 of this company are from Wales.

President F. D. Richards writes us from Liverpool, April 25th, on the subject of emigration as follows:

"My next vessel is the 'Thornton' for New York, to sail on the 2d of May with about the same number of passengers as the 'S. Curling,' part of whom will be through emigrants. To follow that, and take out the balance of the through emigrants for this season, I have chartered the 'Horizon' for Boston, to sail on the 23d of May. Her capacity is nearly 800 souls, perhaps quite. After this I shall have about one ship load left for the States, which I hope to despatch by the 1st week in June."

Notice to Enquiring Friends.

We frequently recieve letters from persons in different parts of the Union, enquiring if John, William, or Peter, with their families, have arrived from England: if they have we are to advance them money, if required, and send them forward to such a place.

The names of emigrants published in The Mormon are certain to arrive, unless detained by sickness at the Quarantine Hospital, or having died on the passage, and in such eventuality the names are published in the report. If friends or relatives are wanted, send on the money for their expenses should they be supposed to require it, and it shall be handed to them if they comply with your instructions, if they do not, the money is at your command. To send on every body that is wanted would require a California pile. We are desirous of aiding every good and honorable person, but a little reflection would soon convince our friends that it is ridiculous to expect us to attend to such requests. Railway Companies require from us dollars and dimes.

Cherokee Mission.

By a letter from Elder Henry W. Miller, dated Spavenaw Mill, April 7th, 1856, we learn of the progress of the Work of the Lord among the Cherokees. Elder Miller writes, concerning the Cherokee Mission:—I have to report, that there is as good a prospect as could be anticipated, for the commencement. We have baptized since July 4th, sixty-five members, organized ten branches, and ordained two native elders. . . . We held two meetings yesterday, of the Spavenaw branch, and the traveling Elders of the Cherokee and Creek nations. The authorities of the Church in the valley and of this mission were unanimously sustained by the Saints.

There are now laboring in the Cherokee nation, myself and Brother Richey; in the Creek nation, Bros. Case, Richards, Bricker and Eyring, and in the Chocktaw nation, Bros. Cook and Higginton.

Sympathy for General Walker.

In our last week's issue we announced that a meeting was to be held on Friday evening at the National Hall, Canal street, for the purpose of expressing sympathy for the now distinguished General Walker. The call for the meeting commenced with a warlike verse of poetry followed by an invitation to the friends of republicanism and those opposed to British interference in the affairs of Central America. A long list of Honorables, Colonel, Mayor, Captain, and "other distinguished orators," were to be present, and address the meeting.

At half-past seven the hall was crowded to excess. In the exterior of the hall were placed two transparencies—No British interference on the continent of America—Enlarge the Boundaries of Freedom. The Nicaraguan flag floated over the platform. Mr. Clancy, Chairman of the preliminary meeting, introduced the Chairman of the evening, John McKibbin, Junr.

A list of names for Vice Presidents and Secretaries were read and adopted. A series of resolutions explaining the position of things in Nicaragua were read, followed by three cheers, and three more for Gen. Cass.

Capt. Rynders apologised for the absence of the "distinguished orators," and Mr. Oaksmith read the following telegraphic letter:—

Washington, May 7, 1856.

Messrs. Rynders, Dean, Oaksmith, Clancy & Phillips.—It is not possible for me to attend your meeting, though I sincerely hope that the movement of Walker will be successful. I think the best interests of this country, of that country, and of the world, require it. It has all of my best wishes.

Lewis Cass.

A gentleman from the interior of the State spoke at considerable length in favor of Gen. Walker and the government of Nicaragua, and in opposition to Great Britain, concluding with the following declarations:—

1. That it is the duty of our government to make immediate recognition of the republic of Niaragua. (Applause.)

2. That this government in its laws and its treaties should declare the perfect freedom of commerce and colonization in other words, the right of every citizen to go with his ships and his property, including his rifle, to any nation whatsoever that is willing to receive him. (Applause.)

3. That notice of the abrogation of that joint production of stupidity and cowardice, the Clayton Bulwer treaty, should be immediately given. (Applause.)

4. That full and ample indemnity for the robbery and massacre at Panama should be demanded and taken. (Applause.]

The meeting adopted the above with acclamation, and the band played the "Star Spangled Banner."

Gen. Walbridge was introduced, and was hailed with cheers. He set forth such information as seemed to him sufficient to justify the general government in immediately recognizing the existing government of Nicaragua, and in putting an extinguisher upon the claims of Great Britain in Central America. The General spoke as a man well posted on his subject, and in great earnest about doing the business before him.

Capt. Rynders was introduced to the meeting, whereupon the band, no doubt without intending to insult the Captain, played something, a cotemporary says, approaching "The Dead March in Saul." Upon the remonstrances of the son of Mars, the dying groans gave place to Yankee Doodle. Mr. R. caught the spirit of the meeting, spoke favorably of Walker and Nicaragua, and pitched into John Bull, answering during his address, very amusingly, some voices from the body of the hall.

William J. Rose said the meeting had assembled to throw down the gauntlet of defiance against the combinations made in Europe to overthrow this country. He advocated the propriety of adopting a strong foreign policy, and introduced the following resolution:

Whereas, by the resolutions already adopted by this meeting, it is apparent that General William Walker and his brave army in Nicaragua are in need of prompt and material aid: therefore, be it.

Resolved, That a commitee be appointed by this meeting, with full power to collect and receive subscriptions and contributions of any kind, whether in money, provisions, clothing, arms or ammunition, for the immediate aid and relief of Gen. Walker and his suffering army.

The resolution was adopted, and the Chair appointed a number of persons as the commttee.

Other speakers addressed the meeting under the influence of Mars, and promising continued action till Nicaragua was free. Walker may calculate on something now.

Speakers and audience were in good earnest. Other towns will imitate New York.

The Fillibusters that Were.

The Patriots that Are.

The Administration at Washington has at length recognized the legitimacy of the Walker-Rivas government of Nicaragua. Father Vigil called at the State Department on Wednesday, was well received by Mr. Marcy, and conducted by him to the President, where he presented his credentials, and met with a cordial reception. The event has created a great sensation. Rumor is now busy—a steamer here and another somewhere else, are to be sent with material aid from this government to General Walker. And instruction to some one that should the English attempt to stop anybody on the way to Nicaragua, there will be "a flare up." "Go-a-head"-slow, don't break your necks in the hurry to fight.

Kansas.

Gov. Robinson and family left Kansas on the 10th, by the Star of the West. On the arrival of the steamer at Lexington, Mo., he was waited upon by a committee of respectable citizens and notified that they should detain him on the ground that he was fleeing from the Territory to avoid arrest on an indictment of treason which had been found against him by the Grand Jury of the United States District Court. Robinson replied that he had been informed by one of the Grand Jury that an attempt had been made to find a bill, but had failed.

The committee being dissatisfied detained him: his family proceeded to St. Louis. A messenger was dispatched to Kansas to ascertain if an indictment had been found, and if not, all the expenses of Mr. R's detention were to be paid.

The other Governor, Reeder, while in attendance at the session of the Committee of Investigation at Lecompton, on the evening of the 8th, the Deputy Marshal served on him a writ to appear before the Grand Jury at Lecompton, to answer to a charge of contempt, for having refused to comply with a summons from the Grand Jury previously served upon him.

Mr. Reeder refused to obey the writs, and appealed to the committee, but they decided that they had no power in the cases.

Mr. R. said, that although his life was in danger in Lecompton, he would remain on his privilege, in attendance at the sittings of the Committee, and he warned them to touch him at their peril. The Marshal left, but was expected to return on the 9th, with the United States dragoons.

Judge Lecompte charged the Grand Jury on Monday, the 5th inst., to indict all the State officers and members of the Legislature for high treason, but up to the 5th inst, no such indictments had been found by the Court, so far as their proceedings had been made public.

There are all manner of rumous afloat about armed men mustering on the border and the people of the Territory being advised to prepare for the conflict. Lively times in Kansas surely.

Sheriff Jones of Kansas.

This gentleman has been so often reported: "is dead"—"is recovering"—"is recovering"—"is dead"—that we really can't tell our readers where he is. He is evidently an object of deep solicitude, and dies and recovers just as it suits the convenience of the editor who writes about him. When all are agreed that he is one way or the other, we shall record the decision.

Shooting Affray at Washington.

Mr. Herbert, a Member of the House of Representatives from California, shot the head waiter at Willard's Hotel on the morning of the 8th, killing him instantly.

It appears from the explanation of the witnesses, that Mr. Herbert entered the dining room after the usual breakfast hour. On giving orders for breakfast the waiter informed him that he could not be served without an order from the office, whereupon Mr. H. spoke harshly, and got a reply which led him to strike the deceased. The latter seized a plate or tray and gave symptoms of readiness to part with it. Mr. H. threw a chair at him, and then commenced a regular scuffle between Mr. Herbert, and his friend Mr. Graham on the one side, and waiter Thomas Keating, his brother and other waiters on the other side.

After a considerable struggle and smashing with chairs and crockery, the Representative drew a pistol and shot the waiter.

Among the witnesses of this affair, was M. Dubois the Netherlands Minister, who stood immoveable till the waiter was shot, and then went coolly and examined him to see if he was dead. He refuses to give his evidence, though he is the only person who could give a disinterested statement. Mr. Herbert has undergone examination, but the evidence being somewhat contradictory, the judge decided to release him on bail.

The order of the Court is that the prisoner enter into recognizance of the sum of ten thousand dollars, as security for his appearrnce at the Criminal Court to answer the charge of manslaughter, in the killing of Thomas Keating.

Joseph H. Berrett and James Owner were accepted as bondsmen and the prisoner released.

This shooting has become too common an occurrence. There is scarcely a day but someone is shot from slight causes. Human life is at a low value.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

By the arrival of the Atlantic our Government has received a definite reply from the British Government on the Central American difficulty. Nothing is conceded to America, but England agrees to refer the whole subject to an arbitrator, and submits to be bound absolutely by such decision, the choice of reference being left to the United States. Lord Clarendon says, that after an examination of all the evidence on the enlistment difficulty produced by both parties, her Majesty's Government refuses to recall Minister Crampton, or the Consuls said to have been compromised in the affair. Many persons expect fighting now.

In the correspondence laid before the British Parliament on the Central American controversy there is the following letter from Mr. Crampton to Lord Clarendon:—

[Extract.] Washington, March 31, 1856.

It will be within your lordship's recollection that Mr. Clayton was informed by Sir Henry Bulwer, before the treaty of 1850 was signed, that Ruatan was de facto and de jure a British possession; and Mr. Clayton has, on various occasions since, in conversation with me, stated that he considered Ruatan as much a British possession as Jamaica, or any other British West India island.

Mr. Clayton took this letter to the Senate on Wednesday, and denounced the statements of Mr. Crampton to be entirely false, and sustained his denial by the testimony of Mr. Crittendon, who stated that Mr. Crampton said, in his presence, to Mr. Clayton directly the contrary of what is now published in his name.

Mr. Buchanan was well received at Baltimore on Monday, and passed on to Washington, where he has been warmly received.

The body of the murdered Capt. Palmer, of the schooner Eudora Imogene, was discovered on the beach of Hunter's Island, Pelham, Westchester county, on Sunday. The colored man, George Wilson, who has been in custody from the 23d of November under the several charges of creating a revolt on the Eudora, killing the captain and scuttling the schooner, and who has heretofore successfully baffled the civil authorities in their prosecutions, seems now to have a fair chance of receiving the punishment due to such crimes. The negro was informed on Tuesday that the body of the Captain had been discovered. He replied, "So I heard three times before. Glad to hear it. Has the Captain got four bodies, I wonder?" When the marks on the Captain's body, which the murderer had tried to cut off, the nature of the wounds by which death was effected and the subsequent mutilation of the remains were described to him, he instantly lost his firmness and gave evidence of the most abject fright.

The excitement of the people at City Island, New Rochelle, White Plains and the neighboring places at the discovery of the body, is very great.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

The colliers in the western counties of Scotland are presently "on strike." Their wages were advanced last autumn from 4s. to 5s. per day. The employers have recently attempted to return to former prices and have met with resistance from nearly 30,000 workmen. Some hundreds are working at the reduced 4s. and a few others at 5s. The employers have blown out 20 per cent of their furnaces and threaten to extinguish the whole of them. The employed—that were, are ranging over the country holding large meetings. Fearing disturbances might arise from this state of things the military in Glasgow have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness "to support the civil authorities."

Mr. F. Petit Smith, who patented in 1836 his invention of screw propulsion, and who has so successfully applied it to the British Navy, is now before the British public for a handsome testimonial. The Grand Naval Review at Spithead, has stirred up Mr. Smith's friends to "embrace the occasion," and already a long list of subscribers for something like £4,000 is published in the Times, to admonish those who admire the display to remember the inventor and to go and do likewise. In January last her Majesty Victoria put his name down on the civil list for a pension of £200 per annum.

The Moniteur of the 21st of April, publishes the text of a convention between France, Belgium, Spain, Sardinia, and Switzerland, for regulating the transmission of telegraphic despatches.

The supplement to the London Gazette extraordinary, April 28th, contains Victoria's Proclamation of a definite treaty of peace and friendship between her and Russia, which she commands to be published throughout her dominions, and observed inviolably by all her loving subjects by sea and land. Victoria R— has likewise "thought fit" to issue a proclamation—appointing a General Thanksgiving on Sunday the 4th inst., and "has given directions to the Most Reverend the Archbishop, and the Right Reverend the Bishops of England, to compose a form of prayer and Thanksgiving for the occasion." The Scotch folks who don't care much about reading prayers are expected, however, by Her Majesty to "reverendly and decently observe the said public Thanksgiving," and inasmuch as they don't read the Archbishop's prayer the ministers are to read the proclamation from the pulpit the previous Sunday.

As the steamship Persia was about leaving Liverpool for New York in her last trip, an American light-fingered gentleman, calling himself Allan Howard, was arrested on board for having been connected with housebreaking. Quite a large sum of English and American money was found on his person. Two other American swells calling themselves Oscar Kingston and D. E. Branch, are in custody charged with general robberies.

Count Orloff, in consideration of his services to Russia at the Paris Congress, has been raised to the dignity of President of the Council of the Empire, as likewise of the Committee of Ministers, also of those of the Caucusus and Siberia.

Screw steamers are to sail monthly between Hamburg and New York, from the 1st. of June, price of passage, $90, $50, $30, about sixteen or seventeen days voyage.

The English papers are filled with descriptions of the magnificent Review of the British fleet which took place on the 23d ult., and the incidents and events connected therewith. The fleet anchored covered a space from pivot ships to pivot vessels of upwards of 12 miles.

The British government lately presented to Mr. Henry Grinnell a silver vase; a silver tea service and salver for Dr. Kane, gold medals for Dr. Kane and the other officers, and silver medals for the crew, the whole of the articles bearing suitable inscriptions.

By order of the Emperor Napoleon the Prince Imperial has been put on the muster roll of the 1st Regiment of the Grenadiers of the Imperial Guard, as enfant de troupe.

Correspondence with the Editor.

The following correspondence was not intended by either writer for the press, but from the facts and principles set forth, we have been induced to publish it. In withholding names, none are wiser than they ought to be, and others in similar circumstances may thereby be benefited.

C———, Feb. 14, 1856.

Elder Taylor—Sir: Deep suffering and long continued sorrow induce me to write to you. I have been unhappy, otherwise I would not trouble you with words of mine. I cannot say that I have suffered intensely for the last two or three years, as the commencement of my heaviest sorrows reaches several years back of that. The broken heart may callous over, although it cannot be healed. Suffering renders a person privileged, therefore, inferior as I am, I take the liberty to address you, though a stranger. You are high in authority, professing to be a servant of the living God, and holding the priesthood which has power to bind on earth that which shall be loosed in Heaven. If these things are a reality, then sorrow has a claim upon you as far as you are able to alleviate. Alleviation I consider impossible in my case, and as I am a helpless, hopeless being, probably beyond the reach of mercy, in this life at least, I humbly ask of you, inasmuch as you profess to be a follower of him who was acquainted with grief, and who was a friend of sinners, to attend to the few words I have to communicate, and then if you think advice will not be worse than useless, I should be glad to receive it. I first listened to the preaching of a Mormon Elder in the year 1851. I went to the house with a light heart, expecting to hear anything but consistency, but I soon believed that every word was consistent with reason and Scripture. It was impressed on my mind that his words were truth and life. I received them as such, and my spirit was filled to overflowing with feelings which I never before had experienced. Probably I never shall forget the last Sabbath I spent in his presence. It is an oasis in my desert life; and stars on which I sometimes gaze whilst surrounded with that impenetrable, eternal darkness. My heart was filled with calm yet exquisite happiness, also with darkness. There was a spirit propelling me on to baptism, and another which held me back. The latter prevailed. I was then but sixteen years of age, and away from home, and as my parents were strictly orthodox, I knew this act would be contrary to their feelings, therefore, I considered this a sufficient excuse. I felt as though this light was unendurable unless I could obey it; and after the man of God, as I then considered him, had left, my nervous feelings were wrought to such a pitch that I offered an inward prayer, that unless I could obey this light it might be taken from me. I was an infant in suffering, and my capability of enduring small. From that moment I do not recollect any religious feelings more than one would naturally have listening to orthodox sermons, and one young in the cares and frivolities of the world. I was satisfied that there was no religion on earth except in Mormonism; therefore, as soon as I arrived at the age of twenty-one, I was baptized, and considered myself a member of the Church of Latter Day Saints. I remained in this situation about three years, when I was suddenly overwhelmed in darkness; I passed from life and happiness to misery and death. While sitting at the table with my friends, a flash sudden as lightning passed through my mind, and with it these words—Perhaps there is no God. There was a shock throughout my nervous system, and for about a half an hour I could scarcely control myself. There was an irresistible contraction of my arm, and when I arose from the table, it was with difficulty that I could stand. By summoning all the resolution I was master of, my nerves were brought to rest, and I was left to endure the dreadful agony of a bleeding, broken heart. I was crushed, ruined. I looked upon the form of nature; I knew not why, unless to see if I was still in the same world; but its life and beauty were gone, and if I had been placed upon another planet, I hardly think the change would have been greater. I looked into the faces of my friends, but the immortal spirit had gone out, and if they had all been called away by death, I think it would have been pleasure to me, compared to what I then endured. Had I slept the sleep of death ere that fatal hour, perhaps all might have been well with me. It would be useless for me to try to describe the months of agony which I endured, for the pen of the gifted would fail to do it justice. I had lost my all: the Being whom I loved and sought to worship, was torn away from me, and I longed for death. I then thought that there never could be any abatement whatever to the depth of my guilt; but years have passed away, and I have found myself again mingling in the affairs of life. I have become somewhat naturalized to this new world. It is my honest opinion now that there is no such thing as human accountability. I have hesitated long about disclosing these facts to those in authority in the Mormon Church, fearing that their opinion would agree with mine, and that there is but little hopes of happiness for me in this life; but I have been advised to do it, and I have now done it, and should be very thankful for a reply.

NEW YORK, May 11, 1856.

DEAR SISTER,—Some months ago I received a letter from you, respecting your position and the extreme mental suffering that you endured, and had endured for years. At that time I was very busy and laid it aside for a few days, until I should have more leisure; by some mischance it got mislaid, and a day or two ago, in looking over some papers, I discovered it, I was then reminded of my negligence; for rest assured it is very far from my feelings and principles to trifle with feelings such as you manifest, or to be indifferent to the requirements of those in distress. I know a little both of the power and goodness of the Lord and the sweet enriching consoling influence that flows from his Holy Spirit, as well as the subtilty of satan and the hopeless black despair which he is capable of effecting when he has the ascendency. Jesus himself was some times administered to by angels, at other times satan was allowed to buffet him. In Gethsemane's garden He must have felt the powerful influence of the adversary when by his extreme mental agony he "sweat great drops of blood," and when again through the rage of men and the powers of darkness; mocked, tortured, alone and destitute, without human help, and and the heavens as brass, suffering, drooping, dying, he exclaimed "My God! my God! why hast thou forsaken me!" Joseph Smith as you will read in his history was not only administered to by the angels of the Lord, but was also powerfully tempted by the angels of the devil who sought to obtain the advantage over him; but whom he resisted and overcame. You may have read of some severe struggles with devils by Brs. O. Hyde, Heber C. Kimball and Isaac Russell, on their first mission to England, satan tempted for a short time; but they overcame him and cast him out. These were not merely impressions; but visible manifestations; the history of this Church abounds with such instances. I know something of the power of satan, I have seen devils cast out. I have seen some struggle and overcome satan; I have seen others overcome of him.

I perceive that you are of a nervous temperament, and being away from the Church and the influences thereof, satan has gained the ascendency and brought you into bondage. In your first acquaintence with "Mormonism" you say; "One spirit urged me to baptism; another kept me back; the latter prevailed." With me it was the opposite. I encountered the same spirits—the first prevailed and I triumphed, "I resisted the devil and he fled from me." He has never since had power. You again state that, "about three years after you were baptized, while sitting at the table with your friends, a flash sudden as lightning passed through your mind, with these words "perhaps there is no God" . . . . and from that time you were led to endure the agony of a bleeding, broken heart, and were crushed and ruined . . . . and from that to this you have been without hope, and are now without it." Let me here observe; you did not resist the devil in the first instance, in the second you also gave way. In making these remarks I do not wish to cast reflections, I sincerely sympathise with you; but I wish to be frank and to show you the rock upon which you split. I am not surprised that you should come to the conclusion; "that man is not the arbitrar of his own actions." The gloomy dark spirit that whispered into your ears, "that there is no God," was quite as able to suggest anything else to continue your unhappiness and to pourtray you as a destitue, forsaken, withered, blighted wretch, without hope, the creature of a relentless fate; but there are other angels and spirits of a purer origin, a more lovely gentle and amiable quality, messengers of mercy, who if they could be listened to would drive back the foul tempter, whisper more sublime and heaven-born principles in your ears, plant the star of hope again in your bosom, and hush into serene repose the tempestuous gloomy feelings of your restless bosom. But say you how?

One of the leading doctrines of our Church is the gathering, when the Saints are gathered together they are instructed by the priesthood in regard to all the principles pertaining to the Gospel and its ordinances, they are taught their duties, both relating to themselves, their progenitors and posterity, among other things they are made acquainted with the power of God, the power of Satan and the influence of spirits; you should have gathered with the Saints and thrown yourself under the protecting influences of the Church of the living God of which you have to the present been deprived, as you have not done it hitherto, you ought now to do it, and in the meantime if you could meet and associate with some of the good Saints who would be a strength and comfort to you; but whether you do or not do your first works over again, get re-baptized and confirmed, first repenting and forsaking all your sins, walk righteously before the Lord, hasten to the valleys of the mountains and you shall realize there is a God, that his mercies extend even to you and that Satan is a liar, your peace shall yet flow as a river, and you shall shout "Halleluia the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth."

With sentiments of the kindest regard, I remain your Brother in the Gospel of the Kingdom JOHN TAYLOR.

Correspondence of Elder A. Robbins, Jun.

THE following communication from Elder Alexander Robbins, reached our office in due time, but inadvertantly was placed with business letters, and was not handed into the editorial department till too late for last week's issue. We are ever pleased to receive communications from Elder Robbins, and hope to hear from him as frequently as his duties permit, and in this wish we are assured our general readers will join.

BUFFALO, April 23, 1856.

DEAR SIR,—Last evening at five o'clock I started in the New York and Erie cars for Iowa city, via Buffalo. No sooner seated than pop went the weasel; and notwithstanding those awful mountains, chasms and precipices of Chemung, Stuben and Alleghany counties, I find myself this morning four hundred and twenty-two miles from the point of starting, and the horse that took us through apparently as fresh as ever.

It is true he smokes a little, but what horse without an iron constitution would not, in traveling that distance in so short a time.

Buffalo—on the whole—is quite a pretty place; very like some of the cities further west, it is tolerably elevated and clean, with an abundance of good water artificially raised from the Niagara River into a reservoir fifty feet above the level of the city.

Yes! Buffalo would suit such as have never crossed the Mountains to Salt Lake. But enough, the act of comparing makes me homesick. If every four hundred of the three thousand miles to Utah were as short as that traveled last night in that lightning coach, the next communication you would get from me for the MORMON would "smell of distance."

I am obliged to lie over here until eleven o'clock this evening, why, I know not, except it should be to give the "good people" of Buffalo a chance to fleece us; if that, however, is all, I presume the passengers would have preferred to have footed the bills at once, and proceeded; but I suppose that would not have been scientific.

April 24.—Again shut up in this lightning box, with a fresh horse in the shafts, snorting and prancing to the tune of forty miles an hour. I undertake to pencil a little more, on the back of a railway bill, on the crown of my hat; but I find it is all dots and lines, regular telegraph style. However, I will translate it as soon as the "blamed critter" stops at Chicago or some other place to get breath.

Down East is going Up West this spring, and this train of about fifteen cars is crowded with fortune-seekers, all anxious as myself, and probably a little more so, to get away from sunrise; demonstrating the common saying, "Westward the Star of Empire wends it's way." In the seat next to me President Pierce is catching it bravely for his anti-abolition course. I think, judging from the zeal they manifest, if either one of some four or five around me had the reins of government about this time, they would make the fur fly out of National men. I squared myself and took a round or two, but found the fire flew so that discretion, the better part of valor, suggested a change in tactics, which resulted in the best of feelings all around.

I see by News papers there is a prospect of a duel between Judge Douglas and Col. Lane, growing out of the Kansas question. Hope they won't fight; but can't help it if they do. Wonder if there will be any points of honor to settle over the admission of the State of Deseret? Keep cool, gentlemen!

Please tell Dr. Jeter and Capt. Benjamin Brown that I shall expect to see them in St. Louis soon.

Say to any others that may inquire after me (for of course they will) that if they want to see me, to just call at my residence in the Thirteenth ward of Salt Lake city, on the other side of Jordan. Excuse humor, as it will come that way some times. As Brother Young once said of Father Sherwood, "There is music in the old fiddle, and it must occasionally come out." Adieu,

ALEXANDER ROBBINS, Jr.

Utah Correspondence.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, March 2, 1856.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

I ARRIVED from Parawan on the 22d ult, after a tedious journey of 13 days, over deep snows on the mountains, and mud in the valleys; and am now engaged on the History of Joseph, at the time of his imprisonment in Carthage, which is the most affecting piece of business I have ever undertaken. It makes me feel like swearing, and all that restrains me, is that I am not philologist enough to command words as fervent as I could wish to do justice to my feelings. If you would have the goodness to write some of the last conversations, and incidents on that occasion, of our martyred brethren; I would be happy to have the privilege of inserting them in the History. The winter has been uncommonly severe the depth of snow in the northern Counties unprecedented since our settlements in the mountains. The southern counties have fared better though the weather has been been severe. The most of the hands on the public works have been discharged. The mechanics are getting up drilling machines to drill in their wheat and thus save seed. Many will follow the plan adopted by Mr. John Halliday, who in 1849 raised 60 bushels to the acre from a peck of seed sown in drills, and carefully irrigated. A disturbance has occurred between the Indians and whites in the county of Cedar, the immense herds of cattle and sheep in that county have been at the mercy of the Indians for several days. Six herdsmen have been killed, it is considered certain that Battuze the Juab county chief so long famed for his brutality in murdering prisoners and Indian children with the coolest cruelty, has met his fate and settled his last account, in a fray with a posse under the direction of a U. S. Dep. Marshal. Tintic the head of the movement was wounded, it is reported severely. Several Indians have been killed but generally the herdsmen have been surprized and put to death without warning. Gov. Young has issued a proclamation on the subject, and Gen. Conover has received instructions to suppress the outbreak, with a detachment of Utah county militia. The difficulty appears to be only with the Timpanago Utes, the other bands are opposed to the movement. High Forehead, Nataab, and Peteetneet are decidedly friendly; as well as Kanosh and Soldier; and other chiefs we have heard from. It appears from messengers from Juab the Pi-ab-wats are quiet, they had discarded Battuze as a bad one for some time past. Arropeen the principal chief of the mountain Utes; has done his best for a long time to keep the Timpanogas quiet, but said not long since, Squash and Tintic would not hear, he is now at San Pete. I had a conversation with him on my return from the South he met me at the Chicken Creek Springs, 20 miles from any settlement, took dinner with me, and evinced the warmest friendship. The California mail arrived late last evening, by it we received the Mormon up to Dec. 15, leaving us nearly three months behind the news from your office, with very little probability of any mail from the East, before the 1st of May. The State convention meet on the 17th; delegates have been unanimously elected from all the counties heard from. The taking of the Census is progressing as rapidly as could be anticipated considering the obstacles to be encountered on account of the severity of the winter, and the wide extent of the settlements.

GEO. A. SMITH.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, May 8, 1856.

On motion of Mr. Mason, the Senate took up the resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, declaring the notice which has been given by the President to Denmark to terminate the treaty with that government, regulating the payment of the sound dues, sufficient, and that no other or further act of legislation is necessary to put an end to said treaty as a part of the law of the land.

Mr. Stuart moved to strike out the latter portion of the resolution, commencing "and that no other," &c.

A number of Senators sustained the resolution and about an equal number spoke against it. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House, as well as the Senate, adopted the report of the Joint Committee of Conference on the bill amendatory of the Bounty Law of 1855.

The bill provides that parole evidence, where no records exists, may be admitted to prove military service performed; construes the 8th section of the act of 1855 to embrace officers, marines, seamen, and other persons engaged in the naval service during the revolutionary war, and their widows and minor children, and allowing to complete the time of service one day for every 20 miles from the place where the troops organized to muster, and also on their return after discharge.

The House resumed the consideration of its disagreement to the Senate's amendments to the Deficiency Appropriation bill.

Mr. Giddings earnestly attacked an item for the expenses of the Judiciary in Ohio, and was warmly condemning the appropriation of money to discharge arrearages contracted for returning fugitive slaves to Kentucky, when he suddenly fainted and fell to the floor. Several members immediately conveyed him to a sofa near an open window. A profound sensation was occasioned by the incident and a recess was spoken of, when it was moved to change the order of business and receive reports for an hour. Mr. Giddings soon returned to consciousness and was conducted to his residence.

The bill granting upwards of 1,500 000 acres of land to Iowa, to aid railroads in that State, was passed by 79 to 59.

Mr. Giddings—having returned to the Hall—concluded his remarks against the Senate's amendment to the Deficiency Appropriation bill. During his remarks he referred to affairs in Kansas, and the Indian war in Oregon, condemning the proceedings in both territories. Adjourned.

SENATE. May 9.

Sundry private bills were passed. The House bill giving 1,500,000 acres of land to Iowa for railroads was read. Mr. Jones (Iowa) asked that it be put on its passage. Mr. Foot moved its reference to the Committee on Public Lands. After debate the bill was passed.

Mr. James, from the Committee on Patents, reported a bill commendatory of the Patent laws, the object being to protect the public against oppressive invalid patents, and the really meritorious inventer from the piracies of dishonest infringers. Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The message of the Senate asking for a third Committee on Conference relative to the disagreeing amendments to the Deficiency bill being under consideration,

Mr. Phelps said he rose to defend the people of Missouri, whom Mr. Giddings yesterday said were traitors and deserved to be hanged.

Mr. Giddings (interrupting) explained, saying his sentiment was that the people of Missouri, by collecting an armed body for the purpose of usurping the government of Kansas, had committed treason, and under the laws and constitution of the United States, they were guilty of the charge.

Mr. Phelps defended the Missourians and said the scenes of bloodshed were properly attributable to the friends of Mr. Giddings. Adjourned till Monday.

SENATE. May 12.

Mr. Crittenden moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the Iowa Railroad bill was passed on Friday.

Mr. Pugh presented a memorial from the Philadelphia, Fort Wayne and Platte River Air Line Railroad Company, praying an amendment of the Iowa Railroad bill, as it interferes, in its present form, with their rights.

After debate on the subject of a reconsideration of the vote by which the Iowa Railroad bill was passed, the subject was postponed.

The President sent to the Senate the following documents relative to hostilities on the Pacific coast.

Gen. Wool, under date of March 20th, says: "The war on Puget's Sound will soon be brought to a close, unless such a thing is prevented by Governor Stevens' determination to carry on the war independently of the United States troops." He adds that the same remarks are applicable to Governor Curry, and that both these Governors appear to be running a race to see who can dip deepest into the public treasury. He continues: In the dense forest of Puget's Sound another Florida War can easily be carried on at an expense of twenty or thirty millions of dollars, and says this will also apply to the mountain region around Puget's Sound Valley. Gen. Wool has no doubt but what he could settle the contest if the Governor would withdraw from it.

Governor Stevens says: "Gen. Wool neglected and refused to send a force for the relief of myself and party, when known to be in imminent danger and believed by those who are best capable of judging, to be coming on to certain death; and this when he had at his command a sufficient force of regular troops. He has refused to sanction the agreement made between Gen. Mason and Major Gains for troops to be sent to my assistance, and ordered them to be disbanded. It was reserved for Oregon volunteers to rescue us. There has been a breach of faith somewhere. I ask for an investigation into the whole matter."

Mr. Cass addressed the Senate on Squater Sovereignty. He said, this term originated relative to the first settlers of California, who, having no Government, made one for themselves, and asked the General Government to recognize it, but they were derisively called "Squatter Sovereigns," as if people who are thrown as walls upon a distant strand, where there were no laws, had no right to make regulations for their own government. They were called Squatter Sovereigns, because they did not own the land.

The use of this cant phrase proceeded from the assumption that there is no sovereignty except landed sovereignty. This reasoning carries us back to the dark ages, when men were considered as nothing; but land, rocks and trees—everything. In connection, he quoted an apologue of Dr. Franklin, who discussed property qualifications in this way: "If the property qualification be fifty dollars, a man who owns a jackass worth that sum has the right to vote to-day, but to-morrow the jackass dies, and the man loses his right to vote. In whom, then, does the right to vote lie—in the man or the jackass?"

This question Mr. Cass said he was not enough of a casuist to determine, but he would proceed to discuss the question of the power of Congress over territories. On this subject he said: If Congress derive the power to make laws for the territories from the ownership of the land, just as soon as the General Government sells the land, there would be no longer any foundation for the power. The right must therefore lie in the people, not in the land. Mr. Cass proceeded to criticise Mr. Daugias' report on Kansas matters, dissenting from many of its conclusions.

It did not allude at all to the true object for which governments were instituted, and contained many ideas that are erroneous in theory and dangerous in practice. The Committee says the organization of a territory is eminently necessary and proper, as the means of enabling the people thereof to form and mold their local and domestic interests and establish a State Government under authority of the Constitution, preparatory to admission into the Union and thus argue the right of Congress to pass the organic act included in the provision which autherizes the admission of new States.

But Mr. Cass thought the doctrine that Congress has power to pass any measure they considered as tending to promote the prosperity of the Territories would lead to false conclusions.

Congress might think the Wilmot proviso would be a good thing, but there would not be any limit to their discretion if they proceeded on such loose grounds.

He also said the bill of the Committee on Territories did not allow the people of Kansas to regulate their affairs as they pleased, hence they did not carry out the doctrine of the Committee relative to that subject. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Speaker announced the first business in order to be Mr. Clingman's resolution for the better protection of American citizens upon the thoroughfares or lines of travel between the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Ocean, authorizing the President to employ the land and naval forces of the country to insure such protection, etc.

Mr. Clingman asked for its postponement to-day, as he understood the information called for relative to the Panama outrages would be sent in to-morrow or next day.

The House passed the bill to enlarge the Post-Office, Court and Custom House buildings in Milwaukee; also the Senate bills appropriating $100,000 to deepen the channel of the St. Mary's river, Michigan, and $330,000 to keep open the channel of the mouth of the Mississippi.

On motion of Mr. Grow, one week, commencing on the fourth Monday of June, was set apart for the consideration of Territorial bills.

Mr. Wheeler asked leave to offer a resolution expressive of sympathy for the Cape Verde sufferers and authorizing the dispatch or a national vessel with such provisions as may be donated.

Pending the motion for the suspension of rules for its introduction, the House adjourned.

SENATE. May 13.

Mr. Cass finished his speech commenced yesterday, and which occupied altogether five hours in delivery

Mr. Clayton, Del., speaking on the question of the Sound dues, contended that this country ought no longer to submit to such an exaction. The treaty with Denmark had been abrogated, and nothing that could now be said or done would restore it.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House adopted the report of the Committee of Conference on the Deficiency bill, from which had been stricken an appropriation of $300,000 for the continuation of the Washington aqueduct.

Two hundred and ten thousand copies of the agricultural portion of the Patent Office report, were ordered printed.

Mr. Evans, of Texas, depicted the fatal consequences to our nationality which must result from the continued agitation of the slavery question, and invoked the South to stand firm in an unbroken phalanx against the invaders of their constitutional rights. Adjourned.

SENATE. May 14.

Mr. Clayton, of Del., said he had seen in the morning newspaper what purported to be an extract from a letter from the British Minister at Washington, dated March 31, 1856.

It will be within your lordship's recollection that Mr. Clayton was informed by Sir Henry Bulwer, before the treaty of 1850 was signed that Ruatan was de jure and de facto a British possession, and Mr. Clayton has, on various occasions since, in conversation with me, stated that he considered Ruatan a British possession as much as Jamaica or any other British West India island.

Mr. Clayton branded this statement as utterly untrue in every particular, and spoke at length to sustain his statement Mr. C. was sustained by other Senators.

The Senate, after debating the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Iowa Land bill was passed, refused to reconsider, and adjoured.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Bennett, of N. Y., from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill granting one million acres to Florida, to aid in the construction of three railroads, embracing five hundred miles in length, and moved the previous question.

In reply to a question, Mr. Bennett said the Committee on Public Lands intend to report similar bills for railroads in Michigan, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Wisconsin, requiring about six million acres.

An unsuccessful motion was made to lay the bill on the table.

The bill passed by a vote of 84 against 57. Adjourned.

Latest News.

PRESIDENT PIERCE sent to the Senate and House of Representatives a message on Thursday, enclosing reports from the Secretary of State, Secretary of the Navy and the Attorney General, respecting the transit across the Istmus and Central American affairs. The documents are very voluminous, containing the correspondence of the Government with Nicaragua and Costa Rica. They were ordered to be printed.

It is reported that Mr. Crampton is to go home. Quite a number of Senators, among them Mr. Clayton, are of opinion that war is inevitable.

By the arrival of the Empire City at New Orleans there is news from the Oregon war. A body of regulars had been defeated by the Indians at Rogue river, with a loss of twenty-eight killed. The capture and destruction of Cascades by the Indians is confirmed. Several whites had been massacred at that place. It was reported that one thousand Indians were approaching Dallas from the north. Several other fights are reported, the whites being generally victorious. In Washington Territory the Indians were attacking the settlements in every direction. Colonel Buchanan had defeated the Indians along the banks of the Rogue river, thus relieving the citizens in that vicinity.

The schooner Minnie Schiffer left New Orleans on the 8th inst., with upwards of 200 men for Walker's assistance, despite bailiffs with their writs of arrests, sequestration and injunction. Bailiffs will have a resting spell—all the world and his wife may go now.

Mortality Statistics of the United States.

WE are indebted to the politeness of J. S. B. De Bow, Esq., the superintendent of census, for the proof-sheet of the mortality tables, which have been prepared with labor and care from the statistics of the census of 1350. There is an immense mas of useful information to be derived from an examination of these tables, and a comparison with the statistics of other countries.

The proportion of deaths to population in the United States gives us the cheering information that our chances of living are better than those of any other people on the globe. Our population being 23,000,000, while the deaths occurring in one year amount to 320,000, the ratio of deaths to population is about 1 1-2 per cent. The same calculation in England shows the ratio to be above two per cent., and in France at nearly three per cent. It would thus appear that, in spite of the gloomy forbodings of those who warn us against our bad habits, neglect of sanitary precautions, and violations of all rules of hygene, we still seem to outlive sturdy John Bull or the soup maigre Frenchman. This is made more forcibly to appear when we deduct the deaths from cholera occurring in the year of the census, (1849,) amounting to 31,000, which would still more reduce the ratio.

The proportions of deaths in the Northern and Southern States show a remarkable difference in favor of our climate and region of country, and we are happy to inform our readers in Virginia and North Carolina that they are destined to outlive their abolition brethren of New York and Ohio to a very considerable extent. The population of Virginia and North Carolina is 2,270,000, and the number of deaths in the census year 29,000, the ratio being thus 1.03 per cent. Of the five millions of people inhabiting the large states of New York and Ohio, nearly 75,000 annually die, the ratio being 1 1-4 per cent.

Yet strange to say, we thus perceive that our climate is so favorable to longevity, we have a larger proportion of medical men than almost any portion of the Union.

The number of persons who reach the age of 100 and upwards, will satisfy us more completely as to the correctnees of the above statement. In Virginia and North Carolina, we observe 638 persons who were 100 and upwards. New York and Ohio, with more than double the population, can show but 146! Again, in the two Southern States, 129 persons died, during the census year, over 100—in the Northern, only 41.—[New York Medical Gazette for May.

Letter Notice.

WE are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

Mormonism in New York.

THE LATTER DAY SAINTS intend holding Meetings in this City every Sunday, at the Broadway House, entrance 116 Grand street, at 10½ o'clock, A. M., 3 P. M., and 7 in the evening.

All who wish to become acquainted with the principles of Salvation, as taught by Apostles and Prophets, ancient and modern, are respectfully invited to attend.

A Card to the Saints.

AS Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

The Standard of Zion.

BY PARLEY P. PRATT.

O Saints, have you seen, o'er yon mountain's proud height,
The day-star of promise so brilliantly beaming?
Its rays shall illumine the world with its light:
And the ensign of Zion exultingly streaming
All nations invite to walk in its light,
And join to maintain the proud standard of right:
The Standard of Zion—O long may it wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

Our motto is peace, and the triumph of right;
And we joyfully hail the Millennial dawning,
When man can emerge from a long dreary night,
And bask in the sunbeams of Zion's bright morning.
The white flag so rare—still floating in air,
Proclaims 'mid the mountains that peace is still there.
Let the Standard of Zion eternally wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

Though earth and its treasures should melt in the fire—
The planets be riven with the trumpet's loud thunder;
The sun-light of heaven wax dim and expire,
And the vail of eternity parted asunder;
Yet firm and unshaken the truth shall remain,
And the heirs of the Priesthood for ever shall reign:
And the Standard of Zion eternally wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

Fillmore, Council Chamber, Jan. 8, 1856.

The Treaty of Peace.

Their Majesties the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Emperor of the French, the Emperor of all the Russias, the King of Sardinia, and the Emperor of the Ottomans, animated by the desire of putting an end to the calamities of war, and wishing to prevent the return of the complications which occasioned it, resolved to come to an understanding with his Majesty the Emperor of Austria as to the bases on which peace might be re-established and consolidated, by securing, through effectual and reciprocal guarantees, the independence and integrity of the Ottoman Empire.

Which Plenipotentiaries assembled in Congress at Paris.

An understanding having been happily established between them, their Majesties the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Emperor of Austria, the Emperor of the French, the Emperor of all the Russias, the King of Sardinia, and the Emperor of the Ottomans, considering that in the interest of Europe, his Majesty the King of Prussia, a signing party to the Convention of the 13th of July, 1841, should be invited to participate in the new arrangements to be adopted, and appreciating the value that the concurrence of his said Majesty would add to a work of general pacification, invited him to send Plenipotentiaries to the Congress.

In consequence, his Majesty the King of Prussia named as his Plenipotentiaries, that is to say:—

The Sieur Otho Theodore Baron de Manteuffel, President of his Council, and his Minister for Foreign Affairs, Knight of the Red Eagle of Prussia of the first class, with oak-leaves, crown and sceptre, Grand Commander of the Order of Hohenzoller, Knight of the Order of St. John of Prussia, Grand Cross of the Order of St. Stephen of Hungary, Knight of the Order of St. Alexander Newski, Grand Cross of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus, and of the Order of the Nichan-Iftihar of Turkey, &c.; and the Sieur Maximilian Frederick Charles Francis, Count of Hatzfeldt Wildenburg-Schoenstein, his actual Privy Councellor, his Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Court of France, Knight of the Order of the Red Eagle of Prussia of the second class, with oak-leaves and badge, Knight of the Cross of Honor of Hohenzollern of the first class, &c.

The Plenipotentiaries, after having exchanged their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:—

ARTICLE I.

From the day of the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty there shall be peace and friendship between her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, his Majesty the Emperor of the French, his Majesty the King of Sardinia, his Imperial Majesty the Sultan, on the one part, and his Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias on the other part, as well as between their heirs and successors, their respective dominions and subjects in perpetuity.

ARTICLE II.

Peace being happily re-established between their said Majesties, the territories conquered or occupied by their armies during the war shall be reciprocally evacuated. Special arrangements shall regulate the mode of the evacuation, which shall be as prompt as possible.

ARTICLE III.

His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias engages to restore to his Majesty the Sultan the town and citadel of Kars, as well as the other parts of the Ottoman territory of which the Russian troops are in possession.

ARTICLE IV.

Their Majesties the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Emperor of the French, the King of Sardinia, and the Sultan, engage to restore to his Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias the towns and ports of Sebastopol, Balaklava, Kamiesch, Eupatoria, Kertch, Yenikale, Kinburn, as well as all other territories occupied by the allied troops.

ARTICLE V.

Their Majesties the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Emperor of the French, the Emperor of all the Russias, the King of Sardinia, and the Sultan, grant a full and entire amnesty to those of their subjects who may have been compromised by any participation whatsoever in the events of the war in favor of the cause of the enemy.

It is expresaly understood that such amnesty shall extend to the subjects of each of the belligerent parties who may have continued during the war to be employed in the service of one of the other belligerents.

ARTICLE VI.

Prisoners of war shall be immediately given up on either side.

ARTICLE VII.

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, his Majesty the Emperor of Austria, his Majesty the Emperor of the French, his Majesty the King of Prussia, his Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, and his Majesty the King of Sardinia, declare the Sublime Porte admitted to participate in the advantages of the public law and system (concert) of Europe. Their Majesties engage, each on his part, to respect the independence and territorial integrity of the Ottoman Empire; guarantee in common the strict observance of that engagement; and will, in consequence, consider any act tending to its violation as a question of general interest.

ARTICLE VIII.

If there should arise between the Sublime Porte and one or more of the other signing Powers any misunderstanding which might endanger the maintenance of their relations, the Sublime Porte and each of such Powers, before having recourse to the use of force, shall afford the other contracting parties the opportunity of preventing such an extremity by means of their mediation.

ARTICLE IX.

His Imperial Majesty the Sultan having, in his constant solicitude for the welfare of his subjects, issued a firman which, while ameliorating their condition without distinction of religion or of race, records his generous intentions towards the Christian population of his empire, and wishing to give a further proof of his sentiments in that respect, has resolved to communicate to the contracting parties the said firman, emanating spontaneously from his sovereign will. The contracting Powers recognize the high value of this communication. It is clearly understood that it cannot, in any case, give to the said Powers the right to interfere, either collectively or separately, in the relations of his Majesty the Sultan with his subjects, nor in the internal administration of his empire.

ARTICLE X.

The convention of the 13th of July, 1841, which maintains the ancient rule of the Ottoman Empire relative to the closing of the Straits of the Bosphorus and of the Dardanelles, has been revised by common consent. The act concluded for that purpose, and in conformity with that principle, between the high contracting parties, is and remains annexed to the present treaty, and shall have the same force and validity as if it formed an integral part thereof.

ARTICLE XI.

The Black Sea is neutralized; its waters and its ports, thrown open to the mercantile marine of every nation, are formally and in perpetuity interdicted to the flag of war, either of the Powers possessing its coasts or of any other Power, with the exceptions mentioned in articles 14 and 19 of the present treaty.

ARTICLE XII.

Free from any impediment, the commerce in the ports and waters of the Black Sea shall be subject only to regulations of health, customs, and police, framed in a spirit favorable to the developement of commercial transactions. In order to afford to the commercial and maritime interests of every nation the security which is desired, Russia and the Sublime Porte will admit Consuls into their ports situated upon the coast of the Black Sea, in conformity with the principles of international law.

ARTICLE XIII.

The Black Sea being neutralized according to the terms of Article II, the maintenance or establishment upon its coast of military maritime arsenals becomes alike unnecessary and purposeless; in consequence, His Majesty the Emperor of All the Russias and His Imperial Majesty the Sultan engage not to establish or maintain upon that coast any military-maritime arsenal.

ARTICLE XIV.

Their Majesties the Emperor of All the Russias and the Sultan having concluded a convention for the purpose of settling the force and the number of light vessels necessary for the service of their coasts, which they reserve to themselves to maintain in the Black Sea, that convention is annexed to the present treaty, and shall have the same force and validity as if it formed an integral part thereof. It cannot be either annulled or modified without the assent of the Powers signing the present treaty.

ARTICLE XV.

The act of the Congress of Vienna having established the principles intended to regulate the navigation of rivers which separate or traverse different States, the contracting Powers stipulate among themselves that those principles shall in future be equally applied to the Danube and its mouths. They declare that this arrangement henceforth forms a part of the public law of Europe, and take it under their guarantee. The navigation of the Danube cannot be subjected to any impediment or charge not expressly provided for by the stipulations contained in the following articles; in consequence, there shall not be levied any toll founded solely upon the fact of the navigation of the river, nor any duty upon the goods which may be on board of vessels. The regulations of police and of quarantine to be established for the safety of the States separated or traversed by that river shall be so framed as to facilitate as much as possible, the passage of vessels. With the exception of such regulations, no obstacle whatever shall be opposed to free navigation.

ARTICLE XVI.

With the view to carry out the arrangements of the preceding article, a commission, in which Great Britain, Austria, France, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey shall each be represented by one delegate, shall be charged to designate and cause to be executed the works necessary below Isatcha, to clear the mouths of the Danube, as well as the neighboring parts of the sea, from the sands and other impediments which obstruct them, in order to put that part of the river and the said parts of the sea in the best possible state for navigation. In order to cover the expenses of such works, as well as of the establishments intended to secure and facilitate the navigation at the mouths of the Danube, fixed duties, of a suitable rate, settled by the commission by a majority of votes, may be levied, on the express condition that in this respect, as in every other, the flags of all nations shall be treated on the footing of perfect equality.

ARTICLE XVII.

A commission shall be established, and shall be composed of delegates of Austria, Bavaria, the Sublime Porte and Wurtemberg (one for each of those Powers), to whom shall be added commissions from the three Danubian Principalities, whose nomination shall have been approved by the Porte. This commission, which shall be permanent:—1st. Shall prepare regulations of navigation and river police. 2d. Shall remove the impediments, of whatever nature they may be, which still prevent the application to the Danube of the arrangements of the Treaty of Vienna. 3d. Shall order and cause to be executed the necessary works throughout the whole course of the river. And 4. Shall after the dissolution of the European Commission, see to maintaining the mouths of the Danube and the neighboring parts of the sea in a navigable state.

ARTICLE XVIII.

It is understood that the European Commission shall have completed its task, and that the River Commission shall have finished the works described in the preceding article, under Nos. 1 and 2, within the period of two years. The signing Powers assembled in conference, having been informed of that fact, shall, after having placed it on record, pronounce the dissolution of the European Commission, and from that time the permanent River Commission shall enjoy the same powers as those with which the European Commission shall have until then been invested.

ARTICLE XIX.

In order to insure the execution of the regulations which shall have been established by common agreement, in conformity with the principles above declared, each of the contracting Powers shall have the right to station at all times two light vessels at the mouths of the Danube.

ARTICLE XX.

In exchange for the towns, ports and territories enumerated in article 4 of the present treaty, and in order more fully to secure the freedom of the navigation of the Danube, his Majesty the Emperor of All the Russias consents to the rectification of his frontier in Bessarabia. The new frontier shall begin from the Black Sea, one kilometre to the east of Lake Bourna Sola, shall run perpendicularly to the Val de Trajan, pass to the south of Bolgrad, ascend the course of the river Yalpuck to the height of Saratsika, and terminate at Katamori, on the Pruth. Above that point the old frontier between the two empires shall not undergo any modification. Delegates of the contracting Powers shall fix, in its details, the line of the new frontier.

ARTICLE XXI.

The territory ceded by Russia shall be annexed to the Principality of Moldavia under the suzerainty of the Sublime Porte. The inhabitants of that territory shall enjoy the rights and privileges secured to the Principalities; and during the space of three years they shall be permitted to transfer their domicile elsewhere, disposing freely of their property.

ARTICLE XXII.

The Principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia shall continue to enjoy, under the suzerainty of the Porte and under the guarantee of the contracting Powers, the privileges and immunities of which they are in possession. No exclusive protection shall be exercised over them by any of the guaranteeing Powers. There shall be no separate right of interference in their internal affairs.

ARTICLE XXIII.

The Sublime Porte engages to preserve to the said Principalities an independant and national administration, as well as full liberty of worship, of legislation, of commerce and of navigation. The laws and statutes at present in force shall be revised. In order to establish a complete agreement in regard to such revision, a special commission, as to the composition of which the high contracting Powers will come to an understanding among themselves, shall assemble without delay at Bucharest, together with a commissioner of the Sublime Porte. The business of this commission shall be to investigate the present state of the Principalities, and to purpose bases of their future organization.

ARTICLE XXIV.

His Majesty the Sultan promises to convoke immediately in each of the two provinces a Divan ad hoc, composed in such a manner as to represent most closely the interests of all classes of society. These divans shall be called upon to express the wishes of the people in regard to the definite organization of the Principalities. An instruction from the Congress shall regulate the relations between the commission and these divans.

ARTICLE XXV.

Taking into consideration the opinion expressed by the two Divans, the commission shall transmit without delay to the present seat of conferences the result of its own labors. The final agreement with the suzerain Power shall be recorded in a convention to be concluded at Paris between the high contracting parties; and a hatti-sherif, in conformity with the stipulations of the convention, shall constitute definitively the organization of those provinces placed thenceforward under the collective guarantee of all the signing Powers.

ARTICLE XXVI.

It is agreed that there shall be in the Principalities a national armed force, organized with the view to maintain the security of the interior and to insure that of the frontiers. No impediment shall be opposed to the extraordinary measures of defence which, by agreement with the Sublime Porte, they may be called upon to take, in order to repel any external aggression.

ARTICLE XXVII.

If the internal tranquillity of the Principalities should be menaced or compromised, the Sublime Porte shall come to an understanding with the other contracting Powers in regard to the measures to be taken for maintaining or re-establishing legal order. No armed intervention can take place without previous agreement between those Powers.

ARTICLE XXVIII.

The Principality of Servia shall continue to hold of the Sublime Porte, in conformity with the Imperial Hats which fix and determine its rights and immunities, placed henceforward under the collective guarantee of the contracting Powers.

In consequence, the said Principality shall preserve its independent and national administration, as well as full liberty of worship, of legislation, of commerce, and of navigation.

ARTICLE XXIX.

The right of garrison of the Sublime Porte, as stipulated by anterior regulations, is maintained. No armed intervention can take place in Servia without previous agreement between the high contracting Powers.

ARTICLE XXX.

His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias and his Majesty the Sultan maintain in its integrity the state of their possessions in Asia, such as it legally existed before the rupture.

In order to prevent all local dispute the line of frontier shall be verified, and if necessary, rectified, without any prejudice, as regards territory, being sustained by either party.

For this purpose a mixed commission, composed of two Russian Commissioners, two Ottoman Commissioners, one English Commissioner and one French Commissioner, shall be sent to the spot immediately after the re-establishment of diplomatic relations between the court of Russia and the Sublime Porte. Its labors shall be completed within the period of eight months after the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty.

ARTICLE XXXI.

The territories occupied during the war by the troops of their Majesties, the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Emperor of Sardinia, according to the terms of the Conventions signed at Constantinople on the 12th of March, 1854, between Great Britain, France and the Sublime Porte; on the 14th of June, of the same year, between Austria and the sublime Porte; and on the 15th of March, 1855, between Sardinia and the Sublime Porte, shall be evacuated as soon as possible after the exchange of the ratifications of the present treaty. The periods and the means of execution shall form the object of an arrangement between the Sublime Porte and the Powers whose troops have occupied its territory.

ARTICLE XXXII.

Until the treaties or conventions which existed before the war between the belligerent Powers have been either renewed or replaced by new acts, commerce of importation or of exportation shall take place reciprocally on the footing of the regulations in force before the war; and in all other matters their subjects shall be respectively treated upon the footing of the most favored nation.

ARTICLE XXXIII.

The convention concluded this day between their Majesties the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Emperor of the French, on the one part, and his Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias on the other part, respecting the Aland Islands, is and remains annexed to the present treaty, and shall have the same force and validity as if it formed a part thereof.

ARTICLE XXXIV.

The present treaty shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Paris in the space of four weeks, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Grammar in Rhyme.

WE advise every little grammarian just entering on Murray, Brown, or any of the thousand grammars in use, to commit to memory the following easy lines, and then they never need to mistake a part of speech:

1. Three little words you often see
   Are Articles—a, an, and the.
2. A Noun's the name of anything,
   As school or garden, hoop or swing.
3. Adjectives tell the kind of Noun,
   As great, small, pretty, white or brown.
4. Instead of Nouns the Pronouns stand—
   Her head, his face, your arm, my hand.
5. Verbs tell something being done—
   To read, count, sing, jump or run.
6. How things are done the Adverbs tell—
   As slowly, quickly, ill or well.
7. Conjunctions join the words together—
   As men and women, wind or weather.
8. The Preposition stands before
   A Noun, as in or through a door.
9. The Interjection shows surprise,
   As oh! how pretty; ah! how wise.

The whole are called Nine Parts of Speech,
Which Reading, Writing, Speaking teach.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1856.

Utah.

As the session of Congress advances, proportionately public interest is increasing on the position of the Territory of Utah, and her demands for admission into the federal compact of sovereign States. A few weeks since we published the report of a Convention held at Cove, Beaver Co., U. T., for the purpose of sending delegates to the Territorial Convention that was to be held at Great Salt Lake City on the 16th of March last. Of this meeting we have yet no report, but we may safely say that the Convention has been held, and the delegates have appointed their representatives to Congress; in fact, we expect every day to learn of their emerging from the wilderness and stepping into the cars for Washington city. Since the publication of the Beaver county Convention report in THE MORMON and other city papers, we have noticed that Utah has been a subject of interest throughout the Union. In such a day as ours, when Kansas, Nicaragua, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, British enlistment and a host of other important affairs are on the tapis, it would be pure vanity to suppose that Utah had the best claim to first attention. We are amply satisfied, however, with the attention her claims have had, even though we cannot say that "all the world and the rest of mankind" have been, and are, writing about her. The generality of articles that we have seen, devoted to the demands of Utah, have almost universally admitted that the "Mountain Gall" was entitled to take her place with her thirty-one elder sisters.

The Chicago Weekly Democratic Press of the 17th inst. on this subject says:

"Leaving out of view the social peculiarities of Mormon life, it is very proper that the people of Utah should claim admission into the Union. In the first place, we presume that the Territory embraces the requisite population, and the past history of the people demonstrates that they possess sufficient energy and capacity to manage their own affairs after their own fashion. Going there only a few years since in the condition of peeled and hunted fugitives, they have built up rich and populous communities, a city of very considerable importance, and laid the foundation of several important manufactures. Utah also occupies a peculiarly isolated position, being cut off from the aid of white settlements, while it is at the same time exposed to the incursions of the Indians, and for this reason stands more in need of State organization than some other Territories not so far removed from the National Capitol."

The writer in the Press admits then that Utah's sons have qualities and capacities, and she a peculiar geographical position, to entitle her to immediate recognition as another star under E Pluribus Unum. To this conclusion every well-informed person must come; indeed there is no spot of ground over which waves the 'stars and stripes,' where self-government is more necessary, and where capacity for self-government is more apparent, than in the Territo y of Utah.

Justice to the writer we have quoted requires us to state, that while he has written so favorably as a politician, his religious feelings are wounded—he is opposed to Polygamy, and thinks, what we regret for his sake, that on account of that "peculiar institution" the inhabitants of Utah may well be denied the rights he claims for them. We are frequently at a loss to understand why faith is linked with politics when Utah is the subject of conversation. We are not posted on the instructions the coming representatives received from the Convention held at Great Salt Lake City, but we venture to affirm that they are not sent to Congress to require Utah's admission into the Union on account of the religious faith of the inhabitants of that Territory requiring the protection of a State Government.

The editor of the Press asks: "Is Polygamy, a patriarchal institution, having its origin in the earliest and rudest states of human society, and only now lingering on the earth among savages, barbarians and Mormons, to be reckoned 'Republican?'" Certainly not. It has nothing to do with Republicanism or any other form of Government. This appending of matrimony—a thing entirely social and religious—to State Constitutions and State politics is entirely new, and has recently been discovered by some of our modern theo-politico reformers. Polygamy has been practised under various forms of government. It has never heretofore been considered a State question, further than municipal regulations are concerned. It has likewise been tolerated by Jews, Mahomedans and Christians, of course, as a social rite or institution. Milton, the great English poet, was a strenuous advocate of scriptural polygamy, as well as many eminent protestant divines; and Martin Luther, the great originator and father of Protestantism, married a second wife to "the most serene Prince and Lord Philip, Landgrave of Hesse, Count of Catzenlembogen," &c. The christian missionaries in Calcutta admit it in their churches; they defend its practice in their periodicals, and strenuously advocate its scriptural origin; whilst Christian England governs 100,000,000 Polygamists, and regulates and makes laws for their protection. We look upon it strictly as a religious rite, having to do both with time and eternity.

Marriage, by Webster, is called "a contract both civil and religious." That it has been universally so considered is a matter of history; it was so among the ancient Patriarchs and the Jewish kings, as well as by both Protestants and Catholics. Henry VIII., when he wanted to get a divorce, appealed to the Pope of Rome, and, not until that church dignitary refused his application, did he use his regal power! When the landgrave in Germany wanted another wife, though a reformer, he applied to Martin Luther, the minister, who, after consulting other church dignitaries, granted his request. It is true there have been laws passed in relation to this matter among all nations, but it has never been considered a Constitutional or State question. Why we, above all others, should so consider it, is matter of surprise, and is either done from want of reflection, or, if not, it certainly manifests rather a meddlesome disposition with other people's matters, which is unbecoming us as republicans, particularly under our free, enlightened and liberal institutions. In different nations they have had what are termed left-handed marriages for the healing of the consciences of corrupt men. In both Protestant and Catholic countries prostitution is licensed. It is becoming a question with many, whether it would not be well to do the same here. All these things we oppose and repudiate; we detest the abominable corruption that everywhere abounds in the United States. Others do not; they prefer their stews, houses of assignation and herds of cyprians. We detest them, but we consider it their own affair; if they love these abominations, they must wallow in them; we leave it to God and their consciences. We think we have the same right to our opinions. Without faith in God, or Mormonism, we would think Polygamy decidedly preferable, and more honorable. We again repeat, it is not a State question, and has nothing to do with a republican or any other form of State government.

Treaty of Peace.

On our first page we publish the Treaty of Peace between the late belligerents in the East. There is a good deal of introductory paraphernalia about Grand Crosses and diamond portraits, black, red and white eagles, and of course the Garter, which will be but little interesting to some; others may like to look at the plumage. Of all men on the earth, ambassadors believe there is something in a name. From the Treaty, it will be seen that the Turkish territory is to be evacuated without delay by the armies of all the other European powers. The towns and ports of Sebastopol, Balaklava, Kamiesch, Eupatoria and Kertch, are to be restored to the Emperor of Russia, and the Turkish provinces in Asia, at present occupied by the Russians, are to be given back to the Sultan. Both the Asiatic and European lines of demarcation between Russia and Turkey are to be rectified, and the consequence of this will be an acquisition of territory by Turkey, on its Moldavian frontier, at the expense of Russia. The Principalities are guaranteed all their existing privileges under the sovereignty of the Porte, and Russia abandons all claim to exclusive protection or right of interference in the Principalities.

As a guarantee for the permanent maintenance of this arrangement, there are stipulations in virtue of which Russia and Turkey are mutually bound "neither to construct nor preserve any military-maritime arsenal on the Black Sea coast," and to restrict their naval armaments to a few "light vessels for the service of their coast." In addition to these provisions the Black Sea is thrown open to the mercantile marine of all nations; consuls are to be admitted into the ports of the Black Sea; "trade in all the ports of the Black Sea shall only be subjected to regulations of health, customs, and police, conceived in a spirit favorable to the development of commercial transactions;" Russia, by the re-adjustment of her Bessarabian frontier, is removed from the banks of the Danube, and deprived of all power to obstruct the navigation of that river; and the navigation of the Danube is to be rendered as free to all nations as sanitary considerations will permit. Lastly, "each of the contracting Powers shall have a right at all times to station two light-vessels at the mouth of the Danube."

To the articles of the Treaty have been added numerous conventions and protocols, tending to set affairs in such a position as will in future prevent collision. Several commissions have been instituted to see the lines of demarcation rectified, and the necessary steps taken to have the Danube navigable. Everything is to be consummated before the expiration of two years.

To Friends at a Distance.

Our thanks are due to friends in Glasgow, Dublin and the Isle of Man for the regular file of papers sent to our office from those places. Many others send us papers and clippings for our notice, which favors we likewise beg to acknowledge. Clippings sent to us should have the name and date of the paper from which they are taken.

To the Saints in the Eastern States.

BELOVED BRETHREN:

It becomes necessary, from time to time, to address you in regard to our holy religion, and the principles of eternal truth. Situated as we are in this city, and publishing a paper containing every variety of news, and devoted to the general interests of the Church, we are sometimes apt to pass over the most sacred duties pertaining to the general instructions of the Saints, and their social, moral, and religious obligations; we are the more apt to do this, supposing that the Saints generally understand their duties, and that where in this they may be deficient it will be made clear to them in the teaching of the Elders, at their various places of religious meeting. Our experience, however, furnishes us with sufficient evidence that it is not unnecessary, from time to time, to stir up the minds of the Saints, and that whilst mixing in the whirl of the giddy and thoughtless world, they are too apt to forget the "rock from whence they were hewn and the pit from whence they were dug." And whilst some who understand well their duties grow careless, others again who do not understand them, and never did, need teaching in regard to their several duties as Saints, and the responsibilities that individually devolve upon them.

Many of the Saints in these eastern States are persons who have emigrated from different parts of Europe, some of whom have been well instructed in regard to the doctrines, ordinances, principles, theories, views, duties, hopes and requirements of said Church, and its organization and priesthood; others seem to understand very little about it, or, if they do understand, their faculties are benumbed and paralyzed, and they seem to have forgot God and their high calling's glorious hopes, and to be merging too much into the spirit and feeling of the world, the which Mormonism at one time had delivered them from. This spirit seems to be too general among all, both Elders, Priests, Teachers, Deacons and private members. The object of this article is to lead the brethren to reflection, and, although we are decidedly opposed to unnatural excitements, hasty revivals and sudden changes, yet is it absolutely necessary that we begin to reflect upon our position, awaken up to a sense of our duty, appreciate more fully the blessings of our holy religion, magnify our calling, and honor our God in all our doings. We have noticed among the Saints a palpable carelessness about attending to meetings, as though it seemed almost a trouble to them. We have also discovered the same principle among the elders and other officers of the church, in regard to duties devolving upon them. Instead of manifesting that lively, animated, quick, energetic principle that the spirit of God inspires men with, and the ardent desire to roll on His kingdom, many seem to act as though they were confering a favor upon somebody else by performing their duties; or if not, they seem to shirk their responsibilities, have become weary in well doing, and manifest by their acts as though they were extremely desirous to know how little they can do and retain their standing in the Church, keep the fellowship of their brethren, and secure the favor of God. This feeling and principle may do for the world; but it is not Mormonism, neither is it the gospel of Jesus Christ, and if persevered in only for a short time, without any actual transgression, will lead you to where it led the Church of Laodicea, to whom the angel of the Lord said, "I know thy works that thou art neither cold nor hot; I would that thou wert cold or hot; so then because thou art lukewarm and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." That church like many Elders and Saints trusted too much in what they had been, what they had done, and what blessings they had obtained, instead of what they were then doing, and living to their religion. They said they were "rich and increased in goods, and had need of nothing," and knew not that they were wretched, miserable, poor, blind and naked. They were counselled to "buy of the Lord gold tried in the fire, that they might be rich, white raiment, that they might be clothed, and that the shame of their nakedness might not appear." It seems they were poor, miserable and naked, and did not know it; and he advised them "to annoint their eyes with eye salve, that they might see" their miserable deformity and ugliness. This may be quite a lesson for many of the saints in the Eastern States, who presume too much to past experience, and are dwindling down to the most puerile, sickly, diminutive state of littleness, inanity and inability; weak, staggering, sickly, drooping, dying, losing all their vitality and energy, while with bloated pomposity, they talk about the greatness of their religion, and vainly imagine themselves its most potent supporters and representatives. We are reminded of a passage in Burns:

"Oh that some power the gift would gie us,
To see ourselves as others see us,
It wou'd frae many a blunder free us,

The religion of Mormonism is not a thing that we can dispense with and resume at pleasure; that we can lay aside (as many other professors do) with our Sunday clothes, and serve the devil the rest of the time; it is an every day affair; a matter that concerns us throughout all time and all eternity. It

"Demands our soul, our life, our all."

We would remind the brethren of one thing, that whatever their views may be about God and his cause, He is just as independent of them, and can do without their services as they can be of Him, or do without His care, protection and blessing. There is such a thing as grieving the Spirit of the Lord, and causing it to depart. There is such a thing as "beginning in the spirit, and ending in the flesh." There is such a thing as making a "shipwreck of faith and of a good conscience."

Mormonism is a great and eternal truth revealed to the human family; it is the everlasting gospel restored in all its fullness, richness, blessings, power, and glory. It was manifested by revelation; by the opening of the heavens; the ministering of angels, the restoration of the holy priesthood, and by the power of God. It is a system that is to redeem man and the earth; that will lead man back to his God; teach him the principles of eternal life; learn him how to be saved and to be a savior; develope the mysteries of the eternal world; show him the past, the present, and the future; learn him how to save himself, his progenitors, and posterity; teach him his destiny, and show him his relationship to God, angels, spirits, man, to time, and eternity. It is a great, comprehensive, exalted, living, eternal principle, embracing all truth, extending throughout space, and circumscribing all worlds. It is now in its embryo; it is not known by the world; it is very little comprehended by the Saints. True and incontrovertable in its first principles, it has defied the narrow, self-created dogmas of ignorant men, and has unflinchingly stood the shock of all the conflicting elements brought in array against it. Being eternal truth, it has been and is invulnerable to error, which has always quailed before its lucid, vigorous, self-evident axioms. Of this some boast; but this is just the threshhold; before us lays an expansive field of rich, inestimable treasures, wide as the universe, valuable as the treasures of the gods, and durable as eternity; compared with which Golconda's wealth, Indies' pearls, and the Elysian fields dwindle into sordid matter, gew-gaw baubles and aerial ugliness, which both dogs and angels would discard; while if faithful the rich blessings of eternal truth and eternal associations will grow, increase, and expand in us continually; learning and being learned, teaching and being taught, receiving and communicating, rising, refining, elevating, expanding, increasing, and progressing among the Gods throughout a wide, expansive, enduring eternity.

Having just learned our A. B. C., shall we then stop on the threshold, emptily boast of our education, quietly fold our arms and egotistically talk of our knowledge? What do we know of God and eternity? What we do know of the first principles has been communicated by revelation; we have been the recipients, not the discoverers. It was a revelation of principles, that, although so simple, none of the world knew, and of which we, among the rest, were ignorant. If we could not understand the first principles without revelation, how can we comprehend the greater things yet to be developed? Why did you leave your homes? You will answer to go to Zion. For what purpose? To be taught of God, if you understand yourselves; if you do not, it is time you did. The Lord said years ago, "I will take them two of a family and one of a city and bring them to Zion, and give them pastors after mine own heart that shall feed them with knowledge and understanding." Why are presiding officers sent out? To assist the Saints in their gathering, to teach them their duties in their several places of location, as well as to attend to other matters. To whom have you been indebted hitherto for the information you have received of God and eternity? You yourselves must be the judges. Whilst you are here, then, on the way to Zion, don't be so besotted and benumbed in your feelings as to forget God, to forget your duties and responsibilities, and lose sight of your high calling's glorious hope; but reflect upon your position, think of your destiny, consider that your progenitors, posterity and hopes for time and eternity depend, in a great measure, upon your own acts. You have buckled on the armor, shrink not from the conflict, but valiantly, courageoualy and vigorously prosecute your duties, that you may magnify your calling and secure for yourselves and posterity an eternal inheritance.

Never be ashamed of your religion before man, it is a pearl of great price that the world in general know not the value of, and therefore the more to be appreciated by those who do in a measure comprehend it. Confess the Lord before men—I do not mean that you should be eternally ranting about your religion and making yourselves troublesome—but never deny it; especially let me exhort you to live your religion—be honest, be diligent, be kind, be courteous; don't neglect your family duties, but call upon God for his blessing on you, on your families, on the Church, on all good men; be benevolent and charitable to all; attend church, and don't feel it a trouble to wait upon the Lord. Fulfill all the requirements made of you, and manifest kindness to your brethren, not in word only, but in deed. As fast as you can get means, go to Zion; until you can do that, take hold with a cheerful hand to roll on the work of the Lord, wherever you are, or whatsoever position you may occupy, both by your influence, means, and time, that you may be found in the path of duty, and receive rich blessings from the hands of God; that in blessing others you may be blessed, and that in doing good you may receive good. Let it be your emulation every day to strive how much, and not how little good you can do.

I have called upon all the Saints in and about New York to renew their covenants and commence afresh in the good cause. I hope all will attend to it; that their spirits, feelings, and hopes may be renewed; that they may start with fresh energy, and that by the vivifying and invigorating influences of the spirit of God they may be renewed and quickened; that Mormonism may no longer be a dead letter, but that all being baptized into one baptism, they may forget all their follies, walk together in newness of life, secure the rich blessings of the spirit of God, prosecute with energy their various callings, live under the smile and approbation of Heaven while here, and that when Providence opens their way to gather, they can, with the approbation of their brethren and the blessings of Israel's God, go to Zion with songs of everlasting joy upon their heads.

JOHN TAYLOR.

England and the United States.

At the moment we went to press last week war was inevitable between the two countries—so almost everybody thought and said. Despatches had been received from Lord Clarendon refusing to recall Mr. Crampton and the three English consuls at New York, Philadelphia and Cincinnati. Probably the countenances of the Cabinet at Washington, after a hurried glance at the despatches, wore an uncomfortable aspect, and that was more than enough for some to ply the wires to alarm the whole nation from Maine to Missouri. The correspondence of Lord Clarendon with Mr. Dallas, dated April 30, is now published. Lord Clarendon does really refuse the recall of the minister and consuls, but his letter is, as a cotemporary remarks, "an olive branch, green, and full of odorous blossoms." Lord Clarendon seems in his letter to have profited so much by his recent lengthy association with peace-makers, that a friend might expect him soon to don the colorless coat and the broad brim. This was probably the cause of uneasiness at Washington—the man didn't want to fight. Contradictory rumors have been published regarding Mr. Crampton's dismissal from Washington; the press, however, this morning (Thursday) seems almost unanimous in concluding he will shortly receive the hint to vacate his residence for another, whose presence will be more agreeable. On the consequences of such a step opinion is widely different. As we said last week, if some folks will only keep cool till after the Cincinnati Convention, we don't think any person need fear the bombardment of New York.

Kansas.

This week the reports from this Territory are all warlike. At other times some papers have been talking of war there, while others cried peace, but we believe both sides are agreed this week that men's passions are hurrying them on to the use of the rifle, revolver and bowie-knife, and that war is inevitable. The steamer that arrived last at St. Louis from St. Joseph, brings intelligence that large numbers had responded to the proclamations of Governor Shannon and the United States Marshal, and a battle was anticipated shortly. Six hundred men were assembled at Lecompton, and four hundred at Franklin. A large company were to leave Kickapoo on Saturday for Lecompton, with two cannon. They are all well armed and provisioned. It is reported that Ex-Governor Reeder succeeded in making his escape, carrying away with him a considerable amount of funds belonging to friends. The Vigilance Committee of Kansas City on Saturday took off from the steamer Arabia a large field-piece consigned to Lawrence.

The Past Winter in Utah.

From private letters to ourself as well as by Utah correspondence in other papers, we learn that the inhabitants of that Territory have been in strait places during the past winter and spring. The almost total destruction of last year's crops by grasshoppers greatly diminished the staff of life. An unusually severe winter has likewise hindered the cattle from finding necessary pasture, which has resulted in considerable losses. Gov. Young, however, informs us that he had full confidence in the inhabitants finding enough to supply their wants, if they were obedient to counsel. The excellent instructions which the Presidency have given through the Deseret News, on the assidious cultivation of the ground, and the economical use of seed grain justify the hope of an early and abundant harvest. Notwithstanding these losses, and what other people would call insurmountable difficulties, we have the fullest assurance from past experience and knowledge of the industrial habits of our brethren, that they'll walk through these dispensations of Providence with confiding hearts, that all is well. Mormons are not easily scared.

Information Wanted.

Information is wanted of SAMUEL PLUMB, from Nottingham, England. He came to this country in January, 1855, and was last heard from in Oregon county, Mo. We shall be obliged if any of our brethren would interest themselves to find out and send us information about him. His wife and family have come to this country by means that he sent them to England, and now they have no knowledge of his whereabouts or whether he is alive or dead. Early attention to this will oblige all concerned.

San Bernardino Stake.

Elder D. M. Thomas writes us from San Bernardino, Cal., March 26th: "A Conference was held here recently; several Elders were appointed on missions to Australia and the Society Islands; some likewise to labor in the Golden State."

Mr. Magraw at Washington.

We are informed by letter from Washington, that Mr. Magraw's bill that we published lately has passed the House.

Change of Address

The Millennial Star Office is now at 42 Islington, Liverpool.

On 25th August last, Thomas Fryer, their son was born at Hermann aforesaid, and died at Fremd Creek near that town on 15th January last.

FOR THE MORMON.

Forgiveness.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

It must be a matter of the greatest interest and importance to every intelligent being, to acquire a correct knowledge of sound moral principles, so that his actions and habits may be the reflex of a pure, enlightened, noble soul, and thereby secure him the blessings of true felicity for time and eternity; hence it behoves man, when the gates of knowledge open unto him, to secure those mental or moral treasures he requires.

Owing to our weak and frail nature, we are all more or less liable to err, to do wrong, to disturb the harmony of moral laws, consequently we want our fellow beings, not to take a microscopic view of our faults and weaknesses, but to forbear with us, to correct us with kindness, and, above all, to forgive us, showing thus, that their gentle affections towards us are not weakened or obliterated by our frailties. Forgiveness—how that word makes every fibre of the heart thrill with joy and thanksgiving to that great, sublime Intelligence, from whose fountain that precious principle is emanating and becoming implanted in the human mind. Forgiveness, oh Forgiveness, cries the guilty, when writhing under the agonies of moral pain, to him from whose lips yes would be life, and no would be death.

We learn principles simply by experience, by distinguishing the difference and contrasting one with another. For instance, to speak parenthetically, a rich man will realize the blessing of riches only by poverty; the man in the full enjoyment of health appreciates the same only by sickness; the blind will understand the blessing of light only by having their sight restored. We could follow still further this metaphysical question—suffice it to say, that empiricism is the best school for a moral neophyte, and the more severe the lesson the better it is retained in the mind. So in relation to forgiveness, in order to understand fully its important bearings, we must have more or less passed through the maze of earthly tribulations; we must have in some degree transgressed moral laws; our minds must have in some measure been darkened by the gloomy phantoms of corruption, and vice and crime haunted us like hideous spectres; we must have felt the lash or rod of a stern, cruel punishment; we must have moved in a moral miasma, excluded from the benign, salutary influence of virtuous society; our benighted visions must have seen something of grinning death and destruction; and thus an outcast of the world, but still an image of our Heavenly Father. We long, if a spark of that divine parentage remains in us, for deliverance out of that moral destruction; we are willing to do anything to compensate the loss of reputation, to see the escutcheon of our name again stainless; then Forgiveness, arising like the sun from the dew-dropping chambers of the Orient, and throwing its soft, beautiful effulgence upon us, and shedding forth the light of Heavenly indulgence and pardon upon our souls, heals all moral wounds like a precious balm. Night vanishes from our minds, and the day of a better, happier future dawns once more upon us; it fills the broken heart with inexpressible delight; new blood seems to run in our veins; we are morally born again; it seems as if Angels from celestial spheres had, with their silver voices, conveyed to us the glad tidings of our regeneration.

Yes, Forgiveness, is the medium of moral and physical salvation; it banishes all notes of woe and misery; its soothing and cheering influence fills the heart with new hope, courage and determination, to stride once more the path of virtue and rectitude, the path leading to pure, unalloyed happiness.

To see a sinner brought back through the principle of Forgiveness, to a good, honorable position in society, is pleasing to the philanthropic mind; it makes us rejoice; and if the visions of celestial worlds were unfolded unto us, we would see angels weep for joy at the salvation of one of their lost kindred spirits. It is a historical fact, that much more has been accomplished by forgiving wrongs, than by their atonement through heavy punishment. A gentle, kind, forgiving word will generally touch the right chord of the heart and completely eradicate from the mind every feeling of anger and rage. The various wheels of the machine of society would move onward without clashing or confusion; the happiness which would flow from the uniform and harmonious operations of the human family, would remove the misery which must inevitably ensue in the present state of society, and would give birth to all the ramifications of moral, noble actions. The depravity of the world is to a great extent due to the intellectual views of the untutored ranks of society being so very limited through the fault of the different governments, so that the evil infects the higher classes of mankind equally with the lower, though among the former it is sometimes varnished over with a fairer exterior. The Saints, who are engaged in a work of eternal salvation, where they are not held in mental and physical vassalage, but have full scope for a development of their intellectual and physical powers, ought to lay a particular stress upon their mental improvement, and strive with all their might to rise from the narrow range of thought to the sublime and expansive views of intelligent cosmopolites; their minds ought to be continually drawn out in the contemplation of this great work, and by realizing a mighty portion of the Divine Spirit, the power of anticipating the magnificent and sublime Future would enable them, instead of speaking evil, taking revenge, to distinguish between right and wrong, to forgive one another, and thus to make perpetual advances in knowledge and felicity. Luke says, chap. ii. v. 34—"Take heed to yourselves; if thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him; and if he trespass against thee seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent; thou shalt forgive him." Acts ch. vii. 59, 60—"And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep."

From the above we learn that Forgiveness is one of the principal virtues of a saint, therefore control your irascible passions, and other mental endowments, and before you bound like an India-rubber ball, consider first, that Mormonism is nothing else but the medium of preparing your minds and bodies gradually for celestial worlds; from it you receive precept upon precept, line upon line, here a little and there a little, and God wants you to act consonantly to the principles of intelligence. Reason first before you allow your passions to run away with your common sense; you want to improve in the scale of intellectual existence; you are desirous of realizing the knowledge, power and glory of celestial beings—in fact you desire to become Gods. Well, supposing you were in that grand position, and would allow yourselves to be acted upon by such petty, narrow-contracted low feelings, as revenge, hatred, spite, malice, as here below, and speak as you do sometimes to your superiors in the Priesthood, who counselled you to forgive others, "now, really, I have been too much insulted; it is too bad; I won't stand it; I will not forgive him; I only wish I had the power, I would crush him." With such a spirit, a God would hurl his thunderbolts to the left and right, and bring the planetary spaces to disorder and confusion. From the above you may infer, whether the sublime Intelligence of God will exalt any terrestrial beings, unless they show their mental independence by controlling themselves. I think we have all possible reason to forgive one another. Are we not the inhabitants of a fallen world? have we not acted disagreeably to the commandments of God? had we not entirely deviated from his path? are we not, while in our earthly tenements, assailed by multifarious temptations, and consequently every moment liable to err, to transgress, and still our Heavenly Father continues his tender mercies towards us; He manifests the greatest indulgence and forbearance by forgiving all our sins and promising an eternal salvation, if we are only willing to enter through the door of his only Begotten Son, to keep his commandments, and act honorably before him, his angels and man, in all future time. The All-wise Creator does foresee that the inhabitants of every new world, that was framed by his will, where spirits come down to take bodies for the first time, will err; therefore he has established laws, laid plans by which we can be cleansed from our sins. Does not God forgive us? and if that Sublime Being does, should we pigmies not forgive one another? Can we expect God will forgive us, if we do not forgive our fellow-beings? "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your Heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." Matt. chap. vi. 11, 15. "So likewise shall my Heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses." Matt. chap. xvii. 35.

God, foreseeing we would err, and sometimes be tempted not to forgive one another, on account of our passions being roused, gave some revelations to the Prophet Joseph Smith, concerning that very point: "My disciples, in days of old, sought occasion against one another, and forgave not one another in their hearts, and for this evil they were afflicted, and sorely chastened: wherefore, I say unto you, that ye ought to forgive one another, for he that forgiveth not his brother his trespasses, standeth condemned before the Lord, for there remaineth in him the greater sin."—Doctrines and Covenants, p. 154. "And if thy brother or sister offend thee, thou shalt take him or her between him or her and thee alone; and if he or she confess, thou shalt be reconciled. And if he or she confess not, thou shall deliver him or her up unto the Church, not to the members, but to the elders. And it shall be done in a meeting, and that not before the world."—Doctrines and Covenants, p. 128.

Having said so much of the necessity and importance of forgiving our fellow-beings, let us now dive a little further into metaphysics, and examine the origin of forgiveness. That sublime principle is the offspring or the reflex of love for ourselves and our fellow beings. Does not the father forgive his children when they do wrong and promise to reform, because he loves them? Do we not forgive a friend a word, that was thrown out with more wit than wisdom, because we love him? Does not the husband forgive his wife, when she acts disagreeably to his will, becauses he loves her, and vice versa? And now we find that every well regulated mind will engage in the cultivation and exercise of forgiveness. Does not the Sun that fills the realms of space with light, do not the revolving seasons, the sublime vegetative process, the gentle breeze that kisses the foliage, and do not the flinty lips of the everlasting mountains, with Nature's impressive eloquence, tell, that God, the great dispenser of life, light, and intelligence, has laid the broadest foundation for the exercise and cultivation of benevolent affections and order and harmony in the fields of his vast creation? As well as there are herbs, plants, minerals, fluids, acids, used as remedies or counter agents of physical pain, so there is in the mental creation, forgiveness counteracting and healing moral wounds, and restoring thus the mental equilibrium. The cultivation of forgiveness leads to a magnanimity, nobility of the soul. A man that does not forgive, is destitute of affection, love, is full of selfishness, pride, narrow-contractedness, and in fact a stranger to every noble and exalting sentiment. The Saviour says, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." From those divine teachings we learn that we ought to exercise a benevolent affection towards our fellow beings analagous to that which every man exercises towards himself. If Forgiveness had been practised by man, no tears would have ever stained the blue eye of Heaven; no blood ever crimsoned the green bosom of the earth; no wars, strife and other political and social commotions would have shaken the world to its very centre; the voice of reason, humanity, and true religion would be more heard; the intellectual powers would be more directed to the pursuit and contemplation of noble, benevolent, and exalting objects, and not be employed in devising and executing schemes subversive of human happiness and improvement; the world would be united in one harmonious and affectionate society; peace and happiness, as the natural fruits of that beautiful principle, would overspread the earth. Let us, then, always realize the necessity and importance of forgiving our fellow-beings, and remember, that to err is human, to forgive Divine.

Distinguished Arrivals at St. Louis.

In Caswell's List of Hotel Arrivals, of yesterday, we notice the names of "E. Smith and four wives, Salt Lake," from which it may be inferred that somebody is enjoying more of the comforts of life than the laws of Missouri allow to any one individual. Some persons may entertain the idea that Brother Smith is a Turkish Bashaw with half a dozen tails, but from what we can hear, he is only a Mormon with four buxom wives—a circumstance somewhat unusual in this locality, but by no means uncommon in the land where Mr. Smith hails from. A number of Salt Lakers arrived here last Sunday, and it is probale that others, besides Mr. Smith, brought their wives with them. We hope Mr. Smith will have a prosperous journey with his four, and be enabled to travel safely with them through the land of the Gentiles, where only one wife at a time is tolerated by the laws. The four ladies should be presented with the freedom of the town, and the lord of such treasures should be duly honored. We have heard that Utah has been "knocking at the door" for admission as a State, and we do not doubt that if Mr. Smith and his four attaches are among the delegates, the members of Congress will at once tell her to "come in."

The above is from the St. Louis Sunday Herald of the 11th inst. As there is no brimstone about it we publish it for the information of our friends. We would have felt more certain of the arrivals if the Editor had seen them instead of the simple scribbling on the Hotel list. However if Mr. E. Smith and his "four attaches" should pass through our city if he give us timely notice we shall enlarge our accommodation and have a few extra chairs.

We are very doubtful of having the pleasure of such society. We are glad however that Missouri is getting back to scriptural incidents of married life.

The Emigrant Runner.

The pen of the Picayune, our humorous cotemporary, is not always shedding frolicsome fluid. The subjoined article from last week's number on the Emigrant Runner, is worthy the attention of folks on the other side of the water before they leave home:

"Of all the un-jugged scoundrels that infest our city surely the Emigrant Runner unites in himself more rascality than any other villain in the city. The most helpless of all persons, poor emigrants, ignorant of the language, laws and customs of the country to which they come, are his prey. He robs the old, the infirm, and the helplessly sick, with no more remorse than he does the hale and strong. He assists in the manufacture of paupers and criminals. The victims stripped by him become the inmates of our Alms-Houses, our Hospitals, or dependents on the receiver of stolen goods. He has no pity, no tenderness for any suffering, or any degradation. Hundreds of the wretched females upon whom the public look with loathing and scorn, owe their sad fate to him. Robbed of every penny, vice alone could preserve them from starving. As he respects not the laws of humanity, so neither does he respect state or municipal ones. He hesitates not to violate any ordinance, provided there be no restraining force at hand. Murder is neither foreign to his thoughts, nor always strange to his hands. He costs us immense sums to restrain him, and the results of his villanies upon others are a further tax upon us."—N. Y. Picayune.

Here we stop our extract. Read and be wise.

Washington Correspondents.

The uninitiated are frequently at a loss to understand the contradictory reports that come from Washington about men and things there; such persons may profit by the perusal of the following clipping from the Washington correspondent of the Charleston Mercury, of April 24th:

"Nowhere in all the world is Dickens' classification of mankind into 'the powers that be, and the powers that want to be,' more distinctly exhibited than in Washington. In the parlor, on the street, in the Senate and House, the game of avarice and selfish ambition goes on, and every appliance of venality or fraud is enlisted that human wit can devise. Prominent among these is the letter writing system—a system whose influence is in the inverse ratio of the honesty and reliability of its instruments. During the sessions of Congress, Washington correspondence is everywhere looked to with great interest. Yet, if the scattered and honest constituency of the country could get but a single glimpse into the manner in which such correspondence is manufactured, their disgust would be only equalled by their indignation. The venal brood which hovers about political circles, nosing here and there, with smirking lips and fluent pens, ready to espouse any cause, and all sides of it, lauding the same measures and men in the columns of one section, and denouncing them in the columns of the other—bought up and regularly paid by Congressmen to do the dirty work of bedaubing them and their speeches. This is the class, and such its character, which, for the most part, composes the newspaper correspondents. It wears no mask here, upon its dishonesty; it instals itself as a power before which even legislators and statesmen bow and minister to, and make common cause with them in the shameless work of deluding and defrauding the people. There is no member of Congress, however debauched in character or corrupt, that may not have his hireling corps of writers, who will asservate for his integrity and magnify his eloquence. In what terms shall justice be done to such a system? The independent and virtuous representative who scorns its use is disparaged by his very honesty, while the worthless see the reward of their baseness in the applause of a cheated people. It is right and just to expose such humbuggery."

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

The London Times May 1st, of the present Post Office service in England, says: "There is something pleasant in thinking of a great public service executed as never was a public service before—all the intelligence of a mighty nation astir, and noiselessly conveyed from point to point. Some idea of the work may be formed from the circumstance that it gives employment to 22,000 persons—a greater number than that of the Customs and Inland Revenue departments put together—and that the letters carried during the past year amounted to 456,000,000. The work, too, is annually increasing in magnitude; last year it was 13,000,000 more than in 1854, 46,000,000 more than in the year before that, and 374,000,000 more than in 1839, when the old system of postage was in force."

In speaking of the Post Office relationship with railways, the same paper states: "The expenses of the Great Northern are 2s. 2d. per mile; of the London and Brighton, 2s. 10.; of the South-Eastern, 3s. 4d.; on which last line the Post Office pays for the carriage of the mails 2s. 3d. a mile, the average rate which is charged to it on all the railways being only 10d."

On Tuesday, April 29, Count Orloff, in a state carriage, proceeded to the Tuileries, and officially notified to the Emperor Napoleon the death of Nicholas and the accession to the throne of Alexander.

Barron Brunow, the ex-Russian Ambassador at London, and Plenipotentiary at the Paris Congress, was delegated to announce officially to the Queen of England the same information. We wonder if the Emperor and Queen expressed their surprise at the news!

It is expected that the Coronation of the Emperor of Russia will take place on the 30th of August, the day of the patron saint of the Emperor Alexander. This solemnity, which is to take place at Moscow, will cost 3 1-2 millions of silver rubles, or about 14,000,000 francs.

Queen Victoria held a court at Buckingham Palace on Thursday, the 7th inst., for the purpose of receiving the addresses on the peace from the House of Lords, the House of Commons, and the city of London. The deputations came in great state, and numbered nearly a hundred persons. The Queen briefly acknowledged the addresses, and expressed her satisfaction that peace was re-established on a basis that affords security for its permanence.

Both houses of Parliament have recorded a vote of thanks to the army and navy. Lord Panmure moved the resolution, and was seconded by Earl Derby in the Lords. In the Commons, Lord Palmerston made the motion and Mr. Disraeli seconded it.

Lord Granville announced that a pension of one thousand pounds sterling, for life, would be settled on Gen. Williams, who it also created a baronet, by the title of Sir William F. Williams, of Kars.

May 29th is to be a holiday throughout Great Brittain to celebrate the peace and on this occasion has granted amnesty to all political offenders. Special exception, however, is made against those who escaped to the United States.

The clipper ship Racer had gone ashore on Arklow Bank, and would probably prove a total wreck. All her passengers and crew, amounting to over five hundred, were saved.

A bill was introduced into the French Legislature granting four hundred thousand francs for the baptism of the Imperial Prince in June.

The Belgium Senate was convocated for Wednesday, the 14th inst. Count Walewski's demand to muzzle the press of Belgium caused intense excitement.

A despatch from Brussels says: "In the Chambers on Wednesday, the Foreign Minister, in answering an interrogatory in regard to the regard to the recent speech of Count Walewski on the press of Belgium, replied that that speech had not been officially communicated to the government. When that communication should be made the answer would be ready, and would be communicated to all the governments, and would firmly maintain the rights of a constitutional and independent country."

It was asked further whether any Power had asked for any modification of the laws relating to the press in Belgium. The Minister said he would answer in one word—never. The meeting broke up amidst immense cheering and enthusiasm.

Lately an experimental illumination by peat gas was made in Dublin, and it is said to have been very successful. The inventor of the process is Mr. Johnson, of the Dublin Chemical Society. The word "peat," in jets of gas, was displayed with great brilliancy. The Freeman's Journal estimates the advantages to be gained by the use of peat gas in Ireland, where the supply is so abundant, at 75 per cent.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

Washington, May 15, 1856.

The Senate passed the House bill granting lands in alternate sections to Florida and Alabama to aid in the construction of railroads.

Mr. Mallory spoke on the subject of the Naval Retiring Board, replying to all the arguments urged against the Board, but taking no notice of the personalities which have been intermingled in the discussion.

A message was received from the President, inclosing reports from the Secretary of State, Secretary of the Navy and the Attorney General, in reply to a resolution of the House adopted May 8, both having reference to routes of transit between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, through the Republics of of New Granada and Nicaragua, and to the condition of our affairs with Central America.

Mr. Mason moved to refer the message to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and to print it.

Mr. Crittenden regarded the subject as very important—one which ought not to pass from the consideration of the Senate into the hands of the Committee without remark. He had seldom if ever listened to a message from the Executive which was fraught with more absorbing interest and which might lead to serious consequences.

Mr. C. thought the present government of Nicaragua too young to be admitted as a nation into the great family of nations. He wanted more evidence of its powers of endurance.

Mr. Weller replied and if the recognition of Nicaragua would bring war with England he was willing to take the consequences. "We are on the right side, and God our Father will go with us and give us the victory. Thrice is he armed who has his quarrel just."

The documents were ordered to be printed, and without taking the question on the reference the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Knowlton offered a preamble setting forth the difficulty which occurred at Willard's Hotel on the 8th inst. between Mr. Herbert, member of the House, and Thomas Keating, a waiter at that establishment, resulting in the death of the latter by a pistol in the hands of the former—that Mr. Herbert was taken before Judge Drawford and by him held to bail in $10,000 to answer the charge of manslaughter, and that the Constitution gives either House the power of punishing its members for disorderly behavior, and with the concurrence of two thirds to expel a member—concluding with a resolution that the Committee on Judiciary take the matter into consideration with the power to send for persons and papers, and report to the House at their earliest convenience what action this body should take in the premises.

After considerable talk Mr. Knowlton's resolution was repeated by vote 79 against 70

The House took up the bill to regulate the Washington municipal elections and after debate it was passed.

A message from the President on Central American affairs was received and then read. Adjourned.

SENATE. May 16.

A resolution was adopted directing experiments at the Mint, with a view of detecting and preventing the unlawful deterioration of coins.

Messrs. Mallory and Benjamin defended, and Messrs. Crittenden and Toombs condemned the action of the Naval Board.

Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

In the House a discussion arose as to what disposition should be made of several private bills heretofore transmitted from the Court of Claims. The debate involved the powers of that tribunal.

A rule was finally adopted, that all bills and reports from the Court of Claims shall be referred to the Committee on Claims, and every Friday, immediately after reading the journal, it shall be in order for that committee to report with reference to the business from the Court of Claims.

The House considered and passed one private bill. Adjourned till Monday.

SENATE. May 19.

Two messages were received from the President vetoing the bills for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi and the Flats of the St. Clair rivers.

The consideration of the subject was postponed till next Wednesday.

Mr. Cass, of Mich., stated that he should ask leave when a convenient opportunity presented itself, to show that he had been misunderstood in certain correspondence by Mr. Crampton with the British government.

Mr. Summer, of Mass., then commenced speaking on Kansas affairs, and had not concluded when the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House then took up Mr. Wheeler's joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to despatch a vessel with provisions privately contributed for the Cape de Verde sufferers.

Adopted by 123 against 24.

Mr. Galloway of Ohio, asked leave to introduce a resolution requesting the President to inform the House whether he has information concerning the murder of three American citizens, named Dow. Barber and Brown, late residents of Kansas, and whether legal measures have been taken for the prosecution of the murderers; also, whether he has information regarding the forcible abduction of William Phillips, and of his being carried across to Missouri, and there tarred and feathered; likewise with regard to the outrage on Rev. Pardee Butler who was tarred and feathered at Atchison; also, with regard to the shooting of Mr. Mace, whom an attempt was made to kill, after he had given testimony before the House Investigating Committee; and whether legal steps have been taken for the prosecution of the persons engaged in these outrages. Also, that the President inform the House whether he has issued special instructions for the protection of American citizens in Kansas from violence and murder.

Mr. Smith of Va., suggested, and Mr. Galloway agreed to add, a clause calling for information relative to the murder of Sheriff Jones.

Mr. Giddings—Better wait till he is dead.

Mr. Ruffin of Va., was opposed to such a string of nonsense, and objected to its reception.

Mr. Galloway moved a suspension of the rules, in order that he might introduce the resolution.

The motion to suspend was lost—102 in favor, to 55 against—not two-thirds,

Mr. Walker, Ala., moved to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill for continuing the imyrovement of Mobile harbor.

Disagreed to—60 against 57—not two-thirds.

Mr. Keit, of S. C. moved a suspension of the rules, to enable him to offer a resolution for the adjournment of Congress on the 5th of August.

Negatived—62 against 67.

Mr. Wakeman introduced a bill making an appropriation for the survey of Harlem river.

Referred to the Committee on Commerce. Adjourned.

SENATE. May 20.

Mr. Seward, of N. Y., ineffectually urged the passage of the House resolution in reference to the Cape de Verde Island sufferers.

The bill making an appropriation for consular and diplomatic expenses was passed.

Mr. Benjamin, of La., from the Committee on Commerce, reported a joint resolution requiring the Commissioner of Patents to take necessary steps to obtain information relative to the growth and consumption of tobacco and cotton in the several countries of the world.

Mr. Sumner, of Mass., resumed his remarks on the Kansas question, saying that, as he had already treated of the crime committed against Kansas and of the apologies for that crime, he would now speak of the various remedies proposed, and show which was the only true remedy. The original prohibition should be restored. This is the alpha and the omega of our aim in this controversy. By such a happy restoration, made in good faith, the whole country would be replaced in the condition which it enjoyed previous to its abrogation. But no such measure is now under consideration. The crime against Kansas was special, and all other questions are absorbed in the special remedies for it. Four remedies are proposed: first, the remedy of tyranny, in the shape of appropriations and troops to enforce the usurpation; secondly, the remedy of folly, proposed by the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. Butler); thirdly, the remedy of injustice and civil war, proposed by the Senator from Illinois (Mr. Douglas); and lastly, the remedy of justice and peace, proposed by the Senator from New York (Mr. Seward), which last would admit Kansas at once, with her recently adopted constitution. All the objections to such admission were considered, whether grounded on want of population or irregularity of form, and the precedent of Michigan was particularly reviewed. In this connection the opinions of Mr. Buchanan were introduced, vindicating the admission of Michigan on grounds precisely applicable to Kansas. In conclusion a comparison was made between the tyranny of the President in Kansas and the tyranny of King George III. From Congress Mr. Sumner appealed to the people, before whom the subject will soon come, to vindicate the electorial franchise in Kansas. Let the ballet box of the Union, with multitudinous might protect the ballot box in that Territory.

Mr. Cass, of Mich., said he had listened to Mr. Sumner's speech with equal regret and surprise. It was the most un-American and unpatriotic speech he had ever heard on this floor. He hoped he might never hear such a speech again, here or elsewhere. He did not rise, however, to make comments on that speech, open as it was to censure and disapprobation, but to say that the Senator from Massachusetts had totally mis understood and misapplied the case of Michigan. The Topeka Convention showed no analogy between the proceedings in Michigan and those in Kansas.

Mr. Douglas, Ill., adverted to the malignity which characterised Mr. Sumner's speech, and the many personalities in which it abounded. He compared it to a patchwork bedquilt, made up from all the old calico dresses in the house, and abounding in classical allusions, most of which were from those portions of the classics which were suppressed in respectable and decent colleges. That speech was written and committed to memory, practised before a glass, negro boy holding a candle and watching the gestures. It was rehearsed to friends, and they repeated in saloons of the city what he was going to say. Those libels and insults, so gross and vulgar, had been conned over and written with cool and deliberate malignity, and repeated night after night in order to find the appropriate grace with which to spit them at men who differ from him. What right had he to arraign three-fourths of the Senate for dereliction of duty? Did the means by which he got here give him the superiority? Mr. Douglas said he had been arraigned as a conspirator and a traitor by a man (Sumner) himself guilty of crime having taken the oath to support the constitution and then violate it. Alluding to Mr. Sumner's attack on Senator Butler, who was now absent, Mr. Douglas said Mr. Sumner would, on his return, whisper a secret apology in his ear, and want him to accept that as a proper apology. He (Douglas) knew how that was done. (Laughter.) He then defended Mr. Atchison from the charge of acting the part of Cataline.

Mr. Mason, of Va., said political relations, in obedience to the forms of our government, bring Senators in associations, which beyond the walls of the Senate chamber is dishonor, and touching whose hand would be pollution. They were compelled to listen to language here to which no gentleman would lend an ear elsewhere. They bear it in obedience to the constitution, the trust of which they have undertaken to perform. Mr. Mason defended Atchison, whom he was proud to call his friend, and said that when Mr. Sumner dared, in the presence of the Senate, to connect Judge Butler's name with an untruth, he presented himself as one utterly incapable of knowing what truth is. In conclusion, he accused Mr. Sumner of falsification with regard to his (Sumner's) remarks concerning Southern institutions.

Mr. Sumner said he had just been attacked by three Senators, one (Mr. Cass) of venerable years, and with whom he had been in relations of personal regard longer than with any Senator within the sound of his voice. The Senator from Michigan must know full well that nothing could fall from him (Sumner) which could possess anything but kindness towards him, and he would now say to him that his statements regarding Michigan were founded on legal documents, and on the principles of Jackson, Grundy, Buchanan, Benton and the democratic party of that day; therefore the attack of Mr. Cass did not touch him, (Summer) but the old democrats and the democratic party. As to Mr. Douglas, he should leave to him the privilege of the common scold—the last word. That Senator had the audacity to venture a charge of calumny against him. He had said that he (Sumner) had taken an oath to support the constitution, yet was determined not to support a particular clause of that instrument. This statement Sumner gave to his face the flattest denial, saying he replied to a similar charge in June, 1854, as reported in the Globe from which he now read, in effect, that he had sworn to support the constitution, as he understood it no more nor less, and the clause alluded to did not impose upon him any obligation to take part, directly or indirectly, in restoring fugitive slaves; and yet, in the face of all this, the calumny had been extensively circulated, discussed and criticised by the Senator from Illinois, who had presumed to arraign him. He wished to administer to Mr. Douglas a word of advice—to avoid expending himself in gusts of vulgarity, and endeavor to obtain that truth which is the handmaid of wisdom; and let him remember that the Bowie knife and bludgeon are not proper emblems of Senatorial debate. Swaggering and ferocity cannot add dignity to this body. The Senator from Illinois, weltering in venom, had brought forth statements utterly without foundation, heaping upon him (Sumner) personalities and obloquy. No person with the upright form of a man——

Here Mr. Sumner paused,

Mr. Douglas—Say it; say it.

Mr. Sumner—I shall say it. No person with the upright form of a man can be allowed to discharge from his tongue indecent personalities. The nolsome, nameless animal, whose nature it is to discharge venom is not a proper model for an American Senator. Will the Senator take notice?

Mr. Douglas—I shall, and certainly shall not imitate you in that respect. (Laughter).

Mr. Sumner—Ah! the Senator again switches his tongue, and fills the Senate with offensive odor. Then, turning towards Mr. Mason, he continued: I would simply say to the Senator from Virginia that hard words are not arguments—nor do scowls belong to Senatorial duty.

Mr. Mason was understood to say—The Senator is certainly non compos mentis. (Laughter).

Here the war of words ended. The galleries were densely crowded. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF RERRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Bennett, of N. Y., from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill granting one million and forty-eight thousand acres of land in Wisconsin for the construction of three railroads therein, embracing five hundred miles.

An ineffectual motion was made to table the bill, by a vote of 69 against 76.

Pending the consideration of the bill the House adjourned.

SENATE. May 21.

Mr. Collamer, of Vermont, introduced a bill to test the practicability and usefulness of the atmospheric telegraph.

Mr. Foot, of Vermont, reported a bill to permit the Legislature of Iowa to determine for that State the application for a grant of land heretofore made to aid the construction of railroads therein.

The bill was passed giving a pension for life, of thirty dollars per month, to John Nugent, of New York, who lost both arms on board the Germantown, while firing a salute in honor of the birthday of the Queen of Spain.

A bill granting the right of pre-emption in certain cases to the Indiana yearly meeting Society of Friends was passed.

Mr. Benjamin, of La., gave reasons why the Senate should pass a bill making appropriations for the removal of obstructions to navigation at the mouth of the Mississippi, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. The subject was postponed till to-morrow.

A communication was received from the President furnishing additional documents relative to the British recruitments, involving the question of veracity between Mr. Buchanan and Lord Palmerston.

Mr. Buchanan charges that Lord Palmerston, while refusing to lay on the table of the House of Commons the correspondence on the enlistment question, stated such facts only as favored his own side, and entirely suppressed the reasons on which our demand to recall Mr. Crampton was founded. Mr. Buchanan further states that Lord Palmerston was not justified in stating that he (Buchanan) had expressed himself satisfied with Clarendon's explanation contained in his note of the 16th of July last, and that he (Buchanan) said he felt confident our government would entertain similar feelings with regard to it. Mr. Buchanan denies that he ever so intimated. He had merely observed to Lord Palmerston that he would have much satisfaction in transmitting that note to the Secretary of State. Lord Palmerston, replying, fails to be convinced, saying to him there was no essential difference between the substance of what was said in the House of Commons and Mr. Buchan's statement.

Finally, Mr. Buchanan, to Secretary Marcy, March 7, says:—"You must believe, with me, that the last effort of Lord Palmerston to extricate himself from the dilemma has served to make the awkwardness of his position still more conspicuous." Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Wisconsin land bill was passed by 81 against 67.

Mr. Cobb, of Ala., from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill granting about 1,000,000 acres to Alabama to aid in the construction of five railroads, connecting with the Georgia and Tennessee lines. Passed, by 13 majority.

Mr. Bliss made an anti-slavery extension speech. Adjourned.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

The Cape de Verde Islands Relief Committee are receiving considerable assistance. They anticipate before the close of the present week to have at their disposal in money, grain, flour and other provisions, about $8000. The first vessel laden with provisions will be despatched during the first week in June.

The Chinese population of San Francisco have had a splendid festival, which continued from the 4th to the 8th ult. The edifice used on the occasion was built in 1853, on Pine-street, and called Lee-Yup Azylum. Since they arrived at the diggings they have annually celebrated funeral feasts, and attracted considerable attention; but the festival we allude to seems to be regarded by their christian neighbors with considerable alarm, as the inauguration of Buddhism in America. A short time previous, they had imported from the Celestial Empire a wooden god, who was the peculiar object of their adoration.

The Kansas Investigating Committee sent by Gov. Robinson the large quantity of testimony taken by them, enclosed in a sealed package, addressed to the Speaker of the House. On Gov. Robinson's detention in Missouri, his wife at his request continued her journey. At Columbia, Ohio, she handed the package to the Hon. C. K. Watson, who today delivered it to the Speaker privately. The Congressional Commissioners request that the package remains with the seal unbroken until their return. This is the testimony which the Missourians threatened to destroy.

The Government has taken efficient measures to prevent the traffic in Coolies. It is not permitted by any treaty, and is therefore illegal, and Americans in China are warned to desist—otherwise they will not only forfeit the protection of this Government, but render themselves liable to heavy penalties.

Book Making.

There is no end to book making, though mankind would be better off if many books had never been made. In the United States over three hundred publishers are busy supplying the mental wants of the public, and over three thousand booksellers are distributing the productions. According to the Philadelphia Ledger books have multiplied to such an extent in our country that it now takes 750 paper mills, with 2,000 engines in constant operation, to supply the printers. These mills produced 270,000,000 pounds of paper the past year, which immense supply was sold for about $37,000,000. A pound and a quarter of rags are required for a pound of paper, and 400,000,000 pounds were therefore consumed in this way last year. The cost of manufacturing a year's supply of paper for the United States, aside from labor and rags, is computed at $4,000,000.

Discipline of Business.

The life of a man of business gives his character a pretty hard trial. Not only does it exercise his sagacity and prudence, but it puts his integrity to the severest test. He is surrounded by the selfishness of trade; he sees men profit by cunning and fraud, and he is tempted to try his skill in artifice and deception. Every day his honesty is tried in some way. He is thrown back upon his inward principle, and if his heart is hollow and deceitful, he will be sure to show it. And that man has reason to thank God who has gone through a long course of business, through times of wild speculation and general bankruptcy, and goes down to the grave with the never shaken consciousness of being an honest man. He who can see others making money by false representations, and never stoop to these tricks of trade, is fitting his own pure mind for a world that is more worthy of him.

And yet a man cannot wholly escape these temptations. To do that he must go out of the world, or retire into solitude. He might indeed avoid all danger by shutting himself up within the walls of a convent, to pass a life of outward sanctity and lazy contemplation. But the piety that is nursed in cloisters is of a sickly growth, compared with that which maintains integrity amid strong inducements to evil. It is not the will of God, that we should retire apart to keep from contamination. Not in deserts, but in cities; not in the hermit's cell, but among men, sharing the common lot, meeting temptation as it comes, are we to form our character for eternity.

Men ought to rejoice in rigid discipline. Whenever assailed by temptation an opportunity is given to conquer themselves, and so to become noble beings. The most heroic virtues of the human character are brought out in this struggle with the cowardly example of the world. Men of brave hearts ought to welcome the conflicts and buffetings of life. Every victory they gain will make them stronger, as the tempest which rocks and tears the mountain oak causes it to strike its roots down deeper in the earth, and to lift higher its majestic arms toward heaven.

Mormonism in New York.

The Latter Day Saints intend holding Meetings in this City every Sunday, at the Broadway House, entrance 116 Grand street, at 10½ o'clock, A. M., 3 P. M., and 7 in the evening.

All who wish to become acquainted with the principles of Salvation, as taught by Apostles and Prophets, ancient and modern, are respectfully invited to attend.

Letter Notice.

We are constantly receiving letters from Europe, addressed to our care, with the postage unpaid. Now, we are willing to accommodate men, but we can't pay their postage, as one out of ten perhaps is not called for. This is to inform all such persons that no such letters will be taken out of the office, by us, in future.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "The Mormon." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

The Noblest Kings of Earth.

BY S. H. BRADBURY.

The bravest hearts, the noblest minds,
Are those that freely give
The moral precepts that enlarge,
And teach us how to live;
The spirits of those better times,
Of which the poet dreams—
When truth and faith shall proudly wed,
Like two uniting streams.

The world's best kings are those enthron'd,
Uncrowned with golden toys;
Who work to make this glorious earth
The home of perfect joys;
Who give their grand, immortal thoughts,
In language pure and plain;
Who sigh for hearts in ignorance lost,
Like lovers o'er the slain.

The greatest kings of earth are those
Who teach us how to bear
Our present woes, our greatest ills,
With more of love than fear;
Who tell us oft with spirits crowned,
That wrongs must have an end—
See in each haggard slave around,
A brother, daughter, friend.

The noblest kings of earth are men
Who teach us heart and brain;
Who give the world its fairest creeds,
As summer gives its rain;
Who lead our thoughts to freedom's hour,
Who never tire nor boast;
The noblest, strongest heirs of God,
Who love the weakest most.

The bravest kings the world can own
Are teachers of all time;
The heralds of the beautiful,
The mighty, the sublime.
Apostles in the cause of Faith,
That faith that lifts—refines;
The saviours of the people's rights—
Earth's ablest, best divines.

Crimea.

Since the war has terminated, interest in the Crimea is gradually dying away. Before we take final leave of the country that now has a prominent place in the world's history, we think the following items, from the London Times, are not without some interest, and worth publishing:

Camp Before Sebastopol, }
Tuesday Morning, April 8, 1856. }

The weather has at last assumed the mildness of the spring, and for the few weeks that the army will have to remain in the Crimea it may be expected that pic nics, shooting, fishing, racing, and drill and ball practice will form the principal business of our lives, until everything is prepared for embarkation. Then there will, no doubt, be a great rush, and a great struggle to pack up, to burn and destroy, to get favorite ponies on board ships, or to smuggle away extra chests and boxes. The traces of our presence will endure for many a long year, notwithstanding the perishable nature of earthworks, and all the energy of Russia and the physical force at her disposal will be tasked to the uttermost before Sebastopol can rise from the heaps of blackened stones and shattered walls which now mark its site.

As for the city proper, with some few isolated exceptions, it might be knocked down with a pick and carted away as rubbish. The walls, which look firm at a distance, are seen on near approach to be mere shells, which a strong man could overthrow. The desolation and silence of the grass-grown streets, the course of which is marked out by heaps of white stone in fragments or in blocks, piled confusedly on each other as they were thrown down by the shock of explosion or the actual agency of powder, are appalling. One may wander between these walls of debris, which look like ruinous trenches, for hours without meeting a soul, or hearing even a sparrow chirp.

Let the rotting skeletons, the heaps of human bones, the debris of ragged uniforms and equipments, the remains of the fierce struggle which ended in that ravine, Inkerman, still scattered over its side, preach a lesson to whoever is about to build the city again.

As to the sunken ships there are various opinions. Some say they are utterly ruined, others contend that they can be weighed and rendered fit for service; but for the most part they are only sailing vessels of the old build, short and tubby. I have seen a piece of teak cut out of one of them, which was as perfectly sound and good as it was the first day it was used. The deal of which the submerged gun-carriages are made has, however, suffered from the ravages of the worm. All operations against the ships must now be hopeless.

The French Intendance and our Commissariat have had to contend with very serious obstacles, and among them there was none greater than the mortality among the cattle purchased by their agents, which in some instances has utterly ruined contractors "for delivery." In nine months the French lost 8,000 bullocks out of 17,500 at Samsoun alone, and we lost at the same place 4,000 out of 10,000 bullocks. But even those who survive do not get very fair treatment on their way to the Crimea. It is horribly true that the unfortunate animals are sometimes hoisted up into the ships and out of them again by their horns, and that some of them in calf have been hoisted out by means of slings of rope under the belly, and have died in agony on the wharf. The losses in this way, and by the way in which the animals are beaten and crowded together and fed, are disgraceful in every sense, and ought to be revolting to humanity. In some of the ships there are no troughs of water provided for them. Our cruelty recoils on ourselves, for they die of exhaustion and thirst, or are reduced to skin and bone. There is no care taken to feed them in others of those ships, except by throwing wads of hay into the hold. One vessel with a cargo of 100 cattle and 800 sheep from Baltschik landed only 63 cattle and 230 sheep at Balaklava; but it is quite evident that if we made it the contractor's business to take care of the animals by only making an agreement for delivery alive we should save money and avert much suffering. That it can be done we have proof, for the Sardinians form their contracts on that base as a general rule, and a contractor who sent them 300 sheep from Guemlek took such care to keep them alive by putting turnips, mangoldwurzel, and water on board, that he brought every one of them, with two exceptions, in good condition to Balaklava.

In addition to the ordinary duties of the Land Transport Corps in carrying up provisions and stores from Balaklava to the various camps, there will now be the trying work of conveying from Sebastopol all the shot and shell within the English portion of the town. As to collecting and removing these missiles, which are sown broadcast in the very soil like pebbles on a beach for the space of seven miles in length, and two miles in breadth, the task is hopeless of execution. Piles of shot have been formed in every ravine, and stand there as monuments of the uselessness of such efforts as have yet been made to gather the iron shower which fell for 11 long months in front of Sebastopol. Every watercourse is full of iron—shell, shot, and splinters of strange shapes abound in every ravine. The Russians will only have to collect what the allies leave behind them to form large magazines of shot, but shell will not be so plentiful, as they were more sparingly used, and were generally damaged, if they did not burst. Guns, too, are buried in the earth, and peer out from the earthwork of the overthrown batteries. It was only yesterday I passed some five or six fine English cannon apparently 32-pounders, which had been flung down the side of the ravine from the French battery overlooking the Dockyard Creek, and were lying upside down in the ground. The Artillery are daily engaged in slinging guns and mortars, and sending them down to Balaklava for shipment. It is calculated that the Russians fired about 30,000 tons of iron at us. It is certain that we gave them about 11,000 tons in return, and possibly the French fired about 20,000 tons; so that between 60,000 and 70,000 tons weight of iron must be lying about on the plateau.

The Russians frequently visit Sebastopol, and wander about amid the ruins, as if to see what is left, or to discover, if possible, their old haunts. They come into Balaklava occasionally, and wander through its streets in a state of perplexity, or seek to identify the sites of their departed mansions. Several of the Greeks have also paid the town a visit, and are very much puzzled to find out where they lived two years ago. One man said, "I had three very good houses in this town, but I really cannot now tell even the place where once they stood."

This army has a fine appetite; it manages to consume 250,000lb. of barley, 250,000lb. of hay, and 90,000lb. of bread per diem, and to eat up about 3,000 bullocks and 15,000 or 18,000 sheep per month, besides little pickings of potted meats, preserved vegetables, private stores, poultry, geese, turkeys, and game, washed down with floods of wine and spirits and an ocean of rum.

Most of the books are very well adapted to amuse and improve the soldier, but some of the boxes contained tracts of the fiercest controversial character on religious matters, only suited to create ill-blood between comrades, and to infuse the odium theologicum into the rum and water, which, I fear the tracts of the Temperance Society will not render a bit less popular in the camp huts. These have been withheld from distribution, and can be had back by those who were so good as to send them. A number of torn and coverless Bibles can also be returned, as they were quite unfit for use. So the young ladies who were considerate enough to fill a case with interesting manuscript exercises in Italian are informed that the sentiments expressed therein have received the very warm approval of those few who saw their pleasing compositions, but that it was not thought necessary to send their little exercitations to the libraries, as it was imagined that the men would be rather lost among the pothooks and hangers in which the Tuscan of these fair moralists is greatly involved.

Cotton Superseded by Silk.

The Paris correspondent of the "London Atlas" says:

"We hail with delight the announcement that a savant has just made so valuable a discovery in the art of preparing silk, that this article will become cheaper and more common than cotton. This savant, it appears, one day having nothing else to do, began to think, which is wonderful for a savant, says Alphonse Karr—that there was but one creature capable of producing silk—that there was but one description of vegetable matter, that of the mulberry tree, fitted for that creature's food, therefore the silky substance must not lie in the animal, but in the vegetable matter; so at once the savant set about analysing the composition of the mulberry leaf, and by boiling it to a thick paste has produced every description of silk in immense quantities. I have seen several yards manufactured, and although wanting a little of the gloss belonging to that spun by the worm. I can pronounce it superior to the finest foulard hitherto made. The price of the silk is five francs a pound when spun, being one hundred and twenty francs cheaper than that of the present day. This new method of procuring silk will at once be adopted in all countries as the mulberry can grow in any country and requires scarcely any culture. The cultivation of this new branch of industry will do away with that of cotton, so that Slavery will have a natural cause of abandonment in the United States, little anticipated at the beginning of the century."

Embalming a Wife.

The following curious circumstance is just now creating some merriment in commercial circles. A Yankee captain, whose cargo was consigned to Messrs. Baring & Co., had the misfortune to loose his wife, who was on board with him on a voyage, and being reluctant to throw the body overboard, resolved upon bringing her to England, there to receive a proper sepulchre. A portion of his cargo consisted of oil of cinnamon. The captain took sufficient quantity, and placed the body in it, thus effectually embalming it for the remainder of the voyage. On arriving at the port of London, the Yankee captain called upon the parties to whom the oil was consigned, and requested to know how much he was to pay for the quantity of oil he had used. He was astonished at being told that the value of the oil so used was £900, and that he must immediately pay over that sum. Of course this was out of the question, and the captain was soon afterwards arrested for the amount, but was bailed by Messrs. Baring, who, it is reported, have satisfied the owners. The custom authorities, having been made acquainted with the circumstances, refused to allow the cinnamon oil to be landed. The Yankee captain will have to take the oil back to America, and there dispose of it. The oil is used for flavoring pies, pastry and perfumery.—[London News.

Frugality may be termed the daughter of prudence, the sister of temperance, and the parent of liberty. He that is extravagant will quickly become poor, and poverty will enforce independence, and invite corruption.

The Cities of the World—Their Relative Growth.

The present century has witnessed an increase in the population of great cities, unexampled within the historic period, and doubtless unrivalled since the world began. A few statistics, compiled from the census reports of Great Britain and the United States will exhibit this.

To begin with England. In 1801 the population of London was abont nine hundred thousand. By 1810 it had risen to more than a million; by 1820 to a million and a quarter; by 1830 to a million and a half; finally by 1850, to two millions and a third. But the growth of other cities has been proportionately even greater. Manchester, in 1801, had a population of only eighty-four thousand; it numbers now over three hundred thousand. Liverpool, at the beginning of the century, had but eighty thousand inhabitants, while fifty years later they had increased to nearly four hundred thousand. Birmingham, in 1801, had a population of seventy-three thousand; in 1850 it had two hundred and fifty thousand. The chief cities of Scotland increased not less rapidly. Glasgow, which had but seventy-seven thousand inhabitants in 1801, had three hundred and sixty-seven thousand half a century afterwards. Even Ireland exhibits a growth, though to a less degree, in city populations. Dublin had but one hundred and eighty thousand inhabitants in 1800; in 1850 it had two hundred and fifty thousand.

On the continent of Europe, as a general rule, the great cities have likewise increased in population, though the ratio has been inferior to that witnessed in England and Scotland. Paris, spite of the revolutions which have convulsed it, has steadily risen from a population of half a million, at the beginning of the century, to over a million at the present time. Vienna, which had two hundred and thirty thousand denizens in 1800, has nearly five hundred thousand now. The population of Berlin in 1800 was about one hundred and fifty thousand; it is now three hundred thousand more; in other words, it has trebled in fifty years. Even Naples, in spite of tyranny almost without parallel, has increased its population, in the same interval, from three hundred to four hundred and sixteen thousand. Turin has one hundred and thirty-five thousand now, against eighty thousand half a century ago. Odessa, which had but eight thousand in 1803, is estimated to have had over a hundred thousand, when the late war began. A few great cities have remained stationary or retrograded, of which Moscow, Amsterdam and Rotterdam are the principal. Venice itself, so long declining, increased from ninety-seven thousand in 1837, to one hundred and twenty-six thousand in 1852.

But the cities of the United States have increased in population more rapidly than those of either Continental Europe or England. In 1800, the inhabitants of Philadelphia were but little over seventy thousand, whereas now they may be fairly computed at over half a million. In 1800, New York had a population of sixty thousand, now it has six hundred and twelve thousand. Boston had twenty-four thousand denizens half a century ago; in 1850 it had about one hundred and forty thousand. Pittsburgh had fifteen hundred in 1800; at present it has over fifty thousand, exclusive of Alleghany City, which is really a suburb of it. Cincinnati had seven hundred and fifty in 1800; it had one hundred and fifteen thousand in 1850. Baltimore had twenty thousand in 1800; it has over a hundred thousand now. Buffalo was a wilderness in 1800; and even so late as 1810 had only fifteen hundred inhabitants; it has now more than forty-five thousand. In addition, there are scores of towns in the West, which were laid out even so late as twenty years ago, which have now ten to twenty thousand denizens.

The Hughes Printing Telegraph Instrument Finished.

We are gratified to learn that this wonderful invention has, at last, received its finishing touch, and will be immediately placed upon the line between this city and Philadelphia. We are assured, upon undoubted authority, that the machines, so far as it has been possible to test them, through a coil of wire 100 miles in length, have realised the most sanguine expectations of Mr. Huges and his friends, and there appears to be no reason to doubt but that the invention will speedily work an entire revolution in telegraphing throughout the world. This invention may be called a printing press and telegraph instrument combined, for it prints all messages, in plain Roman capitals, with unerring correctness, and at an almost incredible rate of speed, averaging, in the ordinary despatch of business, from 20,000 to 25,000 letters per hour. The Hughes instrument clearly demonstrates the practicability of sending and receiving messages in opposite directions over the same wire at the same instant of time, and with the utmost ease, regularity and certainty. It will consequently require but one wire and one operator, at any given point, to send and receive as much business as can be transmitted by the aid of four or five operators, and an equal number of wires, under the Morse system. Another, equally important, peculiarly connected with the Hughes invention is the undoubted fact that it will work perfectly in very long circuits, and with unerring accuracy in all states of the atmosphere—neither mist, rain nor snow having any perceptible effect upon it. Therefore, at seasons when the Morse and House instruments are utterly powerless, even in circuits of fifty miles, there is every reason to believe that the Hughes instrument will work reliably in circuits of one or two thousand miles. The simplicity and durability of the new machine will compare favorably with the Morse, and it is vastly superior, in these respects, to the House instrument. The governing principle of this invention is wholly dissimilar to that of the Morse, House, and all other telegraph instruments, and, consequently, there can be no difficulty on the score of the patent, which, we understand, has been sold for about $125,000 or $150,000 to the American Telegraph Company—a new association, having its head quarters in this city, but composed of gentlemen of the highest respectability, residing in different sections of the United States and the British North American Provinces, and of which it is sufficient to say, that Peter Cooper, Esq., is the President, and Wilson G. Hunt, Esq., Treasurer.—[N. Y. Herald, May 19, 1856.

An Outrage upon a Young Girl.

The Watertown Journal tells the following:

A few nights since, a man called at the house of an old lady in the adjoining village of Black River, where he requested to see a young girl, the old lady's grand-daughter. She appeared, and the man invited her to accompany him to a "dance" to be given at a hotel in the same village; and as she had been in the habit of doing, she readily accepted the invitation. Arrived at the hotel alluded to, no signs of a "dance" or other festivity were perceptible—and then the villain represented to the girl that he had mistaken the hotel, and that the "dance" was to be given at the "Red Tavern," a well known house located at Sanford's Corners, some few miles distant. Two other fellows now appeared and confirmed the statement, adding that they were just proceeding for their ladies, residing on the road between Black River and Sandford's Corners. So toward the Red Tavern they proceeded, followed at a short distance by two accomplices—one of whom was a physician. Drink (first brandy, which was refused, and then water) was offered her, and in this drink a stupefying drug, it is supposed, lay concealed, for shortly after partaking she became unconscious. When recollection returned she found herself upon a bed in the chamber of a tavern and the demons about her. Her ruin had been completed, however. By the aid of the fiends who had worse than murdered her, she was enabled to reach her home. The villains are yet at large; how long they will remain so is doubtful; but that their apprehension will be speedy is sincerely to be desired. It is rumored that the physician who is one of the diobolical trio, has offered $1,000 to have the matter quietly settled. The girl is but sixteen years old an orphan!

Such scoundrels ought to have their throats cut and if they had committed their diabolical deed in Utah they would have been accommodated.

An editor out West says—"If we have offended any man in the short but brilliant course of our career, let him send us a new hat, and say nothing more about it."

Live Within Your Means.

We don't like stinginess. We don't like "economy" when it comes down to rags and starvation. We have no sympathy with the notion that the poor man should stand still, while the rest of the world moves forward. It is no man's duty to deny himself of every luxury, every recreation, every comfort, that he may get rich. It is no man's duty to make an iceberg of himself—to shut his eyes and ears to the suffering of his fellows—and to deny himself the enjoyment that results from generous actions—merely that he may hoard wealth for his heirs to quarrel about.

But there is yet an economy which is every man's duty, and which is especially commendable in the man who struggles with poverty—an economy which is consistent with happiness, and which must be practiced, if the poor man would secure independence.

It is every man's privilege, and it becomes his duty to live within his means; not up to, but within them. Wealth does not make the man, we admit, and should never be taken into account in our judgement of men. But competence should be secured when it can be; and almost always can be, by the practice of economy and self-denial to only a tolerable extent. It should be secured, not so much for others to look upon, or to raise us in the estimation of others, as to secure the independence, and the constant satisfaction that is derived from its acquirement and possession.

We would like to impress this single fact upon the mind of every laboring man who may peruse this short article—that it is possible for him to raise above poverty, and that the path to independence, though beset with toils and self-sacrifice, is much pleasanter to the traveler than any one he can enter upon.

The man who feels that he is earning something more than he is spending, will walk the streets with a much lighter heart and enter his home with a much more cheerful countenance than he who spends as he goes or falls gradually behind his necessities in acquiring the means of meeting them.

Next to the slavery of intemperance there is no slavery on earth more galling than that of poverty and indebtedness. The man who is everybody's debtor is everybody's slave, and is in a much worse condition than he who serves a single master.

For the sake of the present, then, as well for the sake of the future, we would most earnestly urge upon every workingman to live within his means. Let him lay by something every day—if it be but a penny, be it a penny—it is better than nothing; infinately better than running in debt, a penny a day, or a penny a week. If he can earn a dollar let him try, fairly and faithfully, the experiment of living on ninety cents. He will like it.

"People will laugh." Let them laugh. "They will call me stingy." Better call you stingy than say you do not pay your debts. "They will wonder why I do not have better furniture, live in a finer house, and attend concerts and the play house." Let them wonder, for a while, it won't hurt them, and it certainly won't you. By and by you can have a fine house, and fine furniture of your own, and they will wonder again, and come billing and cooing around you, like so many pleased fools. Try the experiment. Live within your means.—[Maine Farmer.

Changes in a Life-Time.

The death of Rogers the poet, at the age of ninety-one, suggests what vast changes have taken place within his lifetime. He has left on record, in his "Table Talk," that he saw the rebels on Temple Bar; that he saw several girls, who were mere children, going to execution for having participated in the Lord George Gordon riots: and that he had talked with General Oglethorpe, who had talked with men who remembered the Great Rebellion, and were cotemporary with the death of Charles the First. What mighty changes rise before the memory in thinking of such a life! The progress, among all civilized nations, since Rogers was a child, is almost incredible. Bull-baiting and cock-fighting, for example were the amusements of the highest classes there; while now such exhibitions have ceased to be attended, even by the lowest and most vulgar. Men were quartered for great crimes, and their quarters left to rot in sun and wind, in presence of a whole city, then; while now for the same crime, transportation is the severest punishment, and it is generally followed by a speedy pardon. Finally the difference between "Tom Jones" and "The Newcomes" in decency illustrates the difference in manners of that age and this.

The laws have changed not less, and invariably for the better. In this country, promigeniture has been abolished, and republicanism substituted for colonial slavery. In England a penal code, almost as bloody as Draco's, has been replaced by one comparatively mild; the law courts have been reformed, and legislation generally imbued with a more popular character. The world before the deluge, and the world after it, were scarcely more different, in these respects, than England when Rogers was born, and England when he died. The advances made in material progress are even greater. Rogers found turnpikes just coming in; he left railroads everywhere threading the land. He found slow, clumsy ships; he left swift-going steamers. He found a tardy post for the transmission of news and letters; he left the magnetic telegraph. He found London streets almost unlighted; he left them ablaze with gas. He found the suburbs swarming with highwaymen; he left a police that kept guard over the whole kingdom. Perhaps never, since the world began, has there been so much progress, in every department of civilized life, as during the ninety years of Rogers.—[Philadelphia Ledger.

The Indians of the United States.

According to the report for 1855 of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Indian population of the United States, exclusive of a few in several of the States who have lost their tribal character, or amalgamated with the whites or blacks, may be estimated at from 320,000 to 350,000 souls.

The tribes are ninety-nine in number. In 1854, the payments of money by the Government to the various tribes amounted to $546,357 38. During the last ten years, expenditures have been made by certain societies for the educational and religious advancement of the Indians, as follows: By the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions, Boston, $402,974; by the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, New York, $327,193 53; by the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, New York, $107,230; by the American Indian Mission Association, Louisville, $104,413 15; by the Catholic Mission, St. Louis, $87,319 05. During the same period the Methodist Episcopal Church South has expended for the same purposes about $288,000. The total outlay for the christianization and civilization of the Indians, within the last ten years, amounts to more than $2,150,000.

Making a Million Strokes.

A man lately accepted a challenge to make one million strokes with pen and ink within a month; not to be mere scratches or dots, but fair down strokes, such as form a child's first lesson in writing. The month was to be four weeks; he was to abstain from the task on Sundays, so that he must average about 36,000 strokes per day. On the first day he executed about 50,000 strokes; on the second day nearly as many. But at length after many days, the hand became stiff and weary, the wrist swollen, and it required the constant attendance of a relation or friend to besprinkle it without interrupting his progress over the paper, with a lotion calculated to invigorate it. On the 23d day the million strokes, exceeded by some few thousands "to make assurance doubly sure," were accomplished.—[N. Y. Mirror.

While some hands were digging out a cellar in Botetourt county, Va., about four miles from Buchanan, they came upon a quantity of coin, consisting of some eight pieces, in an iron box about fourteen inches square. The coin was larger than a dollar, and the inscription in a language wholly unknown by any person in the vicinity. Upon digging down some sixteen inches lower they came upon a quantity of unseen shapes. Several Scientific gentlemen have examined into the matter, and have come to the conclusion that the coins, together with the various other curiosities, must have been placed there at an extremely early date, and before the settlement of this country.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 31, 1856.

Religious Intolerance and Editorial Ignorance and Impudence.

We have had forwarded to us an extract from the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin of May 6, which exhibits more ignorance, intolerance, calumny, barefaced falsehood and vindictive vituperation, than we have met with for a length of time; and if it had not been for the egregious ignorance manifested, both of religious matters generally and the people attacked by the writer, we should have set him down as a lackey to the Spanish inquisitorial tribune. As it is, the most charitable construction that we can put upon it is, that some adventurer, looking for a situation, has been trying his hand at writing, and that by some mischance his abortion had slipped into the paper unobserved by the editorial department; for no gentleman could either write or publish such a thing; but as it comes out in editorial dress, we are obliged to notice it as such, leaving the gentlemen (!) of the Bulletin to correct their own errors.

The writer commences by stating:

"We observe that a highly respectable cotemporary, in speaking of several hundred Mormons recently arrived in New York, describes their conduct as having been most exemplary; that no polygamy was allowed during the voyage, that they were a promising looking party, &c.

"It is such semi encouragement as this which induces many of the weak minded to think that perhaps Mormonism is on the whole a pretty good sort of an institution; that the Mormons possibly are very good people, and that "may be" they are not so bad as described. We have but little patience with such indulgence. It is a toleration which lays the foundation for the harshest and most infamous intolerance. We are willing that Mormons, or any other people, should be fairly treated; but it is treating them more than fairly to speak as if half pleased at their arrival, and to mention that they had not as yet committed polygamy, as if they never intended to, when all the world knows that the delightful party are en route for a region where every law of decency and religion will be violated by them—a region where social ties are torn asunder, and where domestic tyranny runs riot in its wickedest and most cruel forms."

Whence did this man obtain his information? Who told him that "social ties are torn asunder, and that domestic tyranny runs riot in its wickedest and most cruel forms?" We pronounce the statement as a perverse, malignant slander, and a barefaced falsehood, and proclaim the man who utters it a wanton, malicious defamer; and we stand prepared to prove that there is not one-tenth the amount of "domestic tyranny and the rending asunder of social ties" in Utah Territory in proportion to its inhabitants, that there is in the city of brotherly love, from whence emanates this precious morceau.

We cannot help sometimes cherishing feelings of disgust for such contemptible scribblers, who will wantonly villify a people, who, if they were a twentieth part as corrupt as the persons with whom they associate, we would repudiate for ever. We do not like to rake up the nastiness of people, but we are sometimes obliged to do it in self-defence.

Some time ago, a friend of ours staying at an hotel, called respectable, in Philadelphia, in passing through the bar room was surprised at the discovery of a number of indelicate pictures, and, on expressing his astonishment to a gentleman present, and asking what object was to be gained by such exhibitions in such places, he was very quietly informed that "both married and single gentlemen in the hotel tolerated such things, and had their associates, and that such was public taste that hotels could not be conducted profitably very well without them." Not long since, being up town in the said city, and needing some refreshment, we asked a gentleman, a Philadelphian, if he could take us to some place where we could obtain it; he took us to a place having some exterior claims to decency; when we entered we found the walls covered with the most indelicate pictures, à la mode Française; feeling indignant, we said to our conductor, "have you no better places than such dens as these?" he replied, "it is very difficult to find any without such appendages." We could give names, places and circumstances

Does the Bulletin know anything about the virtuous cyprians; houses of assignation, for both married and single? Was he ever informed that herds of unblushing prostitutes stalk the streets of his city—not stealthily when the sun has withdrawn the light of his countenance, but in open day, flaunting in the gaudiest attire, and of shoals of their, if possible, more degraded sisterhood who are less jaunty and who move in lower (!) spheres? Knows he anything of the innumerable undisguised dens of infamy of every grade, whose pestiferous, blighting, damning influence is sending thousands to a premature grave? Was he ever acquainted with heartless wretches, in the shape of men, who have destroyed their victims by the score, and then gloat over them—rejoicing in the ruin and misery they had wrought? Is it unknown to him that such demons are received into what is called respectable society in his puritanic city? Did he ever see, or publish, anything like the following:

Are there no Madame Restells in Philadelphia? Did he ever read the shoals of advertisements, impudently and disgustingly professing to prevent as well as to destroy life in embryo, or the capabilities of physicians to heal the effects of the damning prostitution that everywhere prevails? Did he ever reflect that all these were so many parts of a "necessary institution" to this corrupt generation? Did he ever think that, peradventure, it was not quite so bad to act as honest men and sustain more wives and families than one than to be so corrupt, debased, and fallen as to destroy the peace of families, and ruin the virtue of thousands; making a profession of virtue while they are hypocritically weltering in all of the above abominations? Did he ever read, or publish, anything in the Bulletin about faithless husbands, broken-hearted, deserted wives, ruined virtue, and rampant debauchery and corruption? Or is he utterly oblivious to such things? If Brutus was not an honorable man we should remind him of a passage of Scripture, "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone." Yet this man, in this delectable city, whose rank corruption is ascending from its disgusting stews in fœtid, loathsome debauch, as another Sodom, in the face of high heaven; a stink in the nostrils of God, angels, and all honest men. This innocent, enveloped with these circumstances, will, like the schoolboy, wipe his mouth with his sleeve, straighten out his countenance, pull up his shirt collars, and with arms akimbo, talk of the "brutality, ignorance, and vice" of the Mormons. Why, Mr. Bulletin, if there were in Utah a tenth part of the shameless, unblushing debauch in which your city is sunk, we would seek an asylum elsewhere, if we travelled to the ends of the earth. Yet this man thinks it not to be tolerated that a "highly respectable cotemporary, in speaking of several hundred Mormons recently arrived in New York, describes their conduct as being most exemplary," and then states that "it is such semi-encouragement as this which induces many of the weak-minded to think that perhaps Mormonism is, on the whole, a pretty good kind of an institution." Now it is a great pity that our cotemporaries should be so blinded; and it is really complimentary to the Mormons to receive such notice. Why, it is quite patronizing! The Mormons will surely take off their hats and make their best bow—"exemplary conduct!" and among the Mormons, too, astonishing! Are they really as good as us?—as we Philadelphians? This editor, if he is "respectable," must be a weak-minded man to write so; it is injurious to the public morals, and if he had found it so he ought not to have stated it—the strong-minded editors of the Bulletin would not; they would have more respect for public opinion than to publish the truth on this matter. They unquestionably know of the things we have mentioned and thousands of others of a similar nature that transpire in Philadelphia; but then they are done sub rosa—they would not be so vulgar as to tell the truth about it—everything of this kind must pass under the censorship as well as the gladiatorial knife of the Bulletin, and be clipped, and carved, and framed to suit public opinion.

Now, we can inform the Bulletin that a number of the most respectable papers, both in New York, Philadelphia, and Boston, have published the most flattering accounts about the Mormons; and, as it is probably new to him, we can inform him how they get their news. Great numbers of Mormons have arrived in those cities within the last two years. Respectable journals in those cities have their reporters, who go aboard the vessels and visit the Mormons; write what they see and hear, and it is published according to these reports. We suppose that this will be news to the Bulletin; we write it that he may know that there are numbers of honest journals who dare write the truth, and whose editors and reporters are neither religious bigots, truckling politicians, nor craven hypocrites.

The following will show how the Bulletin obtains his information:

"Brutality, ignorance and vice! Such are the guiding influences, in Mormon society—influences the more to be feared since it cannot be denied that they are coupled with so much of the spirit of mere industry and thrift, that it is to be feared that they are in a fair condition to become permanent. Let any one read with impartiality all the books which have been written for and against the Mormon doctrines—let him peruse the different accounts extant of their country, manners and customs, and to what conclusion will he arrive? Why, that they are developing on a grand scale a harsh, vulgar community of rude men and women, a community whose members are as distant as beings at all civilized can be, from all the amenities and refinements of religion, social culture, literature and art, and a community, too, which goes backwards instead of progressing in all these particulars.

Mormon "brutality, ignorance, and vice!" We will put that alongside of the highly-refined courtesy, the profound intelligence of our cotemporary, and the unsullied, delectable, virgin purity of his most chaste, exemplary city. As it regards our hero's information, we find that he obtains it from reading impartially all the books written for (!) and against Mormonism. We must confess that very few possess such sources of information; how many, and who the authors are, that he has read for it, we are at a loss to know; it is easily to divine which he has read against it. We suppose "Female Life among the Mormons," Ferris's book, perhaps "Van Dusen's," probably "Howe's," and other yellow-backed trash, written to supply the vitiated tastes of those as credulous as the Bulletin, and to supply the wants of the necessitous writers.

If the editor of the Bulletin will send to our office we will furnish him with quite a list of authors against Mormonism, of whose writings he is evidently ignorant, much more respectable than those he has read. Did he ever read Gulliver's Travels, Jack the Giant Killer, Tom Thumb, and Cinderella? We would whisper one thing in his ears—that Mormonism is not shut up in a corner; that it is not dependant upon some of those needy writers for character, and is as regardless of the Bulletin's twaddle; that thousands of respectable men, of all classes, have visited both Nauvoo and Salt Lake, whose disinterested testimony is quite as reliable as that of his penny-a-line scribblers, and we would advise him the next time he dips his vindictive pen into the gall, to write against a virtuous, honest, enterprising, industrious people, to be a little more consistent if he can, for he does not gain much credit nor elevate himself very highly in the estimation of respectable, intelligent people, by publishing statements that so many thousands of our fellow-citizens know to be palpable falsehoods.

Our Gulliver next turns religious, and from the profundity of his histronic and theological lore perpetrates the following:

"There are people who advocate tolerance to every religion, and it is our pride to enrol ourselves among them. But in what way or on what grounds is Mormonism a religion? Religion, however erratic, to be regarded as such, must spring up from popular needs and from those developments of society which seek a new faith to characterise them. Such was the case with Mahometanism and the Reformation. In both cases the tyranny and corruption of a previous faith rendered some new belief a matter of necessity."

From the above it will be discovered that his theology, like his other writings, is merely a matter of speculative theory—a system of convenience and accommodation, without any regard either to God, truth, or the Bible—a system of priestcraft and hypocrisy—a system of faith professedly in God; hypocritically manufactured by man, a la mode the article in the Bulletin; made to order—a religious empericism; nostrums concocted to gull the ignorant, entrap the unwary, to line the pockets and guild over the countenances of legalized hypocrites. He unblushingly tells us that "religion, to be regarded as such, must spring up from popular needs and from those developments in society which seek a new faith to characterize them. Such was the case with Mahometanism and the Reformation. In both cases the tyranny and corruption of a previous faith rendered some new belief a matter of necessity."

The plain English of the above is, that God has nothing to do with religion at all; that his interference and dictation is out of the question entirely; and that neither can the Bible be consulted; that God never did speak to man; that there never was any such thing as prophecy or revelation; that "religion sprang up from popular need," just, for instance, as the Egyptian gods, Baltshazar's image, the Delphian Oracle, the car of Budhoo, the Bacchanalian sports, the Romish saturnalia, or the Philadelphia system, before alluded to; all of which are the offspring of popular tastes and "popular needs." But those popular developments in society seek a new faith; such was the case with Mahommedanism and the Reformation. Religion of course is only a shuttlecock, knocked about according to the caprice of the player: of which, in regard to the great principle of truth, it was and is utterly oblivious—a sort of a spiritual mummery, a national panacea suited only for old women and love-sick maids. Our hero says there are persons "who advocate tolerance to every religion, and that he feels proud of enrolling himself among that number." How much those persons referred to may feel themselves honored with his association, it is not of course for us to say, for he certainly has presented the most heterogenous mass of nonsense that we ever saw lapped up in so small a parcel. He has a man-made religion, springing up from the wants of the people, "such, for instance, as Mahomedanism and the Reformation." They had the religion of Jesus, but that was a poor kind of a concern, not at all adapted to the wants of the people; and Mahommed seeing this, introduced his religion to meet the popular wants, and it proved the very thing; and then it was found out that Mahommedanism would not do for some places; they believed him an imposter; however, this was not of so much importance as the popular wants and tastes; hence, Martin Luther arose, and introduced the doctrines of the Reformation—not that there was anything either unscriptural or wrong particularly in the Catholic Church, but it did not suit the popular taste; then there were special tastes, such as Methodists, Presbyterians, Friends, Dunkers, Jumpers, Ranters, Millerites and every kind of public or private tastes to be consulted. It would make no difference of course to our Quixote which it was, Buddhism, the doctrines of Zoroaster, or Confucius. The whispered exclamation of a Delphian oracle, the religion of Jesus or Mahommed, would all be alike to him, provided it "sprung up from popular needs and from those developments in society that seek a new faith to characterize them." He would be equally at home as a Ulema of Constantinople, a Bramin of Benares, or a student of the sacred college of Pekin; as a Muezzin, Mufti or a dancing Dervish. He could, with the same nonchalence, be a priest of Bacchus, a participator in the Romish Saturnalia, a devotee at the shrine of the goddess Diana, an administrator at the temple of Moloch, a Jesuit or Capucian Friar, a Ranter Priest, a Spiritual Medium, or anything true or false, provided it only was adapted, as most of them are, or were, to popular tastes.

We are not surprised, therefore, with the above views that our champion should entertain such odd ideas about Mormonism, and thinking it unpopular, should rage and rant as he has done; cowards and sneaks generally exhibit their power on the weak and defenceless. We have met with more than one blustering Falstaff in our day, but we covet not their laurels, nor envy them their blustering strut or ephemeral honors; and whatever may be their ideas, they cannot form as contemptible an opinion of us as we do of them.

Perhaps, with such popular men a few pennies might operate. We would inform our hero that we have a large society in Philadelphia who worship in the Washington Hall in the city of brotherly love; and as truth has so very little to do with his statements, and "popular needs" is every thing, perhaps he would not gain much credit where there are so many cognizant to his falsehoods; and perhaps the Mormons themselves might be quite as likely to purchase his paper, if the exhibitor of truth, as they would if steeped in falsehood and soaked in wormwood and gall.

We have noticed the above to unmask this Philadelphian Goliath and to exhibit to our readers who are their calumniators. The vituperative, unmeaning rant that follows is too contemptible for our notice.

Lynch at Washington.

In last week's Congressional, we gave a more than ordinary lengthy report of the proceedings in the Senate on the 20th. The language of the Senators there reported was not per se entitled to a place in our columns, we think such language unbecoming the place and the position the gentlemen occupy; but as it showed to what honorable Senators can descend, and in some measure indicates the respect they themselves entertain for the highest, and what should be the most honorable and most wise assembly in the Nation, we published it.

Senator Sumner from Massachusetts delivered on that occasion a very lengthy address, under three different heads: "First, THE CRIME AGAINST KANSAS, in its origin and extent; Secondly, THE APOLOGIES FOR THE CRIME; and Thirdly, THE TRUE REMEDY."

The speech has been admired and applauded by the Anti-Slavery party, the Pro-Slavery party have blamed the gentleman for the too frequent use of abusive language and uncalled for personalities. Senators Cass, Mason and Douglas replied to the attacks upon their course, on the Slavery question, as reported last week. Senator Butler who came in for a large share of attention on that occasion was absent. Between one and two o'clock of the 22d, the day after the publication of the report, Col. Preston S. Brooks, member of the House of Representatives from South Carolina, went to the Senate Chamber, and, in the presence of upwards of a dozen Senators, gave Mr. Sumner a severe beating about the head with a gutta percha cane; prefacing the performance by a brief declaration of his intention to do so, to avenge an insult to the State whose Representative he was, and likewise the personal attack upon his aged and absent relative Senator Butler. Several Senators interfered, and attended to Mr. Sumner who was perfectly unconscious from the wounds received.

Rumor with her thousand tongues has been at work; different versions of the affair have been circulated, but the facts without the supplements are as stated above.

On the complaint of Mr. Wm. Y. Leader, Justice Hollingshead required Mr. Brooks to give bail in the sum of five hundred dollars as security for his appearance when required. The day following the assault the Senate appointed a committee of five of their number to enquire into and report the facts of the case and their opinion thereon. The Senate subsequently granted to the committee, the power to send for persons and papers and have a thorough investigation. After a brisk discussion the House nominated five of their number to form an investigating committee likewise, and thus the affair proceeds. Mr. Sumner is slowly recovering. The telegraph reports that contributions are being made in Charleston and Columbia for the purpose of getting up a testimonial for presentation to Mr. Brooks, whose course is very generally approved in these localities.

The excitement has been very great in Massachusetts. Meetings have been held in the principal towns of the State at which men of different shades of politics have united in condemming the conduct of the Representative, and in sympathizing with the Senator. The Senate passed the following resolutions on Monday.

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, That we have received with deep concern information of the recent violent assault committed in the Senate chamber at Washington, upon the person of the Hon. Charles Sumner, one of our representatives in Congress, by Preston S. Brooks, a member of the House of Representatives, from South Carolina—an assault which no provocation could justify—brutal and cowardly in itself—a gross breach of parliamentary privilege—a ruthless attack upon the liberty of speech—an outrage of the decencies of civilized life, and an indignity to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That the Legislature of Massachusetts, in the name of the free and enlightened people, demands for her representatives in the national Legislature entire freedom of speech, and will uphold them in the proper exercise of the essential right of American citizens.

Resolved, That we approve of Mr. Sumner's earnest and fearless declaration of free principles, and his manly defence of human rights and free territory.

Resolved, That the Legislature of Massachusetts is imperatively called by the plainest dictates of duty, from a decent regard of the rights of her citizens and respect for her character as a sovereign State, to demand, and the Legislature of Massachusetts hereby does demand, of the national Congress a prompt and strict investigation into the recent assault upon Mr. Sumner, and the expulsion by the House of Mr Brooks of South Carolina, and any other members concerned with him in said assault.

Resolved, That His Excellency the Governor be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing resolves to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and members of the House of Representatives from this Commonwealth in the Congress of the United States.

After the adoption of the foregoing resolutions, they were transmitted to the House for the action of that body upon them.

In the House the resolutions excited an animated debate, but, after a slight amendment to the third, they were adopted by 187 against 23.

However much the language of Mr. Sumner is deserving of the condemnation it has received, there can be no excuse for the cool and deliberate assault of Mr. Brooks. Principles could, and should, be discussed on their own merits and when one or another forgets the obligations of respect due the Senate and House let the transgressor be confronted by law—not gutta percha, or revolvers.

Since the foregoing was written, Mr. Butler has returned to Washington and acknowledges with pleasure his approval of the conduct of his relative. Mr. Wilson, the colleague of Mr. Sumner, characterized the assault as brutal, murderous and cowardly. Mr. B. called him a liar. He afterwards appologised for his language. Mr. Brooks is reported to have sent a challenge to Mr. Wilson.

Nicaragua.

SENOR MARCOLETO, Representative at Washington, of the late Nicaraguan government, has published his protest against President Pierce's recognition of the Walker-Rivas government. He commences with setting forth his inability to discover now, any just reason for the acknowledgment of the Walker movement more than what existed in December last, when Col. P. H. French, was rejected as the new Representative. Senor Marcoleto maintains that the movement now headed by Walker, was not a Nicaraguan movement in the beginning, and has not had the support of any but a handful of rebels, except the support that has been forced from the inhabitants by "Military oppressors," that the principal proprietors and merchants, military chiefs and officers of inferior ranks have left the country, many of them entering the army of Costa Rica, among whom President Rivas' own son. That great numbers of persons are forced to remain in the cities contrary to their desires, and are plundered and beggared for the maintenance of the movement. The ex-minister concludes his protest thus:

"And all hope in human justice being lost, the undersigned will, with resignation, confide in the sometimes tardy, but sure and inflexible decrees and effects of Divine justice; for God, who with love watches over all his creatures, never permits the consummation of atrocious acts to remain unpunished when the victims are innocent.

"The undersigned asks the ——— to be pleased to bring the contents of this dispatch under the knowledge of his government, and, at the same time, to receive the assurance of his high consideration."

The last news from Nicaragua via New Orleans, represents that the Costa Rican army was retreating.

The Costa Ricans say they were deceived in regard to the feelings of the people of Nicaragua towards Walker, and expected to be received with open arms. They were very indignant at the false representations which were made to them on the subject.

It is confirmed that the loss of the Costa Ricans at the battle of Rivas, in killed and wounded, amounted to 650, and that of Walker's army to about 100.

Dr. Jeter Clinton.

ELDER JETER CLINTON who was appointed at a Conference in Great Salt Lake City in August, 1854, to accompany us on our Eastern Mission, and who has had, since his arrival in the States, the Presidency of the Churches in the Philadelphia district of country is now released from his labors, to return to Utah. We learn from Bro. Clinton, that he was at St. Louis on the 19th inst., in good health and excellent spirits, preparing to start for the Plains.

Elder Clinton has labored faithfully to build up the Kingdom of God and has we believe, enjoyed the confidence and esteem of all good folks with whom he has been associated. We have been much satisfied with his co-operation and readiness to carry out our instructions. He leaves his field of labor with our blessing and our best wishes for a prosperous journey, and happy return to the bosom of his family.

Till further notice Elder Angus M. Cannon will succeed him in the Presidency. Let the Saints listen to and carry out the instructions of Bro. Cannon, and they will prosper. He is young, but he is sustained by his brethren and his God. He will do his duty.

Inceresting from Utah.

ST. LOUIS, May 28, 1856.

"THE Salt Lake mail has arrived here, bringing dates to the 26th of March.

A convention for forming a State constitution met at the Council House on the 17th of March, and organized by the election of Hon. J. M. Grant, President. Committees were appointed to draft a constitution. They had a conference on the 24th, and unanimously reported a constitution for the State of Deseret. Chief Justice Kinney dissented from the report, but only on one point, viz; That he prefered to have the Judges elected by the people rather than by the General Assembly.

The Republican to-day publishes the constitution of the State of Deseret, recently formed and ratified by the people, in general convention, at Salt Lake City, April 6th. It is exceedingly brief and plain, and says nothing about slavery. It announces the free toleration of all religions and does not refer to polygamy.

A memorial was adopted asking admission to the Union, Geo. A. Smith and John Taylor were appointed delegates to present it to Congress."

By the above despatch we are informed of our appointment to Washington. We are ever ready to serve Utah in any sphere her citizens choose to place us. We acknowledge this renewed expression of their confidence and trust with our friend and colleague to faithfully represent the mountaineers. We are not confined to any particular calling—we are of the hive of Deseret, and there the boys are ready for any work from the felling of a tree to the ruling of a nation. As soon as we get Deseret set in motion we may spare a few of our sons to put things right for some of the potentates of the earth who are presently in straitened places.

We hope to have the Constitution of Deseret before our readers in our next issue.

Kansas.

EVERY day for many long months the Telegraph has passed something from Kansas. We presume no Territory in its passage to a State ever excited so much attention. East, West, North, and South has been alike interested. Two parties have struggled for the victory of a principle. The whole soul of each party has been in the battle, and no means have been left untried to secure the prize. As the struggle has progressed each has shown a determination to conquer or die. At first it was a war of words; it has now reached a war of arms. Kansas is in reality in a state of "civil war." If implicit reliance could be placed in the accounts that come from that section of country, it might be safely said, that this unfortunate Territory has gathered within her borders men whom circumstances have rendered the most daring and heartless.

The following are the latest dispatches:

CHICAGO, May 26, 1856.

The Chicago Tribune publishes an extra based upon intelligence brought by three men directly from Lawrence. They state that a company of mounted men made their appearance near Lawrence on Wednesday the 21st, where they halted until re-enforcements had increased their numbers to 400. They bore flags and banners with various mottoes and devices, but no United States flag. During the forenoon, the Committee of Public Safety of Lawrence dispatched a messenger with a note to Marshal Donaldson, who headed the force, assuring him that the citizens would make no resistance to any process he might wish to serve, and asking protection for their lives and property.

The Marshal made no reply, but at 11 o'clock he sent a Deputy Marshal with a posse of ten men into the town. The Deputy summoned four of the citizens to assist in making arrests, and took G. W. Dietzler, and G. W. Smith prisoners. The Deputy Marshal, having thus tested the willingness of the citizens to respect his authority, went with his posse to the Free State Hotel and dined, after which they removed the prisoners without molestation.

Soon after this Sheriff Jones made his appearance with eighteen men, and demanded that all the public and private arms in the town be given up, giving the people five minutes to accede to his demand, and threatening, in case of refusal, to storm the town. He did not attempt to make any arrests, but said he came for the purpose of obtaining the arms. One field piece was given up in answer to the demand, but the citizens refused to surrender their private arms.

Jones then left, and in half an hour after returned with an overwhelming force and two pieces of artillery, with which he commenced cannonading the Free State Hotel and The Herald of Freedom printing office. The inhabitants commenced leaving the town, and the informants of The Chicago Tribune also left before the work of destruction was complete, but the hotel was burned and the press and type of The Herald of Freedom destroyed before their departure, and they had proceeded but fifteen miles when (at 8 o'clock in the evening) they saw a large volume of smoke and a great light in the direction of Lawrence, and they have no doubt of the destruction of the town.

Another messenger who left Leavenworth just before the departure of the boat, says that several men were killed by Jones's party. It is feared that General Pomeroy has been hung by a mob. Governor Robinson is at Lecompton, in the custody of the authorities. Ex-Governor Reader is supposed to be in a place of safety, and is daily expected in Chicago, by way of Nebraska and Iowa. Threats have been made to hang Robinson, Brown and Dietseler. The Free State men will make a stand at Topeka, and are now gathering at that point.

Ex Senator Atchison is in the Territory.

The United States troops are not allowed from their quarters, many of the soldiers being anxious to protect the settlers.

ST. LOUIS, May 26, 1856.

The Lexington (Mo.) Express publishes an extra which was received here to-day, confirming the report of the destruction of Lawrence on Wednesday last. The account published by The Express states that after the Marshal had arrested all the persons he had writs for, he turned the posse over to Sheriff Jones, who attempt to make arrests, but was resisted by the people, who fired on his men.

Sheriff Jones then cannonaded and set fire to the hotel and the office of The Herald of Freedom, destroying both. When the messenger left the artillery was still firing, and the fire spreading to other portions of the town, but up to the time of his departure but few lives had been lost. This is reported as the testimony of Hutchinson and Ratcliffe, free State men. The Express is a pro-slavery paper.

CHICAGO, May 27, 1856.

The St. Louis Republican, of yesterday, contains a letter announcing the return of Messrs. Robinson, Schuyler and Conway, under the charge of the Territorial authorities.

An extra was issued in Kansas City, from the Enterprise office, on the 22d inst., received here last night, which says that Jones took about twenty men into Lawrence, and at his demand General Pomeroy surrendered all the rifles and cannon he could get, which were stacked in the streets. Jones then requested Eldridge to move his furniture from the hotel; but he declining to do so, a posse entered it and carried most of it into the street. Jones gave express orders that no private property should be injured, and particularly that Gov. Robinson's house should not be touched; but after a portion of the posse had left the house was burned. During the excitement one man was shot and another killed by the falling bricks from the walls of the hotel. Jones gave Pomeroy a receipt for all the rifles and cannon.

ST. LOUIS, May 27, 1856.

The hotel, two printing offices, and Governor Robinson's house, in Lawrence, have been destroyed, and two free State men shot. General Pomeroy surrendered up all arms in his possession, without resistance. Governor Robinson is in prison at Lecompte. General Pomeroy is at liberty in Lawrence, and Gov. Reeder is unheard from.

WASHINGTON, May 27, 1856.

The conduct of Col. Sumner, commanding in Kansas, meets with the approval of the administration, of which he has officially been informed, and complimented for his prudence.

CHICAGO, May 28, 1856.

The St. Louis Democrat learns from passengers who arrived from Kansas in the Morning Star, that it is the intention of Sheriff Jones to proceed immediately to Topeka, which is also to be destroyed, or the inhabitants forced to submission.

The Democrat also contains accounts of four additional public murders of citizens of Kansas, the facts concerning which have just been made known.

ST. LOUIS, May 28, 1856.

A correspondent of the Republican, writing from St. Joseph, says that on the night of the 21st inst. the house of Jacob Friend, four miles from St. Joseph, was burned, together with himself, his wife and five children. It is supposed that they were murdered previous to the firing of the house, but no reason is assigned for the deed, Mr. Friend being a peaceable and orderly man.

CHICAGO, May 28, 1856.

EX-GOV. Reeder and Mr. Fogg, Secretary of the Kansas Investigating Committee, arrived here this afternoon.

Mr. Reeder is at this moment (8. P. M.) addressing an immense concourse of citizens in front of the Briggs House. He is to attend the Republican Convention at Bloomington to-morrow, and will proceed from thence to Washington.

The Late Cowhiding of an Editor.

CAPTAIN LYSTER, who lately cowhided the Editor of the Sunday Courier, and Mr. Walters, the friend of the former, failing to appear at the Court of Special Sessions, on Tuesday last, forfeited their recognizances, $500 each. One of the counsel for the non-appearing gentlemen tried his utmost to shake the decision of the Recorder. He read a letter excusing their absence from the sickness of Mr. Walters at Paterson, N. J. As they were gentlemen and not loafers—and had the intention of leaving the country forthwith, he thought they might be permitted to withdraw their plea of guilty, and go before a jury at the General Sessions. The Recorder considered a gentleman's cowhiding a more serious matter than one from a loafer, and for public example he would not reverse the decision. The dollars are lost—a costly cowhiding.

Hon. Milliard Fillmore.

THIS gentleman, is expected to arrive here about the middle of June. One thousand dollars have been voted by the city authorities for his entertainment while here. The Special Committee of the Aldermen appointed to make the necessary arrangements have decided upon taking apartments for him at the St. Nicholas Hotel. A Committee was appointed to make arrangements for chartering a boat for the purpose of meeting him at Staten Island, from which place he will be brought to the Battery, where one hundred guns will be fired, and a procession march to the hotel.

Mr. Crampton.

THIS gentleman who has been to receive his passports and go home, times without number, has at length been dismissed. On Monday evening he was officially notified of the discontinuance of his diplomatic relations as Minister from Great Britain, and was furnished with his passports. The Consuls at New York, Philadelphia and Cincinnati were likewise informed by letter of their dismissal.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE steamboat Robert L. Stevens left pier No. 3 Sunday morning, at 9 o'clock, on an excursion to the Fishing Banks. There were about two hundred passengers on board. The steamer arrived at the Banks, opposite Long Branch, at about 11:30 A. M. The excursionists were enjoying themselves heartily, "from care or thought were free," up till between 2 and 3 o'clock, when their amusements changed. The schooner Francis A. Goodwin, run into the steamer with great force and demolished the wheel beams and the pillow blocks supporting the shafts. The uproar was indescribable, life preservers were soon buckled on and every moveable thing was thrown overboard to serve as rafts and supports to the crowd who calculated upon a struggle for life.

The schooner which caused the damage came to and took off a hundred persons, and the others got on board the small schooner Maybee. The excursionists got to New York on Monday—more frightened than hurt. The damage to the vessel is estimated at $2,500.

There has been a great fire at Rochester. The Curtis Block in ruins. Loss $40,000.

On Friday evening last a mass meeting was held in the Park for the purpose of encouraging the struggling Patriots under General Walker in their efforts for Freedom, and to approve the action of the American Government in their recognition of the Nicaraguan Minister.

The New Yorkers were out in great numbers heard big-talking, and were evidently well pleased with the present phase of Nicaraguan affairs, and not a few seemed to enjoy the rehearsal of the promised thrashing in store for Great Britain should she venture to oppose further interference in Central America.

The American Bible Society held a meeting last week, at the Church of the Puritans, to consider the subject of giving the Bible to every unsupplied household in the United States. There was a large attendance, and several addresses.

The last advices from Havana represent that expeditions are being fitted out there for the purpose of opposing Walker in Central America, and also to force from Mexico a payment of debts Spain alleges due to her.

The steamship Granada from Havana brings California dates to the 5th inst. The war against the Indians in Oregon and Washington Territories was being prosecuted with vigor, and the Indians had met with several defeats. In Mariposa county, a party of Americans had murdered twenty Mexicans and Chilians, the pretext being that some Americans had been killed by Chilians. The Americans had ordered all the Chinese, Mexicans, Chilians and Peruvians to leave the country. The volunteers against the Indians complain badly of lack of rations, and neglect in the Commissariat Department.

Their departure from Portland was witnessed by several thousand persons who had assembled on the wharf, and who gave them nine long and hearty cheers as the boat receded from the shore.

A terrific hurricane lately passed over a portion of Dallas county, Texas. Its course was from north to south, a distance of sixteen miles, extending from east to west two or three hundred yards. The tract over which it swept was completely devastated. Nine persons were killed, and a great number wounded. The loss of stock of all kinds was very serious.

A Commercial Treaty has been concluded between Persia and the United States, much to the chagrin it is said of European Powers.

How Many Miles a Printer's Hand Travels.

ALTHOUGH a printer may be sitting all day, yet in his own way he is a great traveler (or, at least his hand is,) as we shall prove. A good printer will set 8,000 ems a day, or about 24,000 letters. The distance traveled over by his hand will average about one foot per letter, going to the boxes in which they are contained, and of course returning, making two feet every letter he sets. This would make a distance each day of 48,000 feet, or a little more than nine miles; and, in the course of the year, leaving out Sundays, the member travels about 3,000.

S. Curling.

The ship S. Curling arrived at Boston on Friday morning, the 23d. We have not yet received any report of the voyage. By telegraph we are informed that the company passed through Albany on Tuesday, en route for Iowa City. About 60 passengers by this ship arrived here from Boston on Tuesday evening, forty of whom proceeded on to Pennsylvania; 24 others arrived here on Wednesday.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

From a bill recently laid on the table of the French Corps Legislative, it appears that the expenses of the war to France, amount to upwards of 1,200,000,000 francs.

The young Count de Paris, grandson of Louis Philippe, has refused to acknowledge the Duke de Bordeaux as the legitimate King of France, but adheres to the principles asserted in the resolution of July.

The health of the Empress Eugenie continues very delicate.

A portion of the German Foreign Legion, raised in America, quartered now in Plymouth, have mutinized and are confined to their barrack rooms.

The youngest brother of the Emperor of Austria is daily expected at Paris. It is generally believed that the Emperor Francis Joseph will be the guest of the Emperor Napoleon during the summer.

A letter from Paris states that the Emperor has resolved that the baptism of the Imperial Prince shall far surpass in magnificence and splendor all that is recorded of the gorgeous baptisms of the King of Rome and the Duke of Bordeaux. Goldsmiths, clothworkers, embroiderers, and artificers of all kinds have been employed in great numbers to heighten the eclat of the expected day.

Letters for the press from Constantinople, state that when the Circassians learnt that peace was concluded, they were greatly excited at finding nothing had been done in the congress for their independence. During the war they attended to their own affairs, and like their own government so much better than that of Russia, that they were determined to resist Russian authorities when they made their appearance in their midst. The Circassians have made an appeal to France, England, and Turkey. The papers that have arrived here this week, report that Russia is about to commence a campaign against them; Gen. Mourevieff commanding.

A new sect, half political and half religious, has formed itself in France. Its tenets are those of Druidism, the national doctrine of the ancient Gauls, combined with the principles of the Revolution of 1792.

Lord Palmerston, in the House of Commons on the 8th inst., in speaking of the late war says: "The whole amount of casualties of all kinds in the course of the war—that is to say, the whole number withdrawn from the army by death in the field, by death in hospital, or by by discharges under various circumstances, amounts to 22,457, of which the number killed in action was comparatively small What has been the loss of our enemy? I say, upon authority which I believe to be good, that on the heights surrounding Sebastopol 90,000 Russians lie burried beneath the soil; and that the Russian army, from one cause or another, lost no less than 500,000 men." We presume Lord Palmerston speaks only of the English army—not of the allied armies.

M. Kossuth delivered two lectures in the Music Hall of Modern Athens, on the 30th April and the 3rd inst.; subject, the "Austrian Concordat." The eloquent orator was warmly received by the leading men of the city—distinguished politicians and theologians. He must have given Sandy a warm dose; the "baw-bees," taken on the occasion, after defraying all expenses, amounted to £320, which the committee of arrangement handed to M. Kossuth. On the 1st and 2d inst., he likewise delivered the same lectures at Dundee, where he was enthusiastically received.

A great number of the English screw gunboats intended for the Baltic, are to be sold to the East India Company, and will be employed to root out the hordes of pirates up the China Seas.

Mr. Latimer Clark, Scientific Engineer to the Electric Telegraph Company, Louthbury, London, in the beginning of the present month succeeded in telegraphing from London office to St. Petersburg direct, without any break—a feat, as yet, unsurpassed in the history of the electric telegraphing, the distance being considerably above 2000 miles.

Since the signing of the Paris Peace Treaty for the Independence of Turkey, France, England and Austria have, unknown to the other European powers, concluded another treaty between themselves guaranteeing the independence of Turkey. Last week's mail from Europe reported that Sardinia, who had sent soldiers to fight for Turkish independence, was surprised that they heard nothing of the affair till it was published to the world. The last mail brings the intelligence that Russia has demanded explanations. This underhanded move shows how little confidence the three powers named have in Russia.

The affairs of Italy occupy a large share of attention in Europe. The oppressed people of the whole of Italy seem to rally round the government of Victor Emanuel as the only hope of freedom. The movements of the Sardinian Plenipotentiaries at the Peace Conferences have been universally approved.

The "notes" they presented to the Ministers of France and England, upon the presence of Austria in Italy, and the call they make upon those persons to interfere, have been published and gained for their authors, great praise and the best wishes of the friends of Italy.

Reminiscences of Classical Ages.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

Previous to illustrating the subject, I consider it necessary to say that the following is merely an outline of the general character of two nations, the Greek and Roman, that once took a most prominent part in the political arena, simply a synopsis of the feelings, which every classical scholar experiences while engaged in the perusal and study of the master works of bygone times.

Happy is he, on whom the rays of intellectual light are shining in all their brilliancy, directing him to the pursuit and contemplation of noble and benevolent objects; happy is he, whose words and actions are prompted by virtue and pure, unalloyed happiness; his soul will delight in meditating upon those events, that signalized so beautifully the times of classical ages; when noble and exalting feelings were cultivated by the public, and no one was allowed to remain in criminal apathy, but when every one was employed in meritorious and salutary operations. It is true the wonderful improvements of the present age were not yet made, but these scientific deficiencies were more than counter-balanced by the mental and moral charms of society; the career of modern civilization and depravity was not yet corroding the human family; those sublime intelligences, that were calm, clear, penetrative and unbiassed by low feelings and passions, were holding the sceptre in the museum of mental excellence, so that the public mind could not become enslaved by irrational and vile pursuits. Whatever vituperations modern critics may bestow upon the weak points of the Greek and Roman era, it is but too true, that in a time when the trading spirit of man has converted Parnassus itself into a market, virtuous and noble-minded individuals are very seldom met with, that the dull routine of civilization operates upon the reflective mind with disgust, because even the red flames of a retaliatory justice cannot wash out the degradation of the human family, cannot stop the silent but certain decay of nations.

It is by the faithful records of former ages, that the imagination is transported far back into the past, to dwell with joy upon those scenes that excite in the highest degree a liberal and enlightened curiosity; it is through the medium of history, that we learn we are treading on cemeteries, that we are dwelling in mausoleums of former worlds, that we feast upon the delineations of noble and sublime characters that make every fibre of our hearts vibrate and sink deeper into our memory. Like the calm glories of the night that begin to settle on Nature, the shades of the departed great seem to cluster and rest around us; we cannot longer withhold our feelings; unable to command our faculties, we are drawn as it were into a vortex of interesting and pleasing reveries.

Through the medium of rosy fancy, we see those lovely and romantic spots of Greece and Rome, where nature seems to realize the creations of oriental fable, and to call up an Eden; where the admiration of the beautiful scenery, as it appears in its wildest and most attractive forms, becomes with the enraptured gazer an all-absorbing feeling. The historic associations of those places remind us of the pomp of classical costume, and the enchanting illusions of romance give peculiar charm and interest to the descriptions of classical scenery and manners.

We see Roman and Grecian villas rising from the womb of past centuries, where imagination herself would have called them up, and fountains and lakes with their vast sheets of crystal water, in alternate motion and repose, either wantonly courting the verdure, or calmly sleeping in its embrace; we see those beautiful groves, studded with the graceful temples of Jupiter, Apollo, Diana, resounding with the sacred songs and music of the priesthood, solemnizing in their white, flowing robes the sacred festivals of their deities; sweet notes seem to float in every direction through the air; the whole scenery seems to be animated by all the living wit and loveliness of Rome and Hellas; we see Solon, Horatius Cocles and others, whose lofty and sacred animation imparted to their features the mould of inexpressible grandeur. New enchantments break upon us. We are present at the festival of the Epicurean school, where its illustrious leaders, both Romans and Greeks, Horace, Atticus, Pliny the Elder, the poet Lucretius, Lucian, Diogenes Laertius, the biographer of the philosophers, and of the female votaries of the Epicureans, Leontium and her fair daughter Diana, Themiste, Philænis and others, have assembled for the purpose of cultivating refined pleasures, according to the doctrine that pleasure is the only good, and good the only source of pleasure. We enter the garden of those eccentric philosophers; the Herisiarch (President) is presiding at those festivals, that generally took place on the twentieth day of every month, independent of a grand annual festival, in commemoration of the founder's birth; he receives the felicitations of the assembled beau-monde of Athens, and is addressing the congregation on the doctrines of said school. Eros, the celestial love of the Platonists, and Anteros, the more earthly spirit, that has the greatest number of worshippers among the Epicureans, occupy the front seats in the beautiful gallery of living pictures. Towards evening the torch-race of the Panathenæa is performed by young, nimble-footed men, arrayed with wings like Cupids; but the low, musical murmuring of the gracefully meandering brooks of those countries seem to throw the shadows of the future over the gay illusions of the past; alas, those fleeting, but golden moments of classical life are gone, where kindness, friendship and loveliness condescended to pass from their fair lips encomiums upon the brilliant stars of the male assembly. Everything has to fade and perish, and nothing is left but its dust; but even the dust of the great and sublime is interesting to the man of science and talent—it shows him the perishableness of himself and all surrounding objects.

Yes, everything in relation to the classical ancients partakes of the cast and coloring of poetry; they had a great suavity and graceful elegance in their manners; they cherished in their dispositions a moral juste milieu of all the pleasures and social amenities of refined, noble minds; they devoted their thoughts to the cultivation of salutary principles; they indulged in the most romantic reveries; in fact, their glorious history affords subjects for illustration that call the pens of the ablest writers into action.

In order to show that I am not a mere, incorrect panegyric in regard to classical history, only acting by the impulse of impression, but that I am desirous of giving the reader a correct view of those times, I have to remark, that my reminiscences merely refer to the ætas aurea (golden time) of Hellas and Rome, when literature, fine arts and all other peaceful avocations under the auspices of the gods were flourishing the most; when men like Cicero, Horace, Julius Cæsar, Plato, Sophocles, Ovidius Naso, Isocrates, were pouring forth the sublime stream of their divine eloquence and philosophy; when everything seemed to be a beautiful personification of those lovely, poetic ideas, that made the Olympus of the Ida mountains the abode of celestial beings, holding communion with men and guiding their affairs, imparting thus to everything that peculiar charm and interest so characteristic in those times. I do not purpose setting forth the classical ages as a pattern of perfect order and happiness, being fully aware of the weak points of those epochs, and the peculiar nature of the circumstances man was placed in; but suffice it to say that the Greeks and Romans of those times were superior in virtue, bravery, refinement and sciences to any other nation, and are till this very moment looked upon as beau ideals of classical lore and virtue. Although the Greeks and Romans had their Academies, Lyceums and various other schools, they were strangers to the press, that powerful machine through which intelligence and knowledge are, if properly applied, diffused in the different classes of society, so that every one may realize his existence in a state of mental progression; they were short of a great many other literary institutions, that facilitate so much in our days the acquisition of popular knowledge. Although every citizen was requested to live up to the principles of his honorable calling, yet few were privileged to have access to the institutions of learning. The great philosopher Pythagoras used to lecture behind a curtain, without condescending to appear before his hearers. In our days there are no such things, the barrier is removed; every one has an ample chance for the development of his intellect. The ologarchy of literature is abolished. It is true, that those mighty Republics numbered eminent statesmen, philosophers, orators and generals, but yet we have to remember, that in those mythological times (mythology is a system of fables), superstition and folly were flourishing and trying to coerce every contending opinion or dogma in its own channel; and it was really dangerous—as in the case of Socrates, who suffered the penalty of death—to introduce principles, however correct they might have been, that were disagreeable to the preconceived notions of that age.

I resume now my sketching out some of the leading personages, manners and customs of those times. Socrates, one of the greatest philosophers of Greece, was pre-eminently a practical man. Being endowed with the most wonderful talents, he acquired all his knowledge by self-tuition, by contemplating the sublime panorama of Nature and associating with the prototypes of mental excellence of Hellas; he became in course of time so enlightened, that his profound philosophy was superior to any other of that age. One of his principal maxims, was "That all knowledge without virtue is nothing, and that we are frequently totally ignorant of what we pretend to know." But he was not too abstruce, like some of our modern literati; he moved not merely in a world of ideas; he hated to waste his time in impracticable speculations; every principle he advanced assumed a feasible aspect; he was an entire matter-of-fact man considering philosophy to be merely the means of doing right, of rising in the scale of beings; hence he saw and taught the necessity of not merely teaching, but living his doctrines. He wanted to reform, to elevate society in all its bearings and ramifications, therefore he advanced nothing but what was applicable to every-day life. He was always desirous to instruct the people; in house, in market, or prison he was alike willing to communicate his knowledge to his fellow men, and that he did without any gratuity. The leading men of Athens paid the greatest attention to him; they administered to his wants, whenever they apprehended he needed them, but he never took more than his necessities required, the rest he returned. One day seeing quite a variety of articles exposed for sale at Athens, he exclaimed: "How many things are here which I do not want."

Mr. Stuart, of Mich., gave notice that he should, at an early day, ask leave to submit an amendment to the rules of the Senate declaring out of order any Senator who in debate should use language reflecting upon the conduct and motives of any other Senator discourteously or improperly reflecting upon the action of a State other than the one represented by the Senator speaking.

A large number of private bills were then passed and the Senate adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Stephens, of Ga., of the same committee has prepared a minority report.

The consideration of the subject was postponed to the 9th of June.

The Speaker decided the motion not a question of privilege, and Mr. Stanton withdrew its.

Various reports were made from committee.

In reply to the resolution offered by Mr. Barbour, requesting the President to communicate whether United States soldiers have been employed in Kansas "to arrest persons charged with the violation of certain supposed laws, enacted by the supposed Legislation assembled at Shawnee Mission," &c., the Secretary of War responds, that by instruction from his department, dated Feb. 15, Colonel Sumner and Lieutenant Colonel Cooks, were directed to aid by military force, the constituted authorities of Kansas, in suppressing insurrection or invasive aggression against the organized government of the Territory, or armed resistance to the execution of the laws, and in case the government finding the ordinary course of judicial proceedings and powers vested in the United States Marshal inadequate for that purpose, he should make a requisition upon them for military force to aid him in the performance of that official duty. Under these instructions, and upon the requisition of Gov. Shannon, a detachment of troops under a Lieutenant was ordered to sustain the constituted authorities, in the enforcement of the laws. The Secretary says the instructions from the Department being directed exclusively to the support of the organized government or constituted authorities of the government, convey no authority to employ soldiers to aid by making arrests, or otherwise, in the enforcement of "supposed laws enacted by a supposed Legislature." The Department, therefore, presumes and believes that United States soldiers have not been employed to make arrests under the circumstances stated in the resolution. Adjourned till Monday.

SENATE. May 26.

Mr. Pearce of Md., stated that the special committee to investigate the assault committed on Mr. Sumner found it impossible to pursue the investigation properly, without power to send for persons and papers, and asked that such power be given. Agreed to.

Mr. Weller, of Cal., presented a petition from 75,000 citizens of California, asking for a waggon road to connect California with the Atlantic States. The signatures were bound in two large volumes. Mr. Weller urged the importance of the measure.

Mr. Weller also introduced a bill for the construction of a military road from the western boundary of Misouri to Carson Valley, and another for the construction of a military road from El Paso to Fort Yuma.

Mr. Pugh, of Ohio, addressed the Senate on the bill for the admission of Kansas. He objected to the proposition of Mr. Seward to admit Kansas under her free State constitution, (not exceeding 24,000.) and because the Topeka constitution was ratified by only 719 votes. He pursued a course of argument similiar to that of the supporters of Mr. Douglas' bill and was very severe in his remarks on the Emigrant Aid Societies. He gave reasons why he could not obey the instructions of the Ohio Legislature, and replied to the arguments of Messrs. Seward and Sumner.

Mr. Seward introduced a bill to authorize that protection be given to the citizens of the United States who may discover deposits of guano. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Hall, of Ohio, moved for a suspension of the rules, to enable him to introduce a resolution calling for specific information connected with all the branches of work on the Capitol and Post Office extension. He said he wanted the country to see the manner in which the law had been disregarded and the public money wasted.

The rules were suspended.

Mr. Ball proceeded to show that the Secretary of the Treasury unnecessarily expended large sums of money, letting contracts to the highest instead of the lowest bidders, with a loss of more than $106,000 on one of them. Sixteen or seventeen thousand dollars had been spent for machinery to raise stone on the Treasury building, in defiance of the fact that hoisting and setting could be performed by contract He made no charge of corruption against Capt. Meigs or the Superintendent; but the latter in spending money unnecessarily on the Capitol and Post Office extension, by making the work too heavy and fine.

The resolution was passed.

Mr. Kelly, of N. Y., obtained permission to print a speech which he had no opportunity to deliver, maintaining that the softs compose the true democratic party of New York, and are superior in numbers and nationality to the hards, who, in his opinion, are mostly Know Nothings. He avowed his belief that the soft delegates would be recognized at Cincinnati, to the exclusion of the hards.

Humphrey Marshall, Ky., from the Judiciary Committe, reported a bill to authorize the patents issued on the final adjudication of California land claims, prior to January, 1856.

Consideration of the bill was postponed two weeks. Adjourned.

SENATE. May 29.

Mr. Trumbull, of Ill., gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill to prevent civil war and restore peace in Kansas.

The bill providing for the general introduction of a uniform national code of marine signals was passed.

Mr. Slidell, of La., called the attention of the Senate to the telegraphic dispatch giving Mr. Sumner's statement before the Committee of the House, published this morning. Mr. Slidell said the portion of the statement made by Mr. Sumner in reference to him was incorrect. He said that he was in an ante-room in conversation with Messrs. Douglas, Fitzpatrick and J. Glancey Jones, when informed of the affair. He went in to the Senate Chamber but could not see Mr. Sumner for the crowd round him. He returned to his friends in the ante-room and on leaving there for home saw Mr. Sumner leaning on two friends he did not know. Not being on speaking terms, he passed on.

Mr. Douglas, of Ill., corroborated the stement of Mr. Slidell, and said that when he (Douglas) heard that Mr. Sumner had been attacked, his first idea was to come in and endeavor to restore quiet; but upon reflecting that his motives in interfering might be misconstrued, he did not enter the Senate chamber until the affray was over. The crowd around Sumner was there so large that for some time he could not see him. He saw Messrs. Toombs, Crittenden, Pearce and Evans all seated in or near their usual seats; but he was not near Brooks, as stated in the report. This was a total misapprehension on the part of Mr. Sumner. The published statement might carry an impression to the country that he was aiding and abetting, and was, in fact, a participant in the assault; but that was an entirely erroneous idea, as he did not even know that Mr. Sumner was in the Capitol at the time the assault was committed.

Mr. Toombs of Ga., objected to the statement of Mr. Sumner about his being near Mr. Brooks. He was in his seat in the Senate at the time.

Mr. Butler of S. C., said he had just arrived in the city, but had he been in Washington he should have assumed all the responsibility taken by his gallant relative. He denied, in the most emphatic manner, the statement of Mr. Sumner, that what he had said in his speech was strictly in response to what Butler had said on former occassions. He understood that the Legislature of Massachusetts had passed resolutions in reference to the affray, and when these resolutions should be presented to the Senate, he should speak on the subject as it deserved.

Senator Wade of Ohio spoke in support of the freedom of speech in the Senate.

Mr. Wilson of Mass., thought the corrective explanations of the Senators named by Mr. Sumner in his statement of slight importance. In alluding to the affair he said: He was stricken down upon this floor by a brutal, murderous and cowardly assault.

Mr. Butler (in his seat) you are a liar.

Mr. Stuart of Mich., called the Senator to order, whereupon he apologized "for words which fell from him in a moment of excitement."

Mr. Wilson resumed his remarks, and other Senators spoke on the affair.

Mr. Cass made further explanation in reference to the correspondence of Mr. Crampton, which, he said, misrepresented him.

The President's veto of the bill for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi was discussed without action. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Walbridge, of Mich., from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill granting lands in alternate sections to Michigan, to aid in the construction of railroads. The bill appropriates about 1,300,000 acres. He said the main features were copied from similar bills recently passed.

Mr. Jones, Tenn., asked Mr. Walbridge to withdraw his demand for the precious question. He thought the opportunity should be afforded the enemies of such bills to be heard.

Mr. Walbridge replied that he had moved the previous question to save useless discussion, the principles involved being well understood, having been debated for the last ten years

Mr. Craige, of N. C., thought the bill should at least be printed, in order to afford an opportunity for examination. The gag should not be applied.

The motion to table was negatived by 67 against 80.

The bill was passed by 78 against 58.

Adjourned.

SENATE. May 28.

Mr. Pearce, of Md., from the Select Committee to investigate the facts attending the recent assault on Mr. Sumner, reported in writing as follows:

That from the testimony taken by them it appears that the Hon. Preston S. Brooks, a member of the House of Representatives from South Carolina, did, on the 22d day of the present month, after the adjournment of the Senate, and while Mr. Sumner was seated at his desk in the Senate chamber, assault him with considerable violence, striking him numerous blows on and about his head with a walking stick, which cut his head and disabled him for the time being from attending to his duties in the Senate.

The cause of the assault was certain language used by Mr. Sumner in debate on the Monday and Tuesday preceding, which Mr. Brooks considered libellous of the State of South Carolina and slanderous of his kinsman, Mr. Butler, a Senator from that State, who was absent from the Senate and from the city.

The committee forbear to comment upon the various circumstances which preceded and attended this affair, whether of aggravation or extenuation, for reasons which will be sufficiently obvious in the latter part of the report. They have examined the precedents for this action, which are to be found only in the proceedings of the House of Representatives, the Senate never having been called on to pronounce its judgment in a similar case. In the House of Representatives, though different opinions have at various times been expressed by gentlemen of eminence and ability—among whom may be mentioned the late President of the United States, Mr. Polk, the late Judge Barbour of the Supreme Court, and Mr. Beardsley of New York—yet the judgment of the House has always pronounced an assault upon a member for words spoken in debate to be a violation of the privileges of the House. The committee do not consider it necessary to discuss the question at length, but proceed to state some of the precedents, not conforming them, however, to the assaults of the members.

In March, 1796, Mr. Baldwin, a member of the House of Representatives, presented to the House certain correspondence between himself and Gen. Gunn, a Senator from the State of Georgia, including a challenge addressed to him by Gen. Gunn. These were referred to a committee, of which Mr. Madison was chairman, who reported by their chairman that the same was a breach of the privileges of the House on the part of General Gunn and Mr. Frelinghuysen, a Senator from New Jersey, by whom the challenge had been borne.

In May, 1828, a personal assault having been made by Mr. Russell Jarvis upon Mr. John Adams, the private Secretary of the President, just after his delivering a message to the House of Representatives, and while on his way to the Senate with another message, the matter was, on complaint of the President, referred to a select committee, who, by Mr. McDuffie, of South Carolina, their Chairman, reported that, upon a view of all the circrmstances, the committee are of the opinion that the assault committed by Mr. Jarvis upon the private Secretary of the President, whatever may have been the cause of the provocation, was an act done in contempt of the authority and dignity of the House.

In 1832, the House of Representatives, after a long trial and thorough discussion of the question, voted that Gen. Houston, by making a personal assault on Mr. Stansbury, a member of the House, for words spoken in debate, was guilty of contempt and a violation of the privileges of the House.

The committee acknowledge the force of those precedents, and adopt the reasoning quoted from Mr. McDuffie's report. But while it is the opinion of the committee that this assault was a breach of the privileges of the Senate, they also think that it is not within the jurisdiction of the Senate, and can only be punished by the House of Representatives, of which Mr. Brooks is a member. This opinion is in strict conformity with the recognized parliamentary law.

We see that, from the precedents above cited, neither of the houses of Parliament can take upon themselves to redress any injury or punish any breach of privilege offered to them by any member of the House, but that in such cases the usual mode of procedure is to examine into the facts, and then to lay a statement of that evidence before the house of which the person complained of is a member. (3 Hartsell, p. 71.)

Mr. Jefferson, in his "Manual of Parliamentary Practice," prepared by him, lays down the following rule:

Neither House can exercise any authority over a member or officer of the other, but should complain to the House of which he is a member, and leave the punishment to them.

A brief examination of the constitutional privileges of Senators and Representatives will show the soundness of this rule of Parliamentary law. The Constitution provides, (Article first, section sixth):

That, &c. * * * * But the Senate is not a court of criminal judicature, empowered to try the exempted offences. It cannot take cognizance of a breach of the peace as such. It cannot take any notice of it except as a breach of its privileges, and in the case in which the privilege from arrest is excepted.

The Senate, therefore, for a breach of its privileges, cannot arrest a member of the House of Representatives, and—a fortiori—it cannot try and punish him; that authority devolves solely upon the House of which he is a member. It is the opinion of the committee, therefore, that the Senate cannot proceed further in the present case than to make complaint to the House of Representatives of the assault committed by one of its members, Preston S. Brooks, upon the Hon. Chas. Sumner, a Senator from Massachusetts.

The committee submit herewith certain affidavits taken by them in the case and the following resolution:

Resolved, That the above report be accepted, and that a copy thereof be transmitted, with the affidavits, to the House of Representatives.

The report was accepted and the resolution adopted; Senator Toombs of Georgia alone voting in the negative.

Mr. Mason of Va. defended the President's veto of the bill for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Thorington of Iowa introduced a bill giving lands to Minnesota, Nebraska and Kansas, for railroads.

Mr. Caruthers of Mo. introduced a bill ceding the public lands to the States in which they lie.

Mr. Bennett of N. Y. reported a bill to grant one million acres of land to Louisiana, to aid in the construction of three railroads in that State.

Passed—62 against 58.

Mr. Greenwood of Ark. introduced a bill for the repeal of the act establishing the Court of Claims.

Mr. Florence of Pa. moved that when the House adjourn, it be till Saturday. He believed many gentlemen intend to leave this evening for Cincinnati.

The motion of Mr. Florence was negatived.

Mr. Grow of Pa. proposed that the Committee on Territories be allowed to make reports, not, however, to be considered until after the two approaching conventions.

Mr Jones of Tenn. wished to know whether Mr. Grow desired to report a bill to admit Kansas with the Topeka constitution.

Mr. Grow replied in the affirmative.

Mr. Jones objected. Adjourned.

The advertising columns of the London Times are estimated to yield the establishment the enormous sum of $300,000 per annum. One firm alone pays the Times as high as $150,000 a year for advertising, and there are several business establishments that pay it over $50,000 a year for advertising alone.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in, and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là. dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systémes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence. ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

National Anthem.

BY ELIZA R. SNOW.

Lo! an Ensign of Peace on the tops of the mountains—
A Banner, a Banner is widely unfurl'd:
Hark! the heralds are sounding a loud proclamation—
Hear, hear the glad message go forth to the world.
Ho, ho! to the States, to the Kingdoms and Empires,
Whose fabrics are tott'ring and ready to fall:
Ho, ho! to all people of every religion,
Art, trade, or profession, the great and the small.
Here is Freedom, glorious Freedom—
Freedom Gods and men hold dear;
The white-crested Eagle has fled to the mountains,
The Genius of Liberty follow'd us here.

The people of Joseph, the Prophet of God,
Are here: we are free from oppression's rod.
Hosanna, hosanna! to God: He has broke
From off our necks the Gentile yoke,
And has given us a government pure and free,
And we breathe the sweet air of Liberty,
And rejoice in the blessings our forefathers won
When they fought, bravely fought with Washington.

Here intelligence' richest fountains
Flow, but not from the snow-topp'd mountains;
They flow from heaven;
Men of God by revelation
Teach the precepts of salvation
Freely given;
Eternal principles now unfold—
Jehovah speaks as in days of old;
And we'll shout hosanna, till nations afar
Shall awake to the sound, and follow the star,
The star of Peace, which o'er Deseret
Arose in full splendor, and never will set.

Prest. B. Young exhorted the Saints to keep profound silence, and told the doorkeepers to stop driving away those children who come early in order to get a seat in which to hear and worship comfortably.

Elder George A. Smith addressed the assembly, saying it is enough to try the lungs of a giant to speak to this immense congregation. Alluded to the Church on the 6th of April, 1830, when it was organized with six members, and now those few have increased to a great and mighty people. Referred to the first cause which produced the exterminating order of Governor Boggs in Missouri. Exhorted the people to make good fences, to save forage, and provide comfortable shelter for cattle in winter, and spoke upon other matters of policy. Compared the blessings of health we enjoy with the sickness in Illinois and Missouri.

The names of 177 persons, called to go on missions, were read.

Prest. Kimball notified those whose names were read to come to the Tabernacle at 5 o'clock this evening, that they may receive their blessings and make arrangements for starting.

Convention of Delegates at Salt Lake City to Adopt a State Constitution.

From the Deseret News, March 19.

The delegates of the Convention, from the various counties, except Green River, met in the Council House on the 17th inst. The event was announced by the firing of cannon and music from Capt. Ballo's band. Throughout the day flags floated from the cupolas of the Governor's mansion and Council House, also from the high flag poles on the Temple Block, and in front of the Deseret and Livingston, Kinkead & Co.'s stores; from flag staffs on the roof of Gilbert & Gerrish's store, and from those on the roofs of many other public buildings.

At an early hour a large concourse of citizens had assembled, anxiously awaiting the commencement of those deliberations and acts, which have for their object the addition of another star to the brilliant and thickly spangled constellation styled, "E Pluribus Unum."

The Convention organized by unanimously electing the Hon. J. M. Grant, President; Mr. T. Bullock, Secretary; Mr. J. Grimshaw, Assistant Secretary; Mr. R. T. Burton, Sergeant-at-arms; Mr. W. C. Staines, Messenger; Mr. T. Hall, Doorkeeper; and Sirs G. D. Watt and J. V. Long, Reporters. At 12 1-2, adjourned until 2 P. M.

We have confined the notice, thus briefly, to the organization, not only because the reporters cannot report and transcribe at the same time, but because a minute detail would be out of place in the News, especially since it is designed to print in pamphlet form whatever the Convention may deem beneficial. Still, we shall take occasion to keep the public informed of such noticeable doings as may be of interest to them.

In the afternoon the freedom of the Convention was unanimously tendered to his Excellency the Governor, the United States officers of the Territory, Pres. H. C. Kimball, the members of the Legislative Assembly, Hons. E. Snow, A. Lyman and E. Hunter, Hon. Elias Smith, Probate Judge of G. S. L. county, and the Aldermen of G. S. L. City.

March 26th.

The Convention is still sitting, and the business before it being despatched with reasonable dilligence and mutual harmony and unanimity. The various committees have reported the portions of the Constitution assigned them; a standing special committee of six was appointed, to whom to refer the reports as they passed the Convention; and on Monday, the 23d a special committee of three was appointed to amend, arrange, consolidate and report all matter previously reported. By leave of the Convention, the special committee and the standing special committee had a conference on Tuesday, the 24th, and on the afternoon of that day unanimously reported the "Constitution of the State of Deseret;" Chief Justice Kinney dissenting only on one point, viz: he preferring to have the Judges of the Supreme Court elected directly by the people rather than by the General Assembly.

April 2.

After a remarkably short and harmonious session, the Convention dissolved on Thursday, March 26.

Hon. Geo. A. Smith and Hon. John Taylor, editor of The Mormon, were unanimously elected delegates to proceed to Washington and lay before Congress Utah's request for admission into the Union.

The Constitution of the State of Deseret was signed by every member of the Convention, though they were from various climes, and diverse creeds, government officials, merchants, &c. &c.; thus indicating beyond controversy, the represented feelings of all classes of our Territorial population. If our memory correctly serves us, so general and fair a representation of the views and feelings of the various districts of territory, and so frank and hearty a blending of party interests, have never been excelled, if even equalled, in the initiatory action required for the admission of a new State.

Perhaps the more customary usage would have withheld the Constitution from publication, until after it had been presented to Congress; but the scattered condition of many of our settlements, the propriety, to say the least, of its being fairly before the people previous to their actions on the 7th instant, when they indicate their feelings by their votes, and other good reasons, have out-weighed minor considerations, and the Constitution is printed in this News, together with the Convention resolution concerning its submission to the people.

Read it, all Utah, and all ye inhabitants of the States, and see if you can discover a single item incompatible with other State Constitutions, with the Constitution and laws of the United States and the genius of republican institutions. If you cannot, as will most assuredly be the conclusion of every intelligent, candid mind, there is no reason why Congress, during its present session, should not at once—and that, too, most gladly—take such action as will not only release the parent government from unnecessary burden, care and expense, but tend to close the territorial gap between State organization on the Pacific and the Western frontiers, by increasing the number of stars in the bright galaxy of freedom.

Is Utah loyal? Aye, most loyal, beyond successful challenge or contradiction, as is and always has been proved by all her sayings and doings. But does she love corruption and oppression? Verily, no, for her sons and daughters, with few exceptions, have been reared in the cradle of liberty, in common with the citizens of the States, and the pure mountain breezes keep that love fanned to a bright and unquenchable flame. And the few exceptions just named, those who were not born citizens of our great Republic, are congenial descendants of that stock from which sprang our "Revolutionary Sires." They have left their father lands, as did our forefathers, to escape the oppressor's rod and find a loved asylum in the "Home of the free." Then can Congress refuse to extend the broad folds of equal rights and Constitutional liberty over that portion of the public domain whose inhabitants will stand by the Union while a vestage thereof exists and blood flows in their veins? It is not to be presumed that Congress would wish so to do, but if it might by any possiblity be imagined that an opposite feeling could be indulged, who would like to face the mingled whirlwind of scorn and indignation that would then arise in the breast of every lover of truth and justice throughout the world?

Utah is isolated, is full of rugged mountains, desert plains and barren valleys, and peculiarly uncomely in the eyes of lovers of rich, well timbered soil, broad rivers, extended seaboards and commercial marts. Let her present population leave her borders, and the few cases, now gladdened with the busy hum of civilized life, would soon revert to the occupancy of the rude savage, and crumbling desolation would mark the site of stately edifices.

Utah, with but little aid from the parent, has grown rapidily amid all her disadvantages, and amid the jealousy and hostility of numerous Indian tribes, to high position in wealth and numbers. And are not the intelligence and energy which have so rapidily produced such laudable results, where none others would thrust in their sickles, sufficient guarantee that Utah is most emphatically deserving of a State organization?

She has wealth, a numerous, intellgent, and highly patriotic population; is accustomed to make her own public buildings, roads and bridges; has successfully conducted the Indian wars waged within her boundaries, has nearly expelled litigation through a wise system of legislation and policy; furnishes few abominable, illegal acts to swell the record of earth's corruptions, not even enough to make her news spicy and interesting to the corrupt taste of a perverse generation;—then is there any good, fair, valid reason why Utah should not be speedily admitted into the Union as a free, sovereign and independent State, named Deseret? Not one. Hence it is but fair to infer that Senators and Representatives in Congress will grant the prayer of Utah for admission as unanimously as she presents it, independent of the sectional prejudices, strife and debate of every name and description; for only two questions are to be asked, viz: is her constitution republican? Is she willing and able to maintain a State government? Every one knows that those questions, and every legitimate question that can be asked, admit of only affirmative answers.

April 9.

CONSTITUTION—MEMORIAL—DELEGATES.

As will be seen by reference to the Conference minutes, the Constitution of the State of Deseret, the memorial asking our admission into the Union as a free and sovereign State, and the names of the delegates, Messrs. Geo. A. Smith and John Taylor, were presented to the electors, who densely crowded the Tabernacle on the 7th inst., and as was anticipated, the doings of the Convention were unanimously and enthusiastically sustained by all present. There was doubtless a corresponding action on the 7th, throughout all our borders.

Inasmuch as Congress have heretofore urged a State government upon some, invariably given one when asked for, even when those petitioning were but a small majority, and have ever manifested a proper and laudable anxiety and readiness to admit new States, can any one imagine that our delegates will be received by Congress in any manner short of the utmost cordiality, and that the unanimous voice of all Utah will not be cheerfully responded to by the speedy addition of the brilliant State of Deseret!

Egyptian Discoveries.

We take from the correspondence of The Baltimore Sun the following extract, which describes the palace and person of the present Viceroy:

The palace is a large white building, distinguishable neither for the style of its architecture nor the beauty of its finish, and was built during the reign of Mahomet Ali. Ascending a broad marble stairway and passing the ante-room, in which as is usual in the East, was a large collection of illy-dressed and lazy looking attendants, we entered the reception room of Zooflika Bey, the Minister of Foreign Affairs. Here we whiled away a quarter of an hour in sipping coffee, and returning Oriental compliments. After passing through a large hall we entered a spacious saloon, in which we found the Viceroy. A broad low divan, covered with crimson damask satan, run around the entire apartment, the floor of polished ebony was decorated with a basket of flowers held by two cupids, all made of colored wood inlaid into the centre. The furniture was chiefly European, and by no means remarkable for its elegance. When we entered, the Viceroy was seated á la Turque, upon the furthest corner of the divan, from which he slided as we approached, to greet us with a shake of the hand when presented.

In order that your readers may not labor under the mistake in picturing to themselves a "turbaned and malignant Turk," with solemn face and flowing beard, as the great dignitaries of the East are usually represented by poetic tourists and imaginative painters, I will give them a brief but faithful description of Said Pasha, the youngest son of Mahomet Ali and the present Viceroy of Egypt. Apparently about forty years of age, I am confident was his weight accurately ascertained, it would not fall below three hundred and fifty pounds. This quantity of flesh, together with his low stature and the loose style of his dress, gives him, as may naturally be supposed, instead of a commanding figure, rather a squatty one; while his head, placed immediately upon his shoulders without the intervention of a neck, by no means tends to enhance the dignity of his appearance. His face, which is as devoid of expression and as unmeaning as a mass of copper colored flesh can possibly render it, is covered with a short wry red beard; and if Lord Chesterfield's caution to his son to "beware of a man who constantly shuts one eye," be correct, one would ever be on his guard against the Viceroy, for he never opens one eye and keeps the other half closed. Instead of wearing upon his head the ample folds of the expressive turban, it was covered with a small red tarboush, scarcely concealing his bushy hair, vieing with it in the brightness of its color. His costume was Egyptian, a small embroidered jacket, full trowsers made of light blue cloth, a beautiful cashmere shawl wound about his waist, and a pair of red morroco slippers upon his feet. Such was the appearance of the Viceroy, as he stood before us, after sliding from the divan upon which we found him coiled.

He received us most kindly, seated us by him on the divan and commenced asking many questions concerning America and her institutions. I was surprised to find that one whose education had been neglected, and especially concerning the affairs of the western continent, should know as much as he did. He was anxious to know if the Government of the United States were about purchasing, as he had been informed, an island from the King of Greece. After spending nearly an hour in pleasant conversation, and sipping Mocha coffee, handed to us in small China fingans, beautifully incrusted with brilliants, we took our leave. Though his mental capacity by no means corresponds with his physical developements, I was altogether much gratified with the reception he gave us. During our interview he was exceedingly profuse in his thanks to Mr. DeLeon for two Minie rifles which he had recently presented him.

A few days previous to my visit to the Viceroy, I called upon the Governor of Alexandria. During my interview with him he informed me that in making some excavations behind the palace a few days before, several ancient Egyptian tombs had been discovered, and kindly offered me the services of his Dragoman to point them out, did I wish to examine them. Passing the palace and proceeding toward the sea, in the midst of sand banks, we came upon the tombs. They were three in number, and about twenty feet below the ground. Upon descending I entered a low vaulted chamber about twelve feet in length, and eight in width, the whole covered with a fine and highly polished stucco. The sides were embellished with Egyptian paintings, the colors in the highest state of preservation, and representing funeral scenes, resembling those in the mummy pits near Memphis. This chamber is separated from another and smaller one by an arched partition. In this, upon a stone altar about three feet high, were the bones of the person for whom the sepulchral chamber was built. From their appearance I should judge them to have been those of a female, though I was informed no jewels or ornaments had been found. They had not been disturbed, but were lying in the same position as when the tomb was opened, and were in excellent preservation. The skull was entire, and I could not resist the temptation of extracting a tooth.

The other tombs, though not so large or so well preserved, were built upon the same model, and no doubt about the same period. Judging from the figures upon the walls, the style of the architecture, and their whole appearance, they are doubtless of great antiquity dating far beyond the time of the Ptolmies. What adds weight to this supposition, is the fact that since the foundation of ancient Alexandria, 323 years before Christ, the Island of Pharos has never been used for the purposes of sepulture, and consequently these newly discovered tombs were those of the ancient Egyptians, and are no doubt Pharaonic. The Viceroy, I understand, intends continuing the excavations for the purpose of discovering, if possible, some token by which the date of their construction may be ascertained. Though the land is surrounded by salt water, that which covers the floor of the tombs is perfectly fresh. I have been thus minute in my description, as it is, I believe, the first that has yet been given of them, but few having seen them.

A crazy man at Rochester, entered one of the passenger cars on the Central Railroad, with nothing on but a hat, cloak, and a pair of boots. He took a seat in front of two old maids who were traveling with three bandboxes and a pet canary. Shortly after leaving Rochester, the atmosphere became so oppressive that "the strange looking gentleman" said he would hang up his cloak and "cool off a few." He rose up to do this, which gave rise to a screech on the part of the elderly ladies in the rear, that made the conductor suppose that he had run over four hogs and a German organ grinder. He rushed to the ladies. The ladies pointed at the lunatic and fell back in a faint. Conductor says "shocking," and pulls the bell rope. Train stops. Lunatic is encased in his cloak, and sent back to Rochester in company with a breakeman and a hickory club.

Secret of Success at the Bar.—I asked Sir James Scarlett what was the secret of his pre-eminent success as an advocate. He replied that he took care to press home the one principal point of the case, without paying much attention to the others. He also said that he knew the secret of being short. "I find," said he, "that when I exceed half an hour I am always doing mischief to my client; if I drive into the heads of the jury important matter, I drive out matter more important that I had previously lodged there."—[Buxton.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 7, 1856.

Boys, Don't Disturb the Bee Hive!

THE Ohio Columbian of May 28th felt "constrained to copy" "some eloquent facts" from "the Philadelphia North American and United States Gazette" on "the beauties of Mormonism." The "eloquent facts" are extracts from the garbled tale about the lady and family that left Liverpool for Boston, by the Enoch Train, noticed in a previous number of this paper, followed by "a little pungent commentary"—that is, a string of beautiful epithets for the inhabitants of Utah—such as "a community of adulterers and bigamists," "a fraternity of licentious and debauched rogues."

We exchange with the Columbian, and confess we thought he had more respect for himself than to become the echo of any rampant, filthy-tongued bigot that would use such language as implicates the immorality of somewhere about a hundred thousand persons, than whom no people ever gave more evidence of conscientious adherence to what they believe correct principles—yes, a people that have suffered the loss of all earthly possessions, time and again, rather than deviate from the duties their conscience prescribed—a people that have given undeniable testimony to the world that they would sooner give their all, their life, to the sacrifice, than desert their God and his servants—ancient and modern. The Columbian may not believe in either Brigham Young or Moses, but the people who believe in both are certainly as much entitled to live according to their faith as those who differ from them in faith, especially when that faith affects no one but themselves.

The Columbian, in a short editorial, speaks of the Mormon creed—"MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS"—and is at a loss to know how it is to be interpreted. He asks: "Who is to decide what is a man's business?" and concludes it may be a part of the business of the people "to keep Utah out of the Union so long as she adheres to the practice of polygamy." Without arrogating to ourself that we are the person "who is to decide," we may safely say, that, however difficult it may be for some men to know all the business that pertains to them, where they should begin and where leave off, there are certain clearly-defined obligations which none need be at a loss to understand as pertaining to their particular business. When a man has, without constraint, made public profession of faith it is the business of that man to carry out his profession, or he is an hypocrite, and will, assuredly, by men of integrity, be despised. Should he, however, undergo a change of mind, he should, to be consistent, and to be respected, make as public his change of mind as his first profession was public. For illustration: in the paper before us—the Columbian—in making a public declaration of his faith, says:

"The Columbian will be an advocate of personal, civil, and religious liberty, without regard to race or creed."

We think the Columbian should consider it to be his first business to expunge this quotation, if he means to meddle with our faith or creed; but as the dishonor of republishing abuse is his business, and not ours, we do not insist. Polygamy among the Mormons can never be a part of his or any one's business outside of Mormonism. It affects him or any other in no manner whatever. How can it? We don't insist that he or others should have two or more wives—there are plenty of men that never deserved one—neither do we ask him or others for any jewel that he or they may possess. Some rant about the influence of Polygamy, and in distorted visions see their daughters going to Deseret. To calm the nerves of any grandmama or her grandson, we will add a verse of a popular song, in which, let us remark, there is more truth than poetry:

"As ancient Israel's youths denied
To wed with those whom heaven defied,
So modern Israel's sons have cried,
We'll marry none but Mormons."

Now, that the inhabitants of Utah have published to the world the order of government by which they mean to abide, we shall expect to see honest men look at them as American citizens, and put an end to all that sickening twaddle about religion when politics is under discussion. In despotic nations, where the land is the estate of the King or Emperor, and the inhabitants of the kingdom or empire so many chattels appertaining thereto, it may be expected that the potentate will deny liberty of conscience; but in a nation, with a Constitution framed by the wisest and best of men, and they themselves of different faiths, every religion must necessarily be tolerated—hence the Constitution of the United States knows no religion, and Congress can never entertain any argument for or against any people based upon it.

The Mormons walk in the footsteps of the fathers of our country, and set an example of toleration, that those who are for ever ranting and raving about denying the Mormons their simple rights, because of their adherence to the faith of Abraham, would do well to consider.

In December, 1847, while they were at "Winter Quarters," Omaha Nation, the Twelve, with President Brigham Young at their head, sent forth a general epistle, from which we extract:

"The Kingdom of God consists in correct principles; and it mattereth not what a man's religious faith is; whether he be a Presbyterian, or a Methodist, or a Baptist, or a Latter Day Saint or 'Mormon,' or a Campbellite, or a Catholic, or Episcopalian, or Mahometan, or even pagan, or anything else, if he will bow the knee, and with his tongue confess that Jesus is the Christ, and will support good and wholesome laws for the regulation of society, we will hail him as a brother, and will stand by him while he stands by us in these things; for every man's religious faith is a matter between his own soul and his God alone; but if he shall deny the Jesus, if he shall curse God, if he shall indulge in debauchery and drunkenness, and crime; if he shall lie, and swear, and steal; if he shall take the name of the Great God in vain, and commit all manner of abominations, he shall have no place in our midst, for we have long sought to find a people that will work righteousness, that will distribute justice equally, that will acknowledge God in all their ways, that will regard those sacred laws and ordinances which are recorded in that sacred book called the Bible, which we verily believe, and which we proclaim to the ends of the earth."

Section 3d, Article II., of the present Constitution, sets forth:

"All men shall have a natural and inalienable right to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience; and the General Assembly shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or to disturb any person in his religious worship or sentiments, and all persons demeaning themselves peaceably, as good members of this State, shall be equally under the protection of the laws; and no subordination or preference of any one sect or denomination to another shall ever be established by law; nor shall any religious test be ever required for any office of trust under this Constitution."

Utah Coming to Congress.

WE are now enabled, as per notice, to present our readers with the Constitution for the proposed State of Deseret. The extracts from the Deseret News, found on our first page, exhibit the course pursued by the leading men of the Territory in order to obtain a perfect demonstration of the sentiments of the people on the proposed change from a Territorial Government to that of a sovereign State. The order prescribed by Government for such a movement has been observed to the letter. Delegates were chosen at district and county meetings for the Convention at Salt Lake City. While there, they labored harmoniously and framed this important document. From the first step to the last the utmost cordiality reigned throughout the elections. After the delegates had finished their labors, the people from every part of the Territory were assembled in Conference, heard the Constitution read and gave it their hearty and unanimous approbation. If ever a Constitution was framed by and for the people, it is the one we lay before our readers to-day.

Some folks chatter considerably about Brigham Young being the author, controller and finisher of every movement—that the inhabitants of the valley and mountains of Utah have no voice in anything. It is certainly true that Gov. Brigham Young has an immense influence in Utah—and what is as certainly true is, that no man could ever attain to that influence with such an enterprising, independent, hard-working, matter-of-fact people as the inhabitants of Utah, without having pursued a straightforward, high and honorable course which alone could command respect among such a people. While the inhabitants of Utah thus honor and respect their Governor, he has given to the world an example of the respect and care that a governor ought to have for the people over whom he presides.

The following resolution shows how much the people of that territory are consulted, and is perhaps without a parallel even in the United States:

Resolved, That the Constitution and other documents of this Convention, together with the names of the Delegates to Congress, be laid before the people of this Territory by the members of this Convention, on the 7th of April next, for their approval or disapproval, and returns thereof shall be made to the President of this Convention on or before the 20th day of April next; and if approved by the people, then the doings of this Convention shall be considered valid; if disapproved, then they shall be null and void.

Thus the people of Utah are first heard in sending their delegates to the Convention, and those delegates present their labors to the people as well as their choice of delegates to Congress, and in this manner leave it a second time in the hands of the people. If ever anything could really be denominated vox populi, it is this Constitution.

We invite the press everywhere throughout the States to publish it. The public are entitled to know how the inhabitants of Utah feel towards the General Government of the Republic—what desire they have to co-operate with other States for the preservation of the Union and the honor of our common country—how they mean to conduct the judiciary of the proposed State—what provision they propose for the free expression of political sentiments—what toleration they extend to religionists—in short, the United States should know if the inhabitants of Utah, who now present their claims for admission into the Federal Union, are REPUBLICANS.

Editors do no more than their position in society demands, in publishing this document. The people of Utah can be better understood by the perusal of the Constitution, which, in their leisure, they have framed and by which they mean to abide, than by anything published by friend or foe. It is the formal, solemn declaration of a free people, brief, simple and clear. Let the press publish it—let the people read it and act honestly and honorably towards Utah. We ask no favor—a clear stage only.

To Emigrants.

OUR office has been established by the instructions of the First Presidency of the Church, for the purpose of attending to every class of business that can be of service to the Saints in the eastern States, and more particularly for facilitating the emigration from Europe to Utah. The members of the Church who have arrived in this port have, in general, conducted themselves in such an orderly manner as to win for them the respect of those who have had any dealings with them, and a good word likewise from the press. But there have now and again some made their appearance here who have either been little instructed in the ways of the world, or profited but little by the lessons they have had. They come here and think all sorts of things, or we might be nearer the truth did we say that their brain is filled with all sorts of vague notions of what we are and what we should do for them. Those who understand the order of the Church, understand without any argument from us, that it is our province to counsel and instruct all members of the Church that are near us, and in this calling we can only hope to benefit the Saints by their carrying out the instructions we give. With large companies of Saints there is no difficulty—they have a president and counsellors who understand their business, get our instructions and pass on; but with straggling parties, who do not continue the ordinary route, there have been slight difficulties. Last week, some Welsh emigrants, and a few others, passed through here from Boston on their way to Pennsylvania. The person in our office who generally attends to the forwarding of such emigrants attended as usual upon the new arrivals. When trying to obtain tickets for them he was beset with runners, who succeeded in inducing some to accept their tickets. Some of the emigrants, not knowing the gentlemen, were beguiled with their appearance of cheaper tickets, and made a clamor; whereupon our representative left them to pursue their own course. They were to go through Philadelphia, but we have not heard of them since they left here. Perhaps they have already learned the value of runner friendship.

We are ever willing to aid our brethren, but we beg of all who come here to think before they act. The representative of this office we referred to is a man who has given many indubitable evidences of his attention and care for his brethren, and was laboring for the interest of those who treated him so disrespectfully. We fully approve of his course, and say to all who come here: Take your own course if you prefer it, but don't come to this office, seek counsel and afterwards play the fool's part by listening to men who only exist upon the plunder they extort from the ignorant. Such persons will undoubtedly realize the consequences of their imprudence, and we hold ourselves entirely free from any responsibility.

We have just been advised from Philadelphia that the President of the Church there has seen nothing of them.

Notice to the Saints.

ON the arrival of emigrant vessels in New York and Philadelphia, many have landed entirely destitute of means, and others with not enough to convey them to their places of destination. In their time of need, being strangers in a strange land and brethren, we have extended to them a helping hand, not only in counsel, but in money. We have paid rent for houses and furnished them with means to sustain them until they could get employment. In other cases we have paid their passages, or part, to other places; we have, in short, extended to them a helping hand—in this we were only doing our duty and dealing with others as we should like to be dealt by. These sums, varying from five to sixty dollars, have amounted to a very large sum; and as they are only lent, we have expected them to be returned. Some have been prompt in remembering the kindness extended to them and have returned it as soon as they were able—a great many, however, seem to have entirely forgotten their obligations, which exhibits to us a very low standard of moral rectitude and a lack of that integrity, truthfulness, honesty and honor that ought at all times to characterize the Saints. Some of this money has been donated by liberal-minded Saints; but the principal amount has been supplied by this office. We calculated to raise a perpetual fund to loan to the needy, to be returned in order to supply others. When those brethren who have had assistance do not return the amount, they not only impose upon those who have extended a friendly hand in their time of need, but they also deprive others, more worthy perhaps than themselves, by their dishonesty, of that succor which it always gives us pleasure to afford to our strange brethren. We wish to inform all such persons that we expect them promptly to meet their obligations. We have abstained thus long from speaking upon these matters, in the hope that their own sense of honor would prompt them to meet such delicate obligations; as it does not, however, we inform all concerned, that unless it is attended to, we shall be compelled to publish their names. We have had men, so lost to a sense of propriety in relation to these matters, send to us sums of money to forward to their friends, while they themselves were indebted to this office for money loaned in their need. We would recommend to such persons to "be just before generous," and to supply their friends with their own, and not our money. And furthermore, where companies have obtained sums of money, we hold them, as companies, responsible for the payment, and we cannot take one individual's portion as part payment of the whole. We wish the Presiding Elders to see to these matters, and wish emphatically to state that we cannot and will not admit of dishonesty in the kingdom of God.

Notice.

ALL persons writing to this office for information will be answered if postage stamps are inclosed. We think we do pretty well when we give our time, pens, ink and paper, without adding postage stamps.

St. Louis.

BY letter from Elder J. H. Hart, dated St. Louis, May 25th, we are informed that upwards of 230 Saints, mostly Daniab, under the presidency of Elder Canute Peterson, left that port on the 22d, by the steamer Admiral, for Florence.

Nicaragua.

PEACE has not been proclaimed between Costa Rica and Walker, but hostilities have, according to last advices, temporarily ceased. The Costa Ricans, after the battle of Rivas, tarried in that vicinity. From all accounts of their procedure, before the enemy and after his departure, they seem to have had little fighting or camp-life education. Different statements have been published of their losses. The official statement sets forth a loss of 1200 men, since the proclamation of war, out of a small army of something about 3000. The dead were left unburied around their camping ground, and, as a necessary consequence, disease made rapid and sad havoc with the living. The cholera made such ravages that President Mora, with his staff, took the lead for home on the 26th April. On the 30th, Walker, with a large party of his army, arrived there a few hours after the last detachment of the Costa Ricans had left. He found a letter from Gen. Cavos, the Commander-in-Chief, requesting his care of the sick that could not be taken from the place, with the promise that, if agreeable, they should at a future time be taken in exchange for twenty-five Americans, prisoners of war, in their hands. This latter fact destroys the charges of barbarism and inhumanity to prisoners of war that have been circulated against the Costa Ricans. By friends and foes, Walker is now represented in good and flourishing circumstances. They don't calculate further trouble from the Costa Ricans. By the departure of the latter, and subsequent measures of Walker, the Transit route through Nicaragua is again open and safe.

Col. Louis Schlessinger, who figured considerably among the fillibusters, did considerable travelling service for Walker, and ran away from the battle offered him by the Costa Ricans at Santa Rosa, has been arraigned before a Court Martial at the head-quarters of Walker's army, Virgin Bay, to answer to the charges of "neglect of duty," "ignorance of his duties as a commanding officer," and "cowardice in the presence of an enemy." To some of the specifications of the first charges he pleaded guilty—to others, not guilty. The Colonel, having little to hope for of a favorable character, bolted, which brought against him the additional charge of "desertion" to atone for. Walker, as General Commander-in-Chief, approves of the proceedings of the Court, and proclaims:

"The sentence of the Court on the specifications and charges preferred against Colonel Louis Schlessinger of 2d Rifles is approved; and he is therefore degraded from the rank of Colonel, will be shot as a deserter wherever found, and will be published as such throughout the civilized world."

Don Patricio Rivas has been re-elected President of Nicaragua.

Kansas.

A monster meeting of Free State men was held in Chicago on the 1st inst., the following among other resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the people of Illinois will aid the freemen of Kansas.

Resolved, That they will send a colony of 500 actual settlers to the Territory, and provision them for a year.

Resolved, That these settlers will invade no man's rights, but will maintain their own.

Resolved, That we recommend the adoption of a similar policy to the people of all the States of the Union ready and willing to act, and also thorough concert and co-operation among them, through committees of correspondence on this subject.

General Lane, of Kansas, made a stirring speech, after which subscriptions were taken up in money, rifles, and revolvers, to the value of $15,000. The New York Daily Times gives the following items:

A very large meeting of citizens was held in Lafayette on the evening of the 31st of May. Eloquent speakers addressed the assembly. Among the resolutions adopted was the following:

Resolved, That a Finance Committee of Three be appointed by the Chair, who shall receive such donations as our citizens may be willing to give, for the aid of our suffering brethren in Kansas, as well as such as may be desirous of emigrating; and the said Committee disburse the funds thus received in such manner as in their discretion shall best accomplish the objects aforesaid.

In the course of the evening $1,500 were subscribed for the relief of the Free-State men of Kansas.

At the recent great Kansas meeting in Detroit, Mr. Duncan Stewart, a well-known merchant of that city, offered to give $2,000 per year towards the maintenance of a company in Kansas to assist in making it a free State. All honor to the noble Duncan Stewart.

At the recent Kansas meeting in Syracuse, a letter was read from Gerrit Smith, proposing to raise $1,000,000 for the Free-State cause, pledging himself to give $10,000.

A KNOW NOTHING National Convention is now in session in Knickerbocker Hall, Albany.

Last Sunday.

THE good folks the other side of the North River were highly honored last Sunday by the ceremony of the translation of the relics of St. Quietus, a martyr to the Christian religion.

The attendance on the occasion was very large. Tickets of admission, like the following, were required of persons on entering the church:

TRANSLATION
RELICS OF ST. QUIETUS, MARTYR,
The gift of His Holiness, Pope Pius IX, TO ST. MARY'S CHURCH,
Hoboken,
By the Right Rev. Dr. Bayley, Bishop of Newark.
Sunday, June 1, 1856.
Tickets 25 cents each.

"At half-past 10 o'clock the Rev. Dr. Bayley, Bishop of Newark, the Rev. Mr. Coffin, and other clergymen and attendants, entered the Church from the front door in their ecclesiastical robes, conveying the relics which were placed on the smaller altar on the south side of the Church. The relics were contained in a case about a foot in length by eight inches in height. The case was made of an ornamented golden frame and cover with glass sides and ends, so that the relics which consisted of some fragments of bones, very old and decayed in appearance, were plainly to be seen. In the altar a second glass case of larger dimensions had been arranged, in which was placed the figure of a corpse of a beautiful boy of about twelve years, modeled in wax. A deep wound was represented on the throat. The figure was designed to represent St. Quietus, whose relics were encased above. The vase taken from his tomb in the catacombs at Rome, and which is said to have contained his blood, was lying at the head of the figure, and the tablet taken from the tomb was at the feet. The ceremonies on the occasion were conducted by the Bishop, and various clergymen and attendants—the number within the altar being about twenty. During the ceremonies some three hundred persons, male and female, were confirmed."

Brooklyn was likewise favored by a rich scene in Mr. Beecher's church. A negress, about 22 years of age, was presented to the congregation as partly redeemed, and only $500 were wanting to complete the purchase. Mr. B. got the feelings up, and when sympathy was running out of their eyes and the olfactory organs buried in the handkerchief, $883, a diamond cross, and some rings were piled on to the plate. A portion of the Press pitch into Mr. B. for making the "house of God" a "slave market." The Daily News devotes, on Thursday, a leader to that diamond cross, and points out, to what he calls scribes, pharisees, hypocrites, considerable occupation of as laudable a character at home.

The Cincinnati Convention.

The National Democratic Convention assembled on Monday, and is now sitting at Cincinnati. Plenty of correspondence and telegraph messages have been published since the delegates got to the Queen City; but we think it will be time enough to report their decisions when they get to some, the present is the wire pulling season. The only reliable information is that "The city is full of dust, delegates and whiskey.

Council "Bluffs Bugle."

THIS well-conducted paper came out last month in a new dress from a new press and new type. It has attained a regular weekly circulation of 1,000 copies. Good, indeed, for the frontiers. In 1847 Council Bluffs was a howling wilderness. We wish the enterprising editor of the Bugle the success their diligent labors merit.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

The Aspinwall Courier, of May 9th, gives full particulars of the late dreadful disaster on the Panama Railroad. The Courier says:—"The dead thus far, amount to forty-three; thirty-three of whom were indentified at one time or another; and two of whom no information could be obtained.

The wounded who required surgical aid, numbered about sixty, of whom forty-seven are now at the hospital of the R. R. Co. in this place, and the remainder went on towards San Francisco."

El Panameno states that some arrests of persons engaged in the Panama riot of April 15th, had been made, and a portion of the property stolen recovered.

The Grand Jury of the United States District Court, rendered a true bill on Tuesday against the negro Wilson, for making a revolt on board the schooner Eudora Imogene, confining the master, and taking possession of the vessel within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States.

An "indignation meeting" was held in the Broadway Tabernacle last Friday evening. The speakers were numerous and unanimous in their condemnation of Preston S. Brooks, and sympathy for Mr. Sumner.

Another "indignation meeting" was held on Saturday evening in and around the Brooklyn City Hall. The Hall being capable of containing all who came at the hour appointed for assembling, it was concluded that the meeting should be held there—the cold evening being an additional motive for being indoors. Great numbers came after the speaking began which led to another assembling outside.

John Fox, tried and convicted at the last term of the Middlesex County, New Jersey, Court of Oyer and Terminer, of the murder of John Henry, on the 27th of December last, received his sentence on Saturday last. He is to be hung on Friday, the 25th day of July next. The prisoner received the sentence without the least sign of agitation or apparent concern.

He is ironed and carefully guarded in his cell. A watchman was engaged at night to guard his cell for some time previous to the trial.

Deseret.

WE have in The Deseret News of April 2, the proposed "Constitution of the State of Deseret," composed of the Territory now known as Utah and inhabited by the "Latter Day Saints," commonly called Mormons. It is very short, rather vague, and its provisions generally commendable. It is silent with respect to Bigamy, and also as to Slavery, though one section of the Bill of Rights is logically incompatible with any chattelizing of human beings. The Liberty of Speech and of the Press is guaranteed. A Governor and Lieut. Governor are to be chosen for four years —it does not say how—but the Secretary of of State, Treasurer, Auditor, and Attorney-General are to be chosen by the General Assembly—also for four years. The Supreme Court shall consist af a Chief-Justice and two Associates, each elected for six years. All citizens of the United States, twenty-one years of age and six months resident in the State, are legal voters. This Constitution was ratified by the People on the 7th of April, and will soon be submitted to Congress as the basis of an appeal for the admission of Deseret as a State.—[N. Y. Tribune, June 2d.

Two New States Coming into the Union.

KANSAS and Deseret both appear to be preparing to knock at the doors of Congress for admission. But how differently do they present themselves as suppliants! Kansas comes forward with bowie knives, rifles and land jobbers, with hands stained with blood, murder and arson, and fresh from the conflicts between the pro-slavery and anti-slavery settlers. On the other hand, Deseret, which is peopled by the Mormons, who, for their religious opinions, were driven out of Missouri, banished from Illinois, and driven beyond the Rocky Mountains, has gradually and quietly, without trouble or conflict, and by the efforts of its own energy and industry alone, grown into an important community; and after peaceably adopting a new constitution, its delegates are now on their way to Washington to claim its admission into the Union. And yet Deseret, although presenting such an example of industry, sobriety and piety, will no doubt be set down by the present Congress as an immoral, dangerous and wicked community, while Kanas will be fought for, quarrelled about, and probably admitted to a copartnership with the rest of the States.—[N. FOREIGN SUMMARY.

BY the arrival of the Canadian steamship Indian from Liverpool at Quebec, on Tuesday evening, we have news from Europe up to the 21st ult.

In the House of Lords on the 19th, the Earl of Clarendon, in reply to interrogataries respecting a letter published by Mr. Hammond on Costa Rica and the British government, said that the agents of the Costa Ricans in England, and some agents in the South American States had appealed to the British government for assistance against Walker, and had laid before them numerous projects for the carrying out of their wishes; but Her Majesty's Ministers had invariably replied in the negative to all solicitations, as they did not wish to interfere in any manner in Central America; all they would consent to do would be to send sufficient naval force to the coast of South America to protect British property. The Costa Rica agent having stated that he was without credit and could not raise arms, asked the War Department to give him a few arms, to which they ultimately consented. Mr. Wallenstein did not consider himself entitled to accept the conditions, so the arms were never received. The Earl said, since Walker took possession of Nicaragua he had disposed of a good deal of British property by force alone, and her Majesty's government had communicated with the government of the United States in the matter, and he would read an extract from a despatch of Mr. Crampton's on the question. There had been no disguise whatever with the United States government. The object of the British government avowedly had been to protect British interests. On the 5th of March, Mr. Marcy said he entirely disapproved of the existing state of things in Nicaragua, and thought it likely to cast a shadow upon the reputation of the government of the United States. He observed that he knew no better plan of proceeding than for the United States and the British government to combine for the protection of citizens of the United States and subjects of Great Britain.

It is reported, via Berlin, that Gen. Sir Wm. W. Williams had arrived at St. Petersburgh, and would shortly leave the Russian capital for England. The London Times' Berlin correspondent writes that the Emperor had given his whole fleet a new arrangement, in consequence of the events of the war. At present the Russian fleet consists of three divisions, making a total of forty-three vessels of war and three transports. Of the former, nine are steamers.

The weather in England has been very boisterous, and several vessels had been driven ashore—the British bark Mary Wilson on the rocks.

The annual statement of the Chancellor of the Exchequer has been laid before Parliament. The estimated revenue for the current year is set down at £67,166,000, showing a deficiency of £8,873,000.

The Crimean Board of Inquiry, after a session of twenty-three days, closed its investigations on Monday.

Riots were anticipated in London on account of the withdrawal of the military bands from the parks on Sunday evenings, but the last Sunday passed off quietly.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, May 29, 1856.

The House bills granting lands to Wisconsin, Alabama, Louisiana and Michigan, to aid in the construction of certain railroads therein, were severally passed.

A message was received from the President of the United States, informing Congress that he has ceased to hold intercourse with the Minister of the British Government to Washington, and deems it proper to lay before them the considerations of public duty which have led to the adoption of a measure of so much importance.

Among the documents transmitted by the President, is a dispatch from Secretary Marcy to Mr. Dallas dated May 27th, 1856, in which it is stated that the President has carefully considered the note of Lord Clarendon to Mr. Dallas (April 30th) relative to the enlistment question, and has directed him to present his views thereon for the purpose of having them communicated to the British Government. The President is much gratified by the conciliatory spirit of that note, and by the desire expressed by Lord Clarendon, to adjust existing difficulties and preserve and strengthen the friendly relations between the two governments. The disclaimer of any intention to violate the laws of the United States and the expression of regret that contrary to the intention and direction of the British Government, there has been such infringement, are satisfactory to the President, and the main complaint, so far as respects Her Majesty's government is thus removed; but the President extremely regrets that he cannot concur with Mr. Clarendon, in the opinion that Mr. Crampton and the Consuls at New York, Philadelphia and Cincinnati are not implicated in these proceedings. Regarding those who have no connection with this government, he has nothing to ask of Her Majesty's government, but in the cases of the individuals mentioned, he deems it proper that their relations with this government should cease.

In taking the step, however, he does not intend to cause any interruption of the diplomatic relations between the United States and Great Britain, but, on the contrary, is desirous of keeping the two countries upon a friendly footing. Mr. Crampton's withdrawal was asked expressly on the ground that his connection with the enlistment had rendered him an unacceptable representative of her Britannic Majesty near this Government; and, for the same reason, the withdrawal of the Consuls named was likewise requested. These officers are all, as this Government still believes, implicated in the violation of the laws of the United States, contrary to the reiterated instructions of their own government. This complicity did not rest solely on the testimony of Strobel and Hertz, but on original letters from Mr. Crampton and others. The dispatch then proceeds to detail, at length, the evidence against the dismissed minister and consuls.

Mr. Mason spoke in complimentary terms of the ability with which the question had been discussed by Mr. Marcy.

Mr. Cass thought that no pretext for war could arise out of the dismissal of Mr. Crampton unless England was determined to go to war.

Mr. Toombs thought if this government was satisfied with the explanation of Lord Clarendon, Mr. Crampton should not have been dismissed.

Mr. Cass replied that his government had not expressed itself satisfied with Mr. Crampton's conduct but with the assurance of the British government that they (the government) had intended no violation of our laws. But it has now turned out that Mr. Crampton had acted in violation of the intentions and directions of his own government.

Mr. Toombs did not believe England or her officers had violated our laws at all. While the matter was pending he did not choose to argue the question against our Government, but he would now say he disapproved the construction which this Government had placed upon our neutrality laws.

Mr. Butler thought it would have been better to have dismissed Mr. Crampton as soon as his complicity in the matter was discovered. Adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio. from the Select Committee on the Sumner assault, said, he had been unanimously instructed to ask the House to adopt a resolution that said committee may present their report or reports, with a journal of their proceedings, at any time when the House is in session, and that the documents shall thereupon be laid on the Speaker's table and printed.

The resolution applied for was unanimously adopted.

A message was received from the President, notifying Congress of the dismissal of Mr. Crampton, and transmitting documents—being the same that were sent to the Senate. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Grow, representing the majority of the Committee on Territories, made a report, proposing to admit Kansas into the Union with the Topeka Constitution. Its consideration was postponed till the 25th of June.

Several private bills were passed. Adjourned till Monday.

SENATE. June 2.

Mr. Bright being absent, Mr. Stuart presided.

He laid before the Senate a message from the President about Central America, which has already been published.

A resolution was adopted, that when the Senate adjourns on Thursday next, it be to the following Monday.

The presiding officer then read a letter from Preston S. Brooks addressed to Mr. Bright in which he expresses regret at finding in the report of the Senate Committee that what he had intended only as a redress for personal wrong, should have been construed, or must necessarily, as a breach of the privilege of the Senate.

He thought he had a just right to exception to the language of Senator Sumner and make him better acquainted with the properties of gutta percha. He only administered chastisement in the Senate because he could not find him elsewhere. He terminates with asking the Senate to believe he had no "design or purpose to infract its privileges or offend its dignity."

The letter was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

The Senate then adjourned to Thursday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Campbell of Ohio, from the Select Committee on the assault of Mr. Sumner by Mr. Brooks, made a report concluding as follows:

WHEREAS, The Senate of the United States have transmitted to this House a message, complaining that Preston S. Brooks, a representative from South Carolina, committed upon the person of Charles Sumner, a Senator from the State of Massachusetts while seated at his desk in the Senate chamber, after the adjournment of that body, on the 22d of May last a violent assault which disabled him from attending to his duties in the Senate, and declaring that such assault was a breach of the privileges of that body; and,

WHEREAS, From respect of the privileges of the House, the Senate have further declared that inasmuch as the said Preston S. Brooks is a member of this House, they cannot arrest and a fortiori cannot try or punish him for a breach of their privileges; that they cannot proceed further in the case than to make complaint to this House, and that the power to arrest, try and punish devolves solely on this body; and,

WHEREAS, Upon full investigation it appears to this House that the said Preston S. Brooks has been guilty of the assault complained of by the Senate, with the most aggravated circumstances of violence; that the same was a breach of the pivileges, not only of the Senate, but of the Senator assailed and of this House as a co-ordinate branch of the Legislative Department of this Government; in direct violation of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that Senators and Representatives, for any speech or debate in either House shall not be questioned in any other place; and,

WHEREAS, This House is of the opinion that it has the power and ought to punish the said Preston S. Brooks for the said assault, not only as a breach of the privileges of the Senator assailed, and of the Senate and House, as declared by the Constitution but as an act of disorderly behaviour; and,

WHEREAS, It further appears from such investigation, that Henry A. Edmundson, a Representative from the State of Virginia, and Lawrence M. Keitt, a Representative from South Carolina, some time previous to said assault were informed that it was the purpose of the said Brooks to commit violence upon the person of the said Charles Sumner, for words used by him in debate as a Senator in the Senate of the United States, and took no means to discourage or prevent the same; but, on the contrary, anticipating the commission of such violence were present on one or more occasions to witness the same as friends of the assailant; therefore,

Resolved, That Preston S. Brooks be and is hereby, forthwith expelled from this House as a Representative from the State of South Carolina.

Resolved, That this House hereby declares its disapprobation of said act of Henry A. Edmundson and Lawrence M. Keitt, in regard to said assault.

Signed by Mr. Campbell of Ohio, Spinner and Pennington.

Mr. Howell Cobb, representing the minority of the Committee, presented a minority report, arguing that no breach of privilege, under the Constitution, had been committed, and that the House had no power to go beyond the Constitution in deciding that a breach of privilege had been committed.

Both reports were laid on the table and ordered to be printed. Adjourned.

June 3.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

About thirty-five members convened, Mr. Aiken in the chair. No quorum. Adjourned.

June 4.

From Mexico.

BALTIMORE, June 1, 1856.

We have the New Orleans mail of Monday. The papers contain particulars of an encounter, at Bayou Sara, between Mr. Marks, Editor of the Ledger, and Mr. Robertson, Editor of the Chronicle, in which the latter was killed and the former wounded.

The papers also furnish dates from Mexico to the 22d of May. The Bishop of Puebla had been banished from the country. An unsuccessful attempt was made by the Church party to rescue him, and several persons had been arrested. The Bishop had had sailed for Bordeaux. Admiral Zerman, of the Pacific squadron had been imprisoned by order of the Government.

Insurrection in Hayti.

BOSTON, June 2, 1856.

THE Traveller publishes extracts from a letter bearing date, Aux Cayes, Hayti, Saturday, May 10, which states that a formidable insurrection had broken out in that part of the island against the emperor—Soloque. The writer says:

A body of from two thousand to three thousand insurgents took possession of a post between this place and Pingrey last night, with the view of attacking the town to-day.

The military authorities were only aware of this at 6 o'clock this morning. The alarm drums were immediately beaten, and every male adult in town was ordered to join the troops. At 10 A. M. the troops marched out with the citizens that had joined them, but being but five hundred strong it is probable they will not make an attack on the insurgents, but will content themselves with defending the entry of the town until re-enforced.

A postscript to the letter, under date 11 A. M., adds:

The alarm drums are again beating. It is said that the troops sent out are repulsed, and the insurgents are pushing forward. People are running distracteoly through the streets, closing stores, &c.

The Kansas Troubles.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., June 3, 1856.

The father of Mr. Mitchell, who resides here, has received a letter, dated Lawrence, May, 22, from his son, stating that Dr. Root and himself, reported dead, are alive. They were fired at and arrested, but were discharged.

CHICAGO, June 3, 1856.

Our dates from Lawrence are to the 25th of May.

The correspondent of the Tribune sends a list of the property destroyed at Lawrence on the 21st ult,, amounting to $130,000. Governor Shannon issued an order calling out the troops, at 8 o'clock, on the morning of the 22d.

A gentleman just arrived reports that the difficulty mentioned as occurring at Possawatonic creek, took place at Osawatomie. The quarrel arose from depredations committed by the pro-slavery men on the cattle of the free State men on the 26th ultimo. Some pro-slavery men seized a free State man and proceeded to hang him, when his wife fled and aroused the neighbors, who came to his rescue. A fight ensued, when five pro slavery and two free State men were killed.

A force of sixty men organized at Westport, Mo. on the 27th ult., and proceeded to Osawatomie.

Charles Sumner, U. S. Senator from Mass.

CHARLES SUMNER was born in Boston, Jan. 6, 1811. His father, Charles Pinckney Sumner, was high Sheriff of Suffolk county, Massachusetts. Mr. Sumner was prepared for college at the Latin School, Boston, and graduated at Harvard in 1830. The following year he entered the law school of the same University, and while pursuing his studies wrote several articles for the American Jurist, and soon became editor of that journal. He commenced the practice of his profession in Boston, in 1834, and was soon afterwards appointed reporter to the Circuit Court, and published three volumes of reports. He also lectured for three successive winters before the Cambridge Law School, at the request of the Faculty, during the absence of Professors Greenleaf and Story. In 1836 he edited "A Treatise on the Practice of the Courts of Admiralty in Civil Causes of Maritime Jurisdiction, by Andrew Dunlap," adding an appendix equal in extent to the original work. In 1837 he sailed for Europe, where he remained three years, enjoying unusual advantages of social intercourse with the most distinguished men of the day. While in Paris, at the request of the minister, Gen. Cass, he wrote a defence of the American claim of the north-eastern boundary, which was republished from Galignani's Messenger, where it originally appeared, in the leading American journals, and was universally regarded as an able presentation of the argument. After his return to the United States he again lectured before the Cambridge Law School, and would have been elected to succeed Judge Story as Professor, if he had not expressed a disinclination to accept the place. Mr. Sumner in politics was a democrat, and enthusiastically supported Mr. Van Buren for the Presidency in 1848. In 1851 he was elected to the U. S. Senate as the successor of Daniel Webster, and has since acted with the Republicans.

The Dismissal of the British Minister and Consuls.

Mr. Crampton and Consul left by the English steamer from Boston on Wednesday. The following are the letters of dismissal:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, May 28, 1856.

SIR,—The President of the United States has directed me to announce to you his determination to discontinue further intercourse with you as her Majesty's diplomatic representative to the government of the United States. The reasons which have compelled him to take this step at this time have been communicated to your government.

I avail myself of this occasion to add that due attention will be cheerfully given to any communications addressed to this department from her Majesty's government affecting the relations between Great Britain and the United States, which may be forwarded to this government through any other channel.

Should it be your pleasure to retire from the United States, the President directs me to furnish you with the usual facilities for that purpose. I consequently enclose herewith the passports in such cases. I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to you, sir, the assurance of my respectful consideration. W. L. MARCY.

JOHN F. CRAMPTON, Esq., &c. &c.

The Dismissal of the British Consuls.

OFFICIAL.

FRANKLIN PIERCE, President of the United States of America, to all whom it may concern.

Whereas, by letters patent, under the seal of the United States, bearing date the second day of March, A.D. 1843, the President recognized Anthony Barclay as Consul of her Britannic Majesty at New York, and declared him free to exercise and enjoy such functions, powers, and privileges as are allowed to the Consuls of the most favored nations; but, for good and sufficient reasons, it is deemed proper that he should no longer exercise the said functions within the United States.

Now, therefore, be it known, that I, Franklin Pierce, President of the United States of America, do hereby declare that the powers and privileges conferred as aforesaid on the said Anthony Barclay are revoked and annulled.

In testimony whereof I have caused these letters to be made patent, and the seal of the United States to be hereunto affixed.

[L. S.] Given under my hand, at the City of Washington, the twenty-eight day of May, A.D. 1856, and of the independence of the United States of America the 80th.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

By the President, W. L. MARCY, Secretary of State.

Similar proclamations were published in regard to Geo. Benvenuto Mathew, Counsul at Philadelphia, and Charles Rowcroft, Consul at Cincinnati.

Go Punctually to Church.

If a thing be worth doing at all, it is worth doing well. There must be an hour appointed for the service of the Sabbath to commence. To have such an hour, and not regard it, is very childish. To say, a quarter past ten A.M., and understand by it half-past, and really mean about twenty minutes before eleven, is using words idly, and tampering with common sense, and what is more injurious, with common conscience and honesty. Say what you mean, and stick to it. Fix the hour and meet it on the chime. The tramp of late coming feet up the ailes and along the gallaries is a great annoyance to every serious minded worshipper, and has no tendency to sanctify the minister. So many heads are set on pivots, turning like well oiled weathercocks to every gentle blast from the opened door, even every rustle of silk and muslin, so that a preacher loses the countenance of half his congregation when the interruption occurs—and is in danger of losing his own countenance and something else besides. It is a piece of indecorum to go late to church, unless compelled by some rigid necessity, which every well bred person, to take no higher ground, will blush to practice. We are not saying, if you find you are about to be late you had better conclude not to come at all. Many people reason in that way for themselves. Our doctrine is that you ought to go, and to go punctually. You would hardly think it courteous if you were invited to a dinner party at a specified hour, to stroll in some half an hour behind, keeping the company waiting your tardy arrival or putting back its courses to begin afresh with you. It would be about as difficult to vindicate the courtesy and propriety of coming to the gospel feast out of time. What should hinder any man from being punctual! The whole Sabbath is divinely set apart for this very interest of religious culture. There is not an hour of it that is not legitimately claimed for something connected with the soul's spiritual welfare. What other appropriation of its consecrated time can justify itself! Over sleeping, delay in household duties, listlessness and procrastination in preparing, lingering at the toilet—these sometimes occasion, but surely cannot warrant.—[Ex.

Value of the Diamond.

FROM an interesting article in a late number of The North British Review on the subject of the history, properties, and origin of the diamond, we copy the following passage relating to its value:

It is the monarch of the subterranean world —the material divinity which the Pagan, the Jew, and the Christian worship with equal idolatry. The sacra fames auri, the accursed thirst for gold, is an inferior and less excitable passion than that which we would struggle for the gigantic brilliant, or scrable for its glittering fragments. Over this globe of ours there rules many a mighty sovereign—on its surface are many powerful empires—many a cloud-capt tower and gorgeous palace rises above its plains—many a mass of gold and silver has been wrenched from its bowels—and many a gem of art has arrested the intellectual eye; but more loved than sovereigns—more prized than empires—more coveted than gold—more admired than the creations of Raphael, is the sparkling diamond which flashes in the imperial crown or adorns the royal scepter, or adds to beauty its only "foreign aid."

Nor is this an ideal appreciation of its rarity and worth. It is in truth the very essence of poverty, It is riches condensed and wealth secured—too small to be seen by the midnight burglar—too easily hid to be seized by the tyrant—and too quickly carried away to be wrested from the patriotic exile, or torn from the hunted outlaw. In vain would the vanquished monarch strive to remove his bags of gold, or transport his territorial domains. But a diamond is an empire made portable, with which he might purchase a better kingdom, and mount a prouder throne. Had the treasury of Crœsus been invested in brilliants, he might have found a nobler Lydia, beyond the reach of his Persian invader. It is difficult to express, in words or in numbers the commercial value of the diamond, but we may truly say that a string of Koh-i-noors a furlong in length would purchase the fee simple of the globe, while a ring encircling the Arctic zone would buy the whole planetary system.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands,' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? On devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Speak Gently.

"A soft answer turneth away wrath."—[Prov.

BY J. W. WELCH.

Speak gently to thy father,
For he is aged now,
The frosts of many winters
Have fallen on his brow.
Soon, soon above his sleeping dust
The willow tree will wave;
Then try by gentle words to smooth
His pathway to the grave.

Speak gently to thy mother,
'Twas she who gave thee birth;
She watched o'er thee in infancy,
And guarded thee in youth.
She, too, will soon be called away
To a better home above—
Speak gently to thy mother
The words of deepest love.

Speak gently to thy sister,
Thee she doth fondly love,
Then never let an unkind word
Her gentle spirit move.
Uphold her as she roams along
Through life's oft weary day,
And should she weep, with friendly hand
Wipe thou her tears away.

Speak gently to thy brother,
Whate'er his lot may be,
And do thou his shortcomings scan
With heartfelt charity.
When tears of grief bedim his eye,
Then be thou by his side,
If he joy, join in his mirth—
If rude, why gently chide.

Speak gently to thy fellow-man,
Of high or lowly birth;
Speak gently to him if he's poor
Or rich in things of earth.
Speak gently thou to every one,
Kind words will cost thee nothing,
And every one will prove a star
In the crown of thy rejoicing.

Settlement of Indian Difficulties—Meeting of a Convention for the Formation of a State Constitution—Debate on the Slavery Question—Speculations on the Admission of Utah—The Constitution of the Proposed State of Deseret—Miscellaneous News.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY,
Monday, March 31, 1856.

THE Indian difficulties, of which I made mention in my last letter, have been brought to an end for the present, without a further loss of stock, or murder of more white men than those named by me. The body, however of young Huntsucker, who was missing, has been found frightfully mutilated.

On the 1st inst. General Peter Conover, with a company of 200 men, left the Utah Lake settlements for the supposed rendezvous of the Indians; but was compelled to return without meeting them, though he succeeded in recovering eleven horses and sixty-five head of cattle, hidden in the mountains by the hostile band. The offenders have fled south, it is supposed to the swamps of the Sevier River, still retaining a large number of stolen horses and cattle.

Before leaving the scene of depredation, Tingahwah, who, it seems, expected the other Utah bands to join him, sent a message to Arrapeen, the successor and brother of the famous Walker, stating that he (Tingahwah) would kill him upon sight, as being leagued with the Mormons, and no better than they. Some of Arrapeen's braves immediately came up to this City, and asked the consent of the Governor to follow and exterminate them. As the present necessities of the Mormons will not permit them to spare the time and expense of pursuing such adept hiders, consent was promptly given, on condition of Arrapeen going along to see the war party justly conducted. At last accounts Arrapeen had donned his war costume, and was preparing to search for Tingahwah's scalp.

Washear, or "Old Squash Head," a most cunning, vindictive and treacherous Indian, who has been represented as one who would accept from a friendly white nine of ten horses, and then steal the remaining animal, besides killing his benefactor, if chance offered, committed suicide by cutting his throat with a case knife at the commencement of the difficulties while under confinement. He had been arrested for stealing cattle, and feared that he would meet with the fate of two Indians hung two years ago. There has long existed much circumstantial evidence of thefts and murders against this character, but so deeply shielded by cunning were all his plans, that until now he has ever evaded the hands of justice.

It has been discovered that several "Gentile" merchants, clerks, and others, in this City, have been enticing Mormon girls to their embraces, by their presents and money. The evidence is quite conclusive, even to the names of the offenders. This brought out Counsellor Grant, on Sunday, the 2d inst., at the Tabernacle; he stated, in a very passionate speech, that he had guns and dirks for all such charters, and instead of treating them to the law would cut them off from the face of the earth. He said that such characters are always threatening the Mormons with the United States troops. As his sermon is one of the out-spoken kind that have before emanated from this City, I shall not fail to send you a published copy.

On Sunday, the 16th, Bishop Wooley, of the Thirteenth Ward, touched upon the same subject, and stated that future offenders should have their heads cut off, and preserved in Great Salt Lake, while their bodies should be left to manure the corn-fields. Brigham Young followed, stating that the "Saints" were not all perfect enough yet to lay judgement to the line and righteousness to the plummet; that a man to put away the seducers of his wives and daughters must be free from the stain of the same sin, or else he will suffer as a murderer in the world to come. He stated that he loved none of his wives so well but he could put a dagger into her heart if he found her cohabiting with another man.

On the 17th inst., a roaring cannon and band of music stationed near the Council House, and the numerous flags, with various devices and mottoes, displayed from the public buildings and stores of this city, reminded the citizens that a Convention was about to be held for the purpose of forming a Constitution for the expectant State of Desert. The Convention organized by selecting J. M. Grant as President, besides minor officers. Thirty-nine delegates were present.

Before taking the oath, Judge Kinney inquired if he was personally referred to within the general term of "Gentiles," in the sermons of Grant and Wooley, two members of the Convention, as he did not wish to burden the body with his presence if they thought him guilty of the crimes mentioned? This and a similar question put by Dr. Hurt were answered in the negative. I admired this movement, for some of the Mormon sermonizers are too free in their use of the word "Gentiles." Instead of naming their offenders without their Church jurisdiction, they hold them up to view as "Gentiles," just as their Missouri persecutors used the word "Mormon." I admit that the greater portion of the non-Mormon-believing part of the inhabitants of this city show a very low scale of morals, yet there are some who are as pure as any Mormon can pretend to be.

The debate on the Slavery question, in the Convention, was quite prolonged and animated, being brought out by the Committee on "Bill of Rights," making the institution Constitutional. Indian-Agent Hurt, Judge Stiles, S. M. Blair, T. S. Williams, and others, strenuously supported the Pro-slavery side, while rank Abolitionism found not one speaking advocate. The section was opposed and stricken out, on the ground that the question should be left open for future reception or rejection by the people of the State, as they may from time to time see proper. The gentlemen named above seemed to discover a free darkey behind nearly every other section of the different articles of the proposed Constitution; the latter of the quarto refused for some time, to sign the adopted instrument, because he fancied that the first section of Article 7 allowed electorial immunities to free negroes by the non-insertion of the word "white."

George A. Smith and John Taylor, were selected as Delegates to present the Memorial and Constitution adopted by the Convention to Congress, with the co-operation of the Teritorial Delegate, Dr. Bernhisel. They were instructed to use their discretion in accepting minor alterations. It was declared that the Mormons will emphatically refuse to yield up their doctrine and practice of polygamy, and that Congress has no right to legislate concerning the subject.

The Convention adjourned on the 27th inst. Its proceedings were distinguished throughout by a remarkable degree of order and calmness of debate. The Constitution adopted by it, will be submitted to the people of the territory on or before the 20th of April.

Under present circumstances, the laying of a Constitution before Congress, asking for admission into the Union, is a mere farce. Although the new Constitutions undergo a rigid examination, yet, in most, if not all of the former first Constitutions, the new States had the power of altering the instrument immediately after their admission. A very liberal Constitution may be presented to-day, and in six months hence the new State may be sporting another, containing most odius provisions. There is, to be sure, a clause in the Constitution stating that every State shall be guaranteed a "Republican form of Government." Republicanism, as I understand its meaning as applied to our system of Government, refers only to general principles. Under these general principles there is latitude enough for any State to form all but a deep monarchy, or anarchy. I cannot conceive that the clause is sufficient to reach the numerous abuses that may arise in future State Governments.

All the territory hitherto annexed to the United States has been mostly inhabited by a set of people whom our Constitution outlaws from all share in our Government. Our future aggrandizement must bring into the Union tracts of country inhabited by a large class of individuals who will be entitled to all the immunities of citizenship. How easy it will be for the new citizens to render the residence among them of respectable citizens from other States impossible. And who will deny that the minds of the people of Mexico, to which country the hand of American destiny significantly points, is not sufficiently warped to make such a state of things probable. The vane turns that way in the election of a Delegate from New Mexico, who does not understand a word of the English language.

A clause in the Constitution of the United States compelling the submission of new Constitutions and amendments, of all States, to Congress for ratification, with the power of rejecting, would be a wise provision, insuring the future welfare of our glorious Union.

This would be a surrender of State power, but would essentially place it in the hands of the whole people, where, for the security of our Union, it should belong. The division of the Union into States has begotten many evils and many benefits; but many more of the former class must hereafter result from the course of events centering in separate States—large social or political bodies differing widely from each other in manners, customs, &c. At the commencement of the Confederation, each State was tenacious of the rights it wished to enjoy, and only yielded by degrees to the apparent necessities that called for more power in the General Government. Now the division into States has almost become a mere matter of form; yet there is not enough power reposed in the Constitution to keep any one of them, if it should so choose, from flying off in a tangent. It were better the States should give up this power than that we should hereafter see a mongrel Union—virtually a series of divisions, each with laws, like walls, shutting out the citizens of the others. By the clause proposed no State need lose the power contained in its old Constitution, except that which the clause provides for.

It may be contended that sectional feeling would be able to annoy growing States; but I do not think such would be the case. The Representatives, for the sake of the favorable reception of the Constitutional alterations of their own States, would endeavor to act justly and consistently.

The question of Slavery, as it is a vital topic, would be best where the Compromise measures have left it—with the States, and should be contained in a clause free from Congressional surveillance.

At the early framing of our Constitution, there was no cause to warrant the insertion of the proposed clause, or the patriots of '76 would have endeavored to provide this safeguard. Utah is the first case in point, and should be made the precedent for all future cases. I believe that the Mormons are more anxious to remain under the fostering care of our Government than to place themselves in opposition to its good will. But the very act of forming a State Government by them calls for new rules in relation to admitting new States into the Union—rules that should be made general.

In operating with the proposed clause, it would be the duty of Congress to see that a new Constitution did not express too little, as well as too much.

The census of Utah, according to the returns laid before the late Convention, shows a population of 76,335, with Deseret, Humboldt, and Carson counties unheard from. The complete returns will hardly exceed 77,000.

T. S. Williams, merchant, and G. P. Stiles, United States Judge, are endeavouring to organize an expedition of one hundred persons, each at his own expense of outfit, to explore the Colorado and its lower affluents. The avowed object of the expedition is to find and colonize a tract of country, either in the southern portion of the Territory or that part of New Mexico immediately adjoining, where cotton, tobacco, and other southern products can be raised. The hard times, I think, will prevent the organization of such an expedition, at least for the present. KADZ-NE-ATE.

What a Woman Can Do.

As a wife and mother, woman can make the fortune and happiness of her husband and children; and even if she did nothing else, surely this would be sufficient destiny. By her thrift, prudence and tact, she can secure to her partner and herself a competence in old age, no matter how small their beginning, or how adverse a fate occasionally be theirs. By her cheerfulness she can restore her husband's spirit, shaken by the anxieties of business. By her tender care she can often restore him to health, if disease has seized upon his overtasked powers. By her council and her love, she can win him from bad company, if temptation in an evil hour has led him astray. By her example, her prospects, and her sex's insight into character, she can mold her children, however diverse their dispositions, into good and noble men and women. And by leading in all things, a true and beautiful life, she can refine, elevate and spiritualize all who come within reach, so that with others of her sex emulating and assisting her, she can do more to regenerate the world than all the statesmen or reformers that ever legislated. She can do as much, alas! perhaps even more, to degrade man if she chooses it.

Who can estimate the evil that woman has power to do? As a wife she can ruin her husband by extravagance, folly, or want of affection. She can make a devil and an outcast of a man, who might otherwise have become a good member of society. She can bring bickerings, strife and perpetual discord into what has been a happy home. She can change, the innocent babes whom God has intrusted to her charge, into vile men and even viler women. She can lower the moral tone of society itself, and thus pollute legislation at the spring head. She can, in fine, become an instrument of evil, instead of an angel of good. Instead of making flowers of truth, purity, beauty, and spirituality, spring up in her footsteps, till the whole earth smiles with loveliness that is almost celestial, she can transform it to a black and blasted desert, covered with the scorn of all evil passions, and swept by the bitter blasts of everlasting death. This is what a woman can do for the wrong as well as for the right. Is her mission a little one? Has she no "worthy work," as has become the cry of late? Man may have a hardier task to perform, a rougher path to travel, but he has none loftier, or more influential, than woman's. [Woman's Advocate.

Prospects of the Year.

THIS country never saw so prosperous a time as the one in which we live. To whichever side one looks, one is amazed at the unbounded prosperity and enterprise and wealth and progress which meets the eye.

Last year the harvest was unusually abundant, and brought highly remunerative prices. Hence every acre of cultivatable land was turned to account last fall and spring. There never were, in the West, so many acres under cultivation as there now are, by several hundred thousand. The prospects of the crop are unblemished. Not a single mishap has occurred to interfere with the farmers' calculations. The cold which was felt so severely here was a blessing in the West. The spring has been alternate heat and rain, without a single hail storm to hurt anything, or any freshet, or any drought, or any frost. It is now almost conduced to a certainty that our wheat crop will far exceed the enormous wheat crop of last year, and that all kinds of grain will correspond.

Nor is the view presented by the foreign trade of the country out of keeping. Since the fall of 1853 the general foreign trade of the United States has been curtailed. This spring is the first since the fall of 1853 that importing has been co-extensive with the advance of the country. During the eleven months ending 1st of June instant, our imports at this port (which may be viewed as a type of the whole country) have amounted to $179,392,000, or $38,049,000 more than the same eleven months of last year. Against this, our domestic produce during the same period have amounted to $66,752,000, or $15,503,000 more than the eleven months of last year; while our export of specie (the receipts being nearly the same) is $13,718,000 less. Of cotton it is estimated that 2,755,000 bales have gone abroad during the eleven months, producing an increased value in the export of $27,495,400. Indeed, there are many persons who think that our exports will this year exceed our imports, for the first time since the famine year.

Is it any wonder that people will not take an interest in politics? If the nigger drivers at Cincinnati will only let the country alone, the human eye has never seen such prosperity as that now opening for us.—[N. Y. Herald, June 5.

Effects of Chloroform Upon the Blood.

AT a recent meeting of the Boston Society of Natural History, the following proceedings took place, showing the effects of chloroform upon the human system: Dr. C. T. Jackson exhibited a vial of blood, taken from the heart of a woman who had died from the effects of chloroform, inhaled at a dentist's office in this city. Dr. Jackson stated that the blood of this woman had lost the property of coagulation, was of a peculiar, dark, cranberry red color, and quite uniformly liquid. The blood globules, in a microscope examination made by Dr. Bacon, were found to be a little shrunken and distorted; the white globules were also deformed. At the autopsy, no morbid appearances, of any kind, were discovered in the brain or spinal chord, the latter of which was particularly examined in the portiens which give off the respiratory nerves. The lungs were of a peculiar dark red color, and much congested with blood; but still crepitating on pressure, or cut into. No organic disease was found in any of the viscera, and it was the opinion of all physicians present that the deceased came to her death from the effects of chloroform. Dr. Jackson's particular duty in this examination was to investigate the chemical condition of the blood. He had ascertained that it contained formic acid, which was readily separable by distillation of the blood by the the heat of a chloride of calcium bath. The formic acid separated, had its peculiar odor, and instantly decomposed nitrate of silver, reducing the silver to its metalic state, so that large flakes of the metal were obtained. The observation that chloroform was decomposed by the blood, with the production of formic acid, he believed to be new; and it must be regarded as an important physiological fact of no small practical moment. Three atoms of chlorine leave the formyle to combine with the blood, while three atoms of oxygen are abstracted from the blood, to unite with the formyle in the production of formic acid. Thus the blood is not only deprived of its oxygen, but is so altered as to be incapable of absorbing vital air, and the patient dies from asphyxia.

TRUTHFUL SENTIMENT.—It strikes us that there is a "world of wisdom" in the following quotation, brief, as it is:

"Every schoolboy knows that a kite would not fly unless it had a string tying it down. It is just so in life. The man who is tied down by a half-a-dozen blooming responsibilities, and their mother, will make a higher and stronger flight than the bachelor, who having nobody to keep him steady, is always floundering in the mud. If you want to ascend in the world, tie yourself to somebody."

THE Canadas extend in length from the coast of Labrador to the western extremity of Lake Superior, about sixteen hundred miles, with an average breadth of about two hundred and thirty miles, being nearly three times as large as Great Britain and Ireland, and containing an area of about three hundred and fifty thousand square miles.

Statistics of London.

LONDON covers at present a space of 122 square miles. It contains 327,391 houses, and 2,362,236 inhabitants, the annual increase of the population being upwards of 40,000. The length of the different streets is 1,750 miles. The paving of them cost £14,000,000, and the yearly cost of keeping the pavement in repair is £1,800,000. London has now 1,900 miles of gas pipes, and the same length of water pipes. The introduction of gas cost £3,000,000. There are 360,000 burners in the city, which consume every month 13,000,000 cubic feet of gas, valued at £500,000, or two millions and a half of dollars.

The Bankers of London have under their control a capital of £64,000,000, and the different Insurance Companies have a cash capital of £10,000,000 and £78,000,000 in negotiable paper.

The tax on houses amounts yearly to £12,500,000. The furniture of these houses is insured to the amount of £166,000,000. Twenty thousand persons are constantly employed in keeping the docks in repair.

London consumes yearly 277,000 oxen, 30,000 calves, 1,480,000 sheep, and 34,000 hogs, worth, all together, £8,000,000. London consumes every year 1,600,000 quarters of wheat, 65,000 pipes of wine, 2,000,000 gallons of brandy, 43,200,000 gallons of porter and ale, 19,215,000 gallons of water, and 3,000,000 tons of coal. It has 356 charity associations, which distribute every year £1,805,635 to the poor, which sum when increased by private charities will amount to $3,500,000. The city, from the showing of its official documents, has 143,064 persons who have no visible means of support. Among these are 4,000 vagabonds, who cost the city £50,000 a year to support them. There are besides in London 110 professional house-breakers, 107 street thieves, 40 robbers, 783 pickpockets, 3,675 ordinary thieves, 11 horse thieves, 140 dog thieves, 3 forgers, 28 counterfeiters, and 317 individuals who live directly by the profits of this illicit trade, 141 swindlers, 172 people who speculate on charity with false documents, 343 receivers of stolen goods, &c., &c.; in all, 162,000 criminals, who are known to the police, and who steal every year to the amount of £42,000.—[Ex.

A Homeless Nation.

THE present generation live on the sidewalk. The ladies pay twenty-five dollars for a bonnet to adorn Broadway, and they sweep the pavements with the costliest silks. Our sole aim now is to create a sensation at the hotel or boarding house table. Our flirtations are carried on in Broadway, en promenade, and our young and blushing brides commence their honeymoon in a steamer. We no longer live for ourselves and for the calm enjoyments of the family circle; we only exist to show our neighbors how very fine we can be. We live, in fact, not to please ourselves, but to astonish the Browns. The household gods have been packed up in an old trunk and put in the cellar, and we have only one genuine, sincere worship in the world, its temple the marble dry goods box in Broadway, and the high priest is Stewart. The result of this is even now beginning to be visible in the lax public virtue and private morality. That centre of all godliness, Home, is disappearing, and we shall not be astonished to hear it announced, that the next generation will be conducted by patent labor-saving machinery, and farmed out by contract at fashionable hotels.

This living in public, in addition to the laxity of personal morality it engenders, will also lead to extravagance, which will produce two enormous classes of society, the distinctions in which will be, simply master and serf—tyrant and slave! That noble Republican simplicity and independent equality which carried our infant Republic of three millions of freemen through the appalling struggle of '76, will be replaced by a mere Helotism, which will render our present force of thirty millions inferior in all respects.

We repeat, that the great defect in our system is the abolition of the sentiment home which will inevitably lead to extravagance, debt dependance and bankruptcy.—[N. Y. Daily News, June 6th.

Impulsive Insanity.

THE contrast often presented in patients affected with impulsive insanity, between the state of the intellectual faculties and that of the feelings, is described in the following manner by Dr. Ray of the Hospital for the insane, Providence, R. I., in his valuable work, The Medical Jurisprudence of Insanity:

"These patients can reason logically and acutely on any subject within their knowledge and extol the beauties of virtue, while their conduct is filled with acts of folly and at war with every principle of moral propriety. Their moral nature seems to have undergone an entire revolution. The sentiments of truth, honor honesty, benevolence and purity have given place to mendacity, dishonesty, obscenity and selfishness, and all sense of shame and self control have disappeared, while the intellect has lost none of its usual power to argue, convince, please and charm."

Insane impulses are not always irresistible, as is illustrated by Dr. Ray in the following account of a patient:

"We once asked a patient who was constantly saying or doing something to annoy or disturb others, while his intellect was apparently free from delusion or any other impairment as ever, whether, in committing his aggressive acts, he felt constrained by an irresistible impulse, contrary to his convictions of right, or was not aware at the moment that he was doing wrong? His reply should sink deep into the hearts of those who legislate for, or sit in judgment on, the insane. I neither acted from an irresistible impulse, nor upon the belief that I was doing right. I knew perfectly well I was doing wrong, and I might have refrained if I had pleased. I did thus and so because I loved to do it. It gave me indescribable pleasure to do wrong." Yet this man when well is kind and benevolent, and in his whole walk and conversation a model of propriety."

The National Debt of England.

THE following shows the manner in which the enormous national debt of England has been created:

Thirty-six millions went in the revolutionary war which brought William of Orange to the throne of England—twenty millions were borrowed, and that commenced the national debt.

Sixty-two millions in the "Spanish Succession," from May 4, 1702, to March, 1712. Thirty-two and a half millions borrowed.

Fifty-four millions in the "Spanish War," from October 28, 1733, to April 30, 1748. Twenty-nine millions borrowed.

One hundred and twelve millions in the "Seven Years' War," from June 9, 1756, to the peace of Paris, Feb. 10, 1768. Sixty millions borrowed.

One hundred and thirty-six millions in the "American War," from 1774 to the peace of Paris, Nov. 30, 1782. One hundred and four millions borrowed.

Four hundred and sixty-four millions in the "French Revolutionary War," from February, 1793, to the peace in Amiens, 1802. Two hundred millions borrowed.

And one thousand one hundred and fifty-nine millions in the "Bonaparte War," from April, 1803, to June 18, 1815. Three hundred and eighty millions borrowed, and seven hundred and seventy millions raised by taxes."

A SLIGHT MISTAKE.—The Louisville Journal has the following nonchalant paragraph: "We learn that a shooting affair came off at Lake Providence about a week ago. A man named Jones shot a man named Patterson, mistaking him for one Pennington. Patterson, after being shot twice, one of the balls lodging in his breast, drew a pistol and was about shooting Jones, when the latter begged his pardon, saying he had mistaken his man. Patterson generously accepted the apology. His wounds are not mortal.

A CANNON BALL, striking the oaken ribs of a man-of-war, pierces straight through them, scattering destruction on all sides, until its force is expended; but if it impinge upon the wave, it swerves aside, and is conquered by their unresisting softness, and finally subsides without injury. So the first burst of passion, incensed and rendered more dangerous by a stubborn opposition, will generally yield and fall harmless if it is met by softness and submission.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1856.

Mr. Buchanan.

THE nomination of this distinguished gentleman by the late Cincinnati Democratic Convention, has been hailed with great demonstration of rejoicings by his partizans, throughout the Union. The following short sketch of his life from the New York Mercury may not be uninteresting:—

"BUCHANAN, HON. JAMES, statesman and late Secretary of State of the United States, was born on the 13th of April, 1791, in the county of Franklin, state of Pensylvania. After having passed through a regular classical and academical course of instruction, he studied and adopted the law as a profession. Having inherited a predilection for politics he was nominated, in 1814, for the House of Representatives of the Legislature of his native state, and was elected. He was re-elected in the year 1815. After having served two sessions, he declined another re-election. In 1820 he was elected to Congress, and took his seat in that body in December, 1821. He remained a member of the House till March 4, 1831. Immediately after his fifth election, he declined further service, and retired into private life. In May, 1831, he was offered the mission to Russia by General Jackson, and accepted the proffered honor. In the year 1834, immediately after his return from Russia, Mr. Buchanan was elected to the Senate of the United States, to fill an unexpired term, rendered vacant by the resignatiyn of Mr. Wilkins. In December, 1836, he was elected for a full term; and, in 1843, was re-elected. In March, 1845, he was appointed Secretary of State by President Polk, which office he held till the close of the administration of that gentleman. Mr. Buchanan, as a politician, ranks with the democratic party, by whom he is highly respected. He has probably had less censure cast at him than is the usual lot of the prominent politician; and is honored by all parties in private and domestic circles."

Mr. BUCHANAN has been a public man for forty years past. Previous to Andrew Jackson's Presidency, he is spoken of as being a Federalist; but with that distinguished statesman, and since that time, he has been on the Democratic side.

In looking carefully over the opinions of the press in regard to Mr. Buchanan, we find that friend or foe, in politics, all speak of him as an honorable, highminded, courteous gentleman. When we speak politically, however, he has many enemies, and so will any man, of any party; aspiring to the highest office in the land; the more elevated the position, the more will he be made a target to shoot at. It is a pity that this should be true; but so it is. This not only arises from an honest difference of opinions, strong party prejudices, sectional feeling and strife, which perhaps nowhere run higher than in the United States; but also from a more sordid, debasing, and less honorable sentiment; the division of the public patrimony, amounting to the tune of about one hundred millions—a temptation that patriotism is not always proof against. That many of those partizans do honestly differ, and are very conscientious in their course there can, in our opinion, be no manner of doubt, particularly on the all-absorbing and exciting question of slavery. This freedom of opinion we conceive all parties possess a perfect right to hold and maintain; and also to gain as many converts to their political creed as they possible can, by the use of all fair and honorable means; but we deprecate this wanton disregard of character, and repudiate the wholesale slander, low vituperation and abuse, and the multefarious acts of chicanery and deception that are generally made use of, by unprincipled and interested demogogues. We are, therefore, glad to see that Mr. Buchanan has thus far escaped all this ribald abuse; and we hope, for the honor of our nation, that other candidates will be treated as courteously; for we very much dislike to see such remarks as we were obliged to read in a French journal during a former Presidential contest. The editor of which wondered "why they could not find an honest man for President; for, according to the American papers, the two candidates for the Presidency were the biggest scamps in creation."

That Mr. Buchanan's political antecedents will be critically scrutenized both by friend and foe, there can be no doubt; and this is all right; a man to stand at the head of so great a nation ought to be known and understood, and bear the test of the strictest scrutiny. The only three things that he seems to be accused of, at present, by his political opponents, is what is termed his fillibustering proclevities, in associating with Mr. Pierre Soulé in the attempted purchase of Cuba, in this, of course, he was acting under advisement, the charge, however, is, that of adhering too strongly to the Monroe doctrine. Get it peaceably if you can; but America for Americans, at any rate. He is charged, too, of sustaining the Missouri Compromise, and then of accepting office under the full, frank, and universally acknowledged acceptance by the convention of the Kansas Nebraska act. This we must leave Mr. Buchanan to explain. The last is that he is a Democrat, and of course believes democratic doctrine. We shall not comment on the two first. The latter is a sin easily excused among Democrats, and if they have the majority, or are better wire-workers than the other party, of course he will be elected. It seems to us that there will require a fusion, a combination of two or more of the discordant opposing political elements, to make a sufficient force to give him the-go-by. In the Convention, at least, there was perfect unanimity. President Pierce and Senators Douglas and Cass all seem satisfied, and endorse the nomination. The two former, no doubt, are very much gratified at the endorsement of the Kansas-Nebraska act. The Hards and Softs of New York than whom perhaps none have been more bitter enemies, have, by some kind of legerdemain, at the Convention, been made to coalesce; they are now united, and the whole of the Democratic party as a unit, proclaim by the waving of banners, the roaring of cannon, by assemblages, speeches and other demonstrations, that they, at least are pleased with their choice.

Utah.

THE following we clip from the Ohio Columbian:

That "Squatter Sovereignty" paves the way for the admission of Utah into the Union, with its horrible Polygamic institution, is conceded, but it seemed incredible that the Administration party should not only leave the right to hold slaves to the people of the incoming State, but also the right to the social institution of polygamy, which even the better class of the barbarous Turk now begins to regard with a loathing. But as wonders will not cease, so we can hardly express our surprise when it becomes evident that the Democracy will make the admission of Utah with or without Slavery and Polygamy one of its issues when the proper season comes for broaching the subject. The Cleveland Plain Dealer—which talks "by the card" so far as this Administration is concerned—has had several items of late, hinting towards the right of the Mormon State, to its beastly social organism. In its Wednesday's issue, it says:

"The Mormons have held their Convention, formed a Constitution, and soon will be at the door of Congress for admission. They have the requisite population, and their organic law is Republican in form, which is all that is required by the Federal Constitution.

Polygamy is claimed by them to be a part of their religion, being copied from Patriarchs, and about which Congress has nothing to say. But if Congress has power to inquire into the domestic relations of master and servant, why not man and wife, guardian and ward, &c.?"

What does this mean if it does not argue the right to Polygamy under the Federal Constitution? The public mind is not yet prepared to have the Democratic press openly espouse the cause of polygamy, but no such parsagraphs as the above can leave any doubt as to the issue that will be made when the question of the admission of Utah is made. What a tri-color for freemen, for Americans, for religion, for progress, to contemplate—

DEMOCRACY—SLAVERY—POLYGAMY!

What a pity it is that there should be the least vestige of freedom left in the country! What a lamentable affair that our forefathers should have entertained such erroneous notions as to suppose that all men are born free and equal and have the "right of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," together with the right to "worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience?" Why could we not have had a national religion, a test act, a Pope, or some inquisitorial tribune, to decide about morality and religious matters? We doubt not we should have had something of the kind if the editors of the Columbian had had anything to do in the matter. But can't we now introduce something of the kind? Alter and amend the Constitution, pass a post facto law, declare for a national religion, introduce friars and monks, ordain confessionals, set up a censorship for the press, and return to the good old times. The rights of man are of course all a farce—Republicanism an exploded theory—and "DEMOCRACY" as lamentable an evil with the Columbian as Slavery and Polygamy. It is unquestionably a shame for the Cleveland Plain Dealer to write such articles as the above; it ought not to deal so plainly as to publish plain constitutional matter-of-fact principles. It ought to possess more of the properties of the chameleon and change colors to suit circumstances; blow hot and cold; twist, turn, wiggle and whine; to be in favor of freedom and opposed to it; talk of liberty to the black and enslave the white; quote and uphold the Constitution of the United States when convenient and discard it when inconvenient; repudiate oligarchy in name and carry it out in practice; claim the right to speak, write, think and act, but deprive all others of this privilege. We leave the matter of Democracy, that the Columbian laments so much over, in the hands of the Plain Dealer and democrats, where we think it is safe. We leave the South to defend its own institutions; but as it regards the "rights of the Mormon State to its "beastly social organism," we would simply state that the Mormons ask no more than their rights, and we think there is justice enough in the land to accord them. We do not like to use bad names: but in reply to the attack on our social organism, we would remark that whenever Utah becomes as "beastly" in its organizations and institutions as those that surround the Columbian and deluge the United States, we pray that the earth may open and swallow her up.

Kansas.

ABOUT three thousand persons congregated in the Broadway Tabernacle on Monday evening "to consider the recent alarming events at Kansas." The call for the meeting announced that "Gov. Reeder and other distinguished speakers" would address the meeting. Mr. Reeder not appearing as expected, created some little confusion. During the evening it was announced that a telegraphic despatch has been received from the Governor, stating his inability to be present. Several gentlemen spoke on the present struggle for liberty in Kansas. The meeting, or rather a portion of the audience, was addressed by Mrs. Buffom recently from Kansas. Mrs. B. is a shooting star—she wanted to shoot Sheriff Jones, but, her husband regrets, "her pistol snapped." Resolutions were adopted in favor of Kansas, and a collection of $2000 taken.

The following are the latest dispatches about the Eden of the Virginia Telescope:

CHICAGO, June 9, 1856.

The latest Kansas dates confirm the intelligence of a fresh outbreak of hostilities. Capt. Pattie's Company having been overpowered by a force of Free State men, Gen. Whitfield left Westport on the night of the 2d at the head of 100 men in pursuit. They were supposed to be about forty miles from Westport on the Santa Fe road. Col. Sumner also left for the scene of disturbance with eight companies of dragoons.

ST. LOUIS, June 9.

The account taken from an extra of the Kansas City Enterprise, (Pro-Slavery,) and telegraphed here, that nine Abolitionists and thirteen Pro-Slavery men were killed in an encounter between a band of 150 Abolitionists and Capt. Pattie's Company, proves to be an exaggeration. Capt. Pattie and McGee, reported dead, are alive, and but two or three persons were killed in all. Capt. Pattie's Company were captured, the Free State party being greatly superior in numbers. Gen. Whitfield, with one hundred men, had gone to their rescue.

Justice in Philadelphia.

ON Monday a girl attempted to shoot a man who had wronged her. She was arrested and sent to prison by Alderman Ogle in default of bail, which was fixed by him at TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS!

On Tuesday a man attempted to shoot another, without provocation. The ball whistled past the heads of several persons, endangering their lives, and he was held to bail in the sum of six hundred dollars.

The Woman's Advocate Philadelphia, June 7th, publishes the above. Unacquainted with the circumstances associated with the two facts referred to, we can't speak about the justice of Philadelphia judgments. We have, however, considerable confidence in the discreet and prudent selections of the fair conductor of the Advocate, and suppose if all were told, it is quite likely greater leniency has been shown to the burst of masculine passion than to the simpler display from the fair one, to warrant the contrast of bail. A gentleman to shoot at another is no uncommon thing, in the spirit of the age—an affair of honor: six hundred dollars is therefore all that can be asked as bail, and it mattereth little if forfeited or honored. Not long since $500 was only required for bail from a gentleman who shot dead a waiter in a muss about his breakfast. From a young girl, however, who has no position in society, but whose heart burns with indignation against him who has robbed her of virtue, embittered her cup of life with the gall of gall, made existence to her dreary, dark, and burthensome, withered her every hope of joy, destroyed her peace of mind, her confidence in humanity, in short, turned the world and its hopes and joys to a pandemonium of black despair, brought ruin and desolation to her bosom, poignant grief and bitterness to the bosoms of father, mother, sisters, brothers, and feeling thus ruined and deserted by him, reproached, disowned and cursed by them; loathing herself, she seeks revenge, and ten thousand dollars bail is required. A straw shows the current—to encourage revenge for seduction would endanger too many lives.

Had two such cases transpired in Utah, the "Philadelphia Bulletin" and the "North American and the United States Gazette" would have bellowed lustily about the "God forsaken community." Let the editors of these journals get the ponderous ebony beams out of their own eyes and they will be better able to see the mote in the eyes of their far-off acquaintance—Utah. When they have done so, and brushed up their talents a little, they'll find plenty of mud to clear from their own doors.

There can be no greater evidence of the apostacy of any people from Christianity, than their impunity to punish the crime of seduction. Such pious editors, like those referred to above, who cry to Utah: stand far off, we are holier than thou, boast of living in the glorious effulgence of gospel light, compared with which Judaism is barbarism—yet they tolerate crime at their very doors, the commission of which had to be atoned for by Israel in blood. Christ came not to destroy that law; and if he said to a certain woman "go and sin no more," it was because Judah was then an apostate, himself no acknowledged Judge in Israel, and among her accusers none righteous enough to cast at her the first stone. To say Christianity is more indulgent to such a crime is a libel. Had the pure principles of the son of Mary been adhered to by christians as they boast, the very thought, without the commission of the deed, would have been a sin to be repented of before God, but alas!

Let the Mormons be what they may, and though too much of the old leaven, modern christianity, may adhere to them, still this much can be said, such transgression in Utah cannot be atoned for by dollars. Law there would have required him, and not her, to lay down the ten thousand dollars bail, and quite as likely as not the community would have regretted she missed her aim. In spite of all the libellous attacks of the Bulletin and such scribblers, the Mormons have adopted laws for the punishment of crime, that their calumniators would shake and tremble to read.

Begging the Question.

IN another column will be found a communication to the New York Daily Times from its special correspondent in Utah. We are not a little amused at a declaration made by this said correspondent in relation to the morals of the Gentiles. After narrating, we believe faithfully, some pithy remarks of Governor Young, Counsellor Grant, Mr. Woolley and others, in relation to the corruption of the gentiles, and their attempts at seduction, wherein their conduct was severely reprehended. Judge Kinney and Indian Agent, Mr. Hurt, got their feathers up a little at the wholesale charges made against the Gentiles, and wished to know if they were considered as honorable exceptions. This our correspondent thinks is very proper, that because the Gentiles generally are bad that all ought not to be put in the same catalogue. Very true; "honor to whom honor is due"—where there are any good traits always acknowledge them. We ought to do right by the devil. What we are amused at however is, the plain matter of fact statement that "our correspondent" makes when he says:

"I admit that the greater portion of the non-Mormon believing part of the inhabitants of this city show a very low scale of morals; yet there are some who are as pure as any Mormons can pretend to be."

Put the above along side of some of the mild ephithets bestowed upon the Mormons by some of our pious, political and religious cotemporaries, such as, "The infamous, polluted Mormons;" "Licentiousness, run riot;" "That den of infamy;" "That moral ulcer on our body politic," &c., &c., &c. Such writers, without experience, show that they are "licentious" in the use of their pen; that they unblushingly and "infamously" propagate slander and that their own tongue is "ulcerated." "Our correspondent" on the spot makes no such assertion; he admits that his Gentile brethren are generally bad; but there are some as good as the Mormons." Now we believe the above, it is a fair statement of the case. We know that the Mormon morals are far superior to those of any Gentiles as a community that we have ever seen, but this is a general view. To condemn all Gentiles and sustain all Mormons would be equally wrong.

In regard to the writers remarks concerning Federal and State Rights we have nothing to say. The Mormons can stand any law that others can.

The Mormon Difficulty.

THE Mormons of Utah have formed a State Constitution, republican in character. It is silent both as regards slavery and polygamy. The Mormons will ask admission with this constitution, into the Union, and when admitted, they may make such modifications of their Constitution as shall be deemed necessary to bring it into more perfect conformity with their tastes and their views of social life. But will Congress admit Utah as a State, while Mormon practices prevail within it? Will Congress decide that a heterogeneous population gathered together within a few years by a delusion, from all parts of the earth, is such a population as it can wisely and safely clothe with the privileges of State independence and of political equality in the Government of the Union? That is the question which Congress will soon have to decide; and it is a question of deep concern to the future moral and social interests of the Republic.—[N. N. Sun, June 6.

The Sun, of course, should have its word about Utah. He has a right to ask such questions. He might, however, have confined himself to these. If we were to ask him why he talked about "a heterogeneous population gathered together within a few years by a delusion," he would feel silly, look silly, and talk silly, like the boy who, challenged for throwing a stone at the passing dog, said: he did it because he saw others do it. For certain, the Sun knows no more about the principles of Mormonism than he knows about the principles of Moses and Jesus Christ.

We scarcely know how to interpret the Sun's "question of deep concern." If he is in the vale of deep repentance, sorrowing for the moral and social pollutions of the Republic, and looking forward to Deseret as the day star of hope, we would like to encourage his devotional feeling a little, leaven leavenath the whole lump. We won't, however, say too much about the great advantages he may yet reap from a closer acquaintance with the Mormons, lest he should break his neck in the race to obtain them—and then what a loss the country would sustain!

News from Utah.

CONDITION OF THE PLAINS—APPROACH OF THE MORMON CONSTITUTION.

We are pleased to announce the arrival, from Utah, of Col. A. W. Babbit and Judge W. I. Appleby. They left Utah on the 22d of April, and made the trip from the Territory in twenty-six traveling days, having been detained six days on account of snow storms at Devil's Gate, Greasewood and Horseshoe creeks. One snow storm continued with great violence for seventy hours. The snow was from four to eight inches on the level, and from four to six feet in the banks. They met with no other troubles on the route, the Indians being friendly disposed. They stopped one day at Camp Davis, on the Platte Bridge, and report everything as being peaceable and quiet at that point.

Chief Justice Kinney and family, the United States Marshall Haywood, with whom George A. Smith, bearer of the Constitution of the State of Utah, are en route for the States, and will probably be here in five or six days. Also a church train who are intending to return to the valley with machinery for a steamboat, to be used on the Great Salt Lake.

The Indians everywhere are disposed to be friendly, and are preparing for treaties of peace at Salt Lake, Laramie, and at other points. Emigrants will run no risk this year from Indian depredations on their route to the Valley and to the Pacific coast.

Everything in the valley wears a prosperous appearance, and the city is growing with magic rapidity. A large emigration to the valley is anticipated during the present season, and extensive preparations have been made for its reception. Though the winter has been one of unprecedented severity, and the supplies have been to some extent cut off, still emigrants to Salt Lake will find a welcome and something to eat. Vegetables of all kinds were forward, and the prospects for a large crop were most flattering. Business of all kinds was brisk.

Colonel Babbit and Judge Appleby—the one Secretary and the other Clerk of the Supreme Court since the organization of the Territory—arrived, en route for Washington, upon official business.—[Omaha City Nebraskian, May 28.

Letter from S. A. Woolley.

FLORENCE WINTER QUARTERS,
N. T., May 16, 1856.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: As I have by your sanction left my field of labor to return to the home of the Saints, the fat valley of Ephraim, the home of my beloved family, and am thus far on my journey thitherward, I feel it a duty that I owe you and the Saints to make a short statement of matters as they have transpired with me. I was, as you are aware, appointed on the 28th of August, 1852, on a mission to Hindostan to preach the gospel, accordingly, in company with about 30 Elders, I left the Valley on the 19th of Oct. of the same year. We were about 40 days crossing the plains to San Barnardino, where we stopped a short time, then proceeded to San Pedro, and took a ship for San Francisco. Here we remained about three weeks until the Lord opened the way for us to get further.

We set sail on the 29th of Jan. 1855, on board the ship Monsoon, Z. Winsor, master, and after a pleasant passage of 86 days, we landed in Calcutta on the 26th (25th by our time) of April.

We were in all 13 Elders, 9 for Hindostan, and 4 for Siam. Two of the brethern had the small-pox while crossing the sea, which left but few marks. I would here remark that our Captain was a gentleman, and treated us with every kindness. After our arrival he assisted me to money to get some clothes suitable for the climate, and to take me to my field of labor. While in India, which was 18 months and four days, I travelled one thousand miles into the interior of the country, preaching in all the principal stations (except where prohibited by military authority) between Calcutta and the Himmalaya Mountains, but did not baptize any who lived over 70 miles above Calcutta.

Men there are fearful of being thrown out of employment if their faith is contrary to established usages. Nearly every person is employed directly or indirectly, by government, so that they are entirely dependent. In consequence we did not apparently accomplish much, if any thing in the upper country. We hope, however, "it will be like the bread cast upon the waters," &c. After I returned from the upper country I remained at Calcutta, and Chinsurah, about six months, where I preached, and baptized a few. On the first day of Nov. 1854, I set sail from Calcutta for Boston, on board the ship John Gilpin, Ed. P. Ring of Gloucester, Mass., master, and after a pleasant passage (except the last two weeks which was severely cold) of 99 days we landed in Boston on the 13th of Feb. 1855.

Let me here remark that Captain Ring paid my passage in the cabin, which was $150, treated me with every kindness I could expect, for which I pray God to bless him in time and also in eternity.

From Boston, I proceeded to West Chester, Pa., thence to Wilmington and Centreville, Del. In the latter place I found a home at the house of Titus Mousley, and commenced to blow the gospel trump again. I continued preaching, and baptizing in Del. and Pa. until April, when I reported myself at Conference at which time I was appointed by yourself, and the conference to preach, rest, go home, or do as I pleased for the time being. I continued my labors in Del. and Pa. preaching, baptized a few, and assisted in the foreign emigration, until sometime in the forepart of May, when I was appointed (by yourself) to take charge of, and preside over, the Saints in Del. assist in the emigration, by securing places for employment, &c., which I did until the 6th of April 1856, I was then relived or permitted to return home with your sanction and proceeded West. During my stay I organized four branches, baptized quite a number, and left the Saints all in good spirits, and strong in the faith of all the principles of the gospel, with a determination to gather out as soon as circumstances permit. Six have emigrated this spring from the Centreville branch.

Allow me here to tender my thanks to the Delaware Saints for their kindness to me, particularly to Father and Mother Mousley, and excellent family, with whom I made my home for the last year, also to Brother and Sister Crossgroves, and to all the good Saints for their zeal in the cause of Christ, and their strict obedience to the council of the servants of God. May the God of Israel bless them forever and keep them faithful unto the end that they may ever be represented in the same light by their President, and finally be saved in the Kingdom of our God. Amen.

I would also remark that Father Mousley acted as a father to the poor Saints, which I took down into his neighborhood by sustaining them until they got into business, to a considerable amount, and I pray God to reward him therefor.

During the year I travelled I preached more or less in Pennsylvania, spent two months visiting and preaching in Ohio, where I baptized one who is now on his way for the Valley.

Permit me now to bear my testimony to the truth of the work in which we are engaged, that I know it to be the work of God, and that Joseph Smith was and is a Prophet of the Most High, that Brigham Young is his successor and a Prophet, that the Church is now organized, with Apostles and Prophets at the head as our Saviour and his Apostles said it should be, (see 1st. Cor. 11 28, Ep. 2 and 4 chapter) and that all the gifts and blessing are now enjoyed as anciently, that the Latter Day Saints are the people of God. This is in short my testimony to all, both Saints and sinners, in the name of Jesus Christ my master. Amen. The power of God was made manifest in many instances under my admistration, in healing the sick, both in India and also in this country, for which I feel to thank God, and say all the honor, and glory be unto the Father, Son and Holy Spirit both now and forever more. Amen.

I would say to all the Saints, over whom I have had the honor, and pleasure to preside for the past year, you have my best feeling, blessing, and confidence, and ever will have, if you continue in the truth, and obey the councils of God through his servants, and I pray God to bless you, and enable you to do his will, that you may prove faithful unto the end, and I say by the authority of the Holy Priesthood and in the name of Jesus Christ, be ye blest even so. Amen. I am you Bro. in the Covenant of peace, liberty, and Union, brought about through the Gospel of Jesus Christ, restored to Joseph Smith by an angel in this the 19th century.

Your Bro. affectionately in Christ,

S. A. WOOLLEY.

FOR THE MORMON.

Reminiscences of Classical Ages.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

SOCRATES endeavored to correct error, and especially to overthrow the soi distant Sophists (sophos is derived from the Greek, signifying wise, intelligent,) a society of subtle, cavilling, falaceous disputes, whom pride and vanity caused to exhibit their pretended mental superiorty on every thing. With a fine, flowery language, imposing declamation, casuistry, they introduced false and sub rosa impure principles, and the multitude not being capacitated to see their erroneous logic, were deco yed and believed. Any system in the course of time attempting to refute principles, however correct, by fallaceous arguments, was called sophistry; hence we find that term used whenever any discussion is not confined to the proper channel of correct reasoning. Socrates, by deriding and exposing the sophists, and showing the folly of their arguing, made them his mortal enemies. They accused him with denying the Gods of the Government, and believing in the adoration of but one One supreme Being, in consequence of which he was sentenced to drink the cup of hemlock, (hemlock, a narcotic poisonous herb, the leaves of which are indented, and resembles physiologically much the common celery, and grows in both hemispheres.) On the night previous to his execution, he conversed with some of his hearers, on the immortality of the soul, and on the sentiments which anticipation of another life should inspire, proving thus, that every one ought to be guided by true principles. He died about four hundred years before the birth of our Saviour. Socrates was a very kind, good tempered man, and although his wife Xantippe, a woman of proverbial notoriety, by her continual scolding tried to the very utmost to provoke his feelings, he always showed his equanimity by controling himself. One day on coming home from a party at rather an unusual hour, his amiable partner was so excited, that she gave vent to her angry feelings by pouring a bucket of water upon him, abusing him at the same time with her tongue most shamefully. The great philosopher remained perfectly composed, merely remarking to his astonished friends, who witnessed the interesting ebullition of conjugal affection, "after rain comes sunshine." Truly a fair and praiseworthy example of self-government. Plato, a friend and cotemporary of Socrates, a man of the greatest Genius and Talent, whose name is engraved on the scroll of immortality, has confessed lasting benefits both upon the literary world and society at large. He who has pondered over the profound and sublime writings of that philosopher, cannot help being struck with the intellectual opulence, and the intrinsic superiority that bear no comparison with the literary striplings of mental insignificance, and the overpowered reader will exclaim in the language of the great Plato, "It must be so—Plato, thou reasonest well!" The profundity of thought, the variety of subject, the elegant and beautiful style, the pure and noble principles he advanced, secure that eminent man an everlasting triumph in the literary world. Well may his name be associated with such illustrious personages, as Demosthenes, whose thundering orations arouse man from mental lassitude and animate him to strike the path leading to Parnassus; with Homer, the lofty strains of whose immortal lyre are conveyed through the vista of centuries, and make the classical scholar thrill with joy and admration, whole studying those monuments of mental excellence of by gone times; with Herodotus the historiae pater (the father of history,) who in his faithful and interesting rechas portrayed with sublime simplicity, the mythological times of classical soil, where rich fancy assisted by memory conjured up those beautiful fables so interesting and fascinating to every intelligent reader. Xenophon, well known to every one, that passed through the usual routine of an academical education, is considered one of the best generals, tacticians and writers; his works contain the Anabasis (that is to say, an inland-campaign,) and the Cyropædia, the biography of Cyrus. His graphic and correct accounts betray the man of genius and talent; the scenes represented to us, are life-like and make us believe we are in the midst of camps, we hear the din of war in which the mightiest of those times were struggling for worldly splendor and renown; in beautifully glowing colors, leaving a lasting and salutary impression on the youthful mind. Sophocles, the Greek tragedian, the elegant histrionic writer of imperishable memory, composed more than eighty tragedies, the greatest number of which have been lost by political and social revolutions, that proved often pernicious to literary treasons. His works are written in the doric dialect, and are a pattern of poetry and style. The sublime and noble delineations of characters, the skilfully arranged intrigues, and the beautiful language claim the praise and admiration of a philologist, and man of literary taste, hence the great author is generally read and studied in good academies, and his tragedies are sometimes performed with all the arrangements of classical theatres on modern stages before a select and intelligent assembly. One of his best works is the Antigone. Euripides, is not inferior to to Sophocles, as a tragedian, though he is not so well known as the latter. There is a peculiarly interesting touch of grandeur in all his literary productions; the reader while engaged in the perusal of those imperishable lines is sometimes as it were, overawed by the bold, lofty train of ideas and the ever-varying scenes, that show the inexhaustable mental treasures of that great man.

Æsop, whose immortal works are translated by Erasmus, the great scholar of Rotterdam, a man of rare talent in portraying human weakness, and pointing out and critisising sharply the deficiencies of social life, has gained the laurels of everlasting fame by his ingenious, fables abounding in Attic salt, and creating a hearty laugh in the reader, while pondering over those comical fictions, that contain so many wholesome lessons. He was a slave, like Publius Cyrus, Terence, Epictetus, the celebrated Stoic. Those authors, although bondsmen, possessed of a free, independent mind, seeking delight in cultivating the Muses, and striking the lyre of immortality. Their giant intellects burst the shackls of bondage, till they became eventually known as stars of first magnitude in the literary world. Terence's works are comedies, of a language and metre peculiar to him, contain correct and contain beautiful delineations of human feelings and passions. Epictetus was a singular man, although the Emperor Adrian was a real Maecenas to him, and proved a sincere friend to the former bondsman; he was destitute even of the common comforts of life, living in a house without a door—with no furniture but a table—a small beadstead, and a wretched coverlet. It is a well-known fact, that the greater the talent or genius of a man, the more he is eccentric, for the corroberation of which I could quote many illustrious names, if the limited space of these columns would allow it, so in relation to Epictetus, he was an eccentric in the extreme, and nearly a Cynic. Ancient and modern philologists designate man of slovenly habits, following the life of Diogenes, who used to live in a tup, despising the comforts and social amenities of life, a Cynic, a word derived from the Greek, signifying doggish.

Publius Virgilius Maro, one of the most amiable and talented poets of the Roman era, was ushered into this sublunary existence in Mantua, at present a large, well fortified town in the Lombardic Venitian Kingdom of the Austrian Empire, sixty-nine years previous to the birth of Christ, in the year of Rome 684, on the 15th October, which memorable day the Latin Poets, and the people at large, on account of the high esteem for his great capacities and many virtues, observed in commemoration of his birth. Orations were pronounced, the Muses invoked, poems were composed for the purpose solemnizing the anniversary of Virgil. Licinius Crassus and Pompey the Great, were in their first consulship, when the poet's father Maro, quite a Plebian or common man, and his mother Maja, a near relation to Quintilius Varus, was the descendant of a very illustrious family, had taken their abode in Mantua, where Virgil was born. At the age of seven yerrs he went to Cremona, where he resided up to his seventeenth year, when he, according to the custom of the Romans, put on the Togavirilis, which was a short cloak similar to the Spanish mantle or mantilla, that owes its existence to that classic dress. Every young man, as soon as he had reached his virility, put on, consonantly the the fashion and customs of those times, the Toga virilis, whereupon he was considered fit for the society of man, and for taking an active part in the important scenes of that age, in fact his career had commenced from that very day. From Cremonia, Virgil moved to Naples, the present capital of the kingdom of the same name, on the shores of the Mediterranean, a short distance from the renowned volcanoes, Vesuvius and Sulfatara, where he applied himself to a close and persevering study of the Greek and Roman languages, Physic and Mathematics, in which he improved rapidly. After a residence of a few years at Naples, he moved to Rome, where his brilliant talents soon attracted the notice of the leading men at court, who expressed their high esteem for him, by introducing him to Augustus. It appears however, that either the bustle, confusion, and the great variety of pleasures of a grand, gay, libertine court were disagreeable to his feelings as a man of studious, reserved habits, or that the miasmatic air of Rome was injurious to his frail system, as he returned to Naples, where he commenced writing his Bucolics (derived from the Greek Bucoloi, shepherds) or pastoral songs for the purpose of celebrating the encomiums of Pollio, Varius and Gallus, who recommended him highly to Maecenas, whose friendship and influence exempted him from having his lands divided as a reward to the veteran soldiers for their loyalty and bravery at the great battle of Philippi. In order to show that the idea of some people, who believe that poets and other talented writers can dash off an able composition, as it were, in the hurry of a few moments, is an erroneous one, I merely mention that Virgil spent three years in writing his Eclogues, a book of about 90 pages of small octavo size, and so in relatiton to other literary magnates. The name Ecloge is used for pastorial or rural songs, and is generally a short poem between Idyl. The greatest pastoral poet, Theocritus, the Greek, who flourished 282 years before the birth of Christ. His Idyls have a beautiful sweetness and simplicity in style and ideas.

At the sixteenth ballot, Mr. Douglas being unwilling to risk the chance of damaging the cause of Democracy by prolonging the struggle, requested his friends to withdraw his name. Mr. Buchanan, accordingly, received, on the seventeenth ballot, the full vote of the Convention.

Mr. J. C. Breckenridge, of Kentucky, was afterwards nominated for the office of Vice President.

THE MORMON.

Completion and Removal of the Monster Gun.

The monster wrought-iron gun, which has occupied so much time and trouble in forging at the Mersey Steel and Iron Works, Liverpool, is now completed, and removed to the place where its capabilities are to be tested. It was "turned out of hand" in the early part of last week, and being carefully finished and polished, it forms a handsome piece of ordnance. It was then mounted on a massive oak carriage, similar to the carriage of a ship's gun, which had been made specially for it. The carriage is at present without wheels, and weighs from three to four tons. The gun was weighed by itself on Thursday, and found to be 21 tons, 17 cwt., 1 qr., and 17 lb. The gun is sixteen feet three inches in extreme length, forty-four inches in extreme diameter at the breech, and 26 inches diameter at the muzzle. On its becoming known that the gun was finished, upwards of 400 persons visited the works on Thursday for the purpose of seeing it. The experiments will probably take place on Tuesday morning. The experiments will, of course, be conducted under the superintendence of the ordnance authorities. It is not known that any other projectile than an ordinary spherical ball will be used in the present experiments. A charge of about 26 lb. of powder will probably be fired off first, by way of proof that the gun is capable of resisting the explosive pressure of a discharge. As the gun is calculated to throw a ball of three hundred lb. a distance of five miles, the regular charge, according to the ordinary proportions of one-third the weight of the projecticle, should be 100 lb. of powder. It is well known that some time ago Messrs. Horsfall announced their intention of presenting this gun to the Government—a present worth upwards of £3000 as it at present stands—but there was one condition attached to the original announcement of the gift, which was that it should be "used against the enemy." How far that condition will require to remain in abeyance it is rather difficult to calculate under the present peaceful aspect of affairs.—[Liverpool Albion.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

We learn from the Philadelphia papers that Dr. Kane has declined Lady Franklin's renewed offer to take the command of an expedition about to be sent out by her, with the assistance of the British Government, to find, if possible, the remains of Sir John Franklin and the relics of his ship. Every inducement has been proposed to secure the services of this distinguished voyager, but present and future labors connected with previous engagements render it impossible for him to be ready in season to sail. The offer has been highly flattering and complimentary to the Doctor.

The joint committee of the Aldermen and Councilmen of this city have had some slight misunderstanding about choice of chairman during the ceremonies attending the reception of the Hon. Millard Fillmore in New York. To Alderman Briggs that honor has been accorded, and arrangements have been completed. Mr. Fillmore is expected about the 21st inst.

Several papers have lately published that Mr. Herbert, who shot Thomas Keaton, the waiter at Willard's Hotel, Washington, had given to the widow a handsome dwelling and money to educate her children, but it is stated that there is no foundation for the report. The brother of the deceased says his family have not received a cent from Mr. Herbert, or even learned that he had expressed a word of regret at the ruin he had achieved. The guests at the hotel have generously contributed $500 to the assistance of the widow and orphans.

Since the 1st of May no less than 2470 persons have crossed the ocean in steamers from New York and Boston, as appears from the following list:

On Tuesday evening an immense assemblage of Democrats were congregated in Independence Square, Philadelphia, for the purpose of ratifying the nominations of the Cincinnati Convention. Mayor Vaux presided. Gen. Cass was introduced, and spoke in good earnest on the right of Territories to make their own institutions, on the high hopes, more, the certainty, of Mr. Buchanan's election to the Presidency, and that of Mr. J. C. Breckenridge to the Vice Presidency in November next. Both gentlemen were highly eulogized. Mr. Pierce came in for a large share of compliments, and "his great measures of external policy" were warmly approved.

The Hon. S. A. Douglas followed, and delivered a thrilling address. Mr. S. spoke of the present glorious union of the Democrats, the momentous times in which we live, the all-absorbing question—self-government in the Territories and States—and commended highly Mr. Buchanan as worthy of the highest office in the nation.

Other gentlemen spoke, and resolutions adopted ratifying the nominations, and expressing their hearty approval of the platform.

On Wednesday night a grand ratification meeting was likewise held in the Park in this city. "Great men" were present, and some of them spoke with great enthusiasm—among the number Senator Douglas. John Van Buren was on the platform to sustain by his presence the nomination of Mr. Buchanan.

Governor Reeder arrived at his home, in Easton, Pa., on Wednesday evening, June 11th, and was met at the depot by a band of music, and a large number of citizens, and ascorted to the hotel, when, thanking the citizens for their politeness, he retired. He made no allusion to politics, and his reserve puzzled his friends considerably.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

France.—The Moniteur publishes the official returns of the gross receipts of the French railways during the first quarter of 1856 which shows an increase of 10,930,000f. over the same period of 1855.

Pastor Grandpierre has been named pastor at Paris, in the place of the late Adolphe Monod.

A model of a newly invented train for the Emperor of the French was tried on the 8th ult., on the railway line between Paris and Tours. It consists of five carriages communicating with each other by a gallery. There is a drawing-room and bed-room—in fact, a complete appartement. Another new carriage, for sick people, was also tried. It contains eight beds. A ticket, with the use of a bed, will only cost double the ordinary fare.

By the French law, new places of worship cannot be built or established without leave of the Prefect; but that leave should be granted on a certain number of inhabitants coming forward to profess themselves of some of the kinds of creed and worship recognized by the State. Numbers of Protestant congregations have arisen in different parts of France of late years, who differ from that Protestant Church which is recognized by the State, chiefly on the principle that they will not have parties paid by the State. The Prefects never would undestand such an objection; and in many departments they have gone the length of downright persecution, forbidding the meeting of these Protestants, and even imprisoning and fining the officiating brethren.

The Paris correspondent of an English paper The Star, says: An Imperial order has been issued, enjoining the Prefects to respect these congregations, and their pastors, and to allow them that liberty of public worship, which is part of the common law of France.

A letter to the N. Y. Tribune says: "The Empress Eugenie is likely to remain an invalid for life. Her feet are paralized, and though the physicians hold out the hope that a few days may restore her to her former health, her recovery is very problematical." Mr. Dubois the distinguished physician who presided on the Empress's confinement comes in for a large share of abuse from the clique of courtiers and sharp tongued meddlers that surround the Emperor.

The French provincial journals are much occupied with the scenes of devastation which their localities present, in consequence of the continued rise of the rivers in the centre and south of France. Apprehensions are felt that when the rivers have retired within their natural limits, great damage will have been caused to the young crops. On May 16, the Saone had risen over the roads of the Barbe and Fontaines, and almost the whole of the Quai de Serin, and the entrepots of wine and wood. All the Quais de la Baleine, de St. Antoine, and des Celestine, as well as the streets running from them as far as the Place de la Prefecture, were completely under water. The Rhone continued to rise. In many parts the waters were overflowing, the quays on the right bank, and along the Quai de Retz all circulation was cut off. The Place des Cordeliers and the Rues Claudia and Stella were complete lakes. Beams of wood and materials of all kinds were brought down by the torrents. The Moniteur de la Cote d'Or states that the waters of the Brenne and the Armacon flooded the plains of Laumes, Athie, Viserny and Genay.

A secret society, called the Community of St. John, and formed for religious purposes, has just been discovered at Vienna, and eighty persons have been arrested.

England.—Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence died on the 17th of May, at Newburgh Park, Yorkshire. He was the third son of William IV., by Mrs. Dorothy Jordon, the celebrated actress. He entered the navy at an early age, and rose by seniority, and had attained, at the time of his death, the rank of Rear-Admiral. He was well known in the leading circles of fashion, and lived and died unmarried.

A frightful explosion the 17th ult., occurred on Saturday afternoon at Woolwich Arsenal, by which six lives have been lost, and a number of other persons most seriously injured. At 36 minutes past three in the afternoon, a report louder than that of any artilery, followed by the most violent concussion, told in an unmistakable manner that an accident of no ordinary character had happened. The accident first occurred in one of the temporary sheds erected for preparing the composition for the fireworks, destined for the celebration of peace but almost at the same moment a second shed, used for a similar purpose, was joined in the catastrophe. Such was the force of the explosion, that these buildings had large fragments of the roof hurled into the air, and carried over the tops of the adjoining buildings into the river, more than a hundred yards. One of the victims had been literally blown into several pieces. His head was severed from his body, and one of his legs was found on the top of a high building adjoining. Wm. Richardson was picked up from amid the ruins of the shed, whose skull was fractured; he was perfectly insensible, and died soon after his arrival at the hospital. Mr. Flack, the foreman of the percussion cap department, and who had charge of the persons at work in the shed, was taken out quite dead, his leg having been blown off and his bowels ripped open. Two men, Rook and Shylock, were also found dead but the exact nature of the injury which caused the deaths had not been ascertained. The remainder of the persons who are either dead or injured were employed in the yards, and received their injuries from the fragments of iron and other materials which were scattered about in every direction. The present is the third explosion which has taken place at the arsenal in connection with the preparation of the fireworks for the celebration of the peace, being considerably more than had occurred during the whole of the preparations required at Woolwich for carrying on the war.

On Monday the 19th the Queen laid the foundation stone of a new great military hospital. The site of this gigantic establishment is distant only six miles from Southampton, and about twelve from Portsmouth. It is brought into direct communication not only with the metropolis, but with the camp at Aldershott. The situation, besides being surrounded with exquisite scenery, is undeniably healthy. The building itself will be of immense magnitude; the frontage alone (facing south-west) will extend upwards of fourteen hundred feet. The whole pile of building is expected to be completed in about three years, and the cost, it is understood, will be about £230,000

On May 21, a party of Mormons, comprising several families, in all 152 men, women and children, left London by the railway for Liverpool, there to embark, with other parties from different parts of the country, for Boston, whence they will proceed to the promised land.—[London paper.

Scotland.—M. Kossuth is about starring it again in Auld Scotland. From a programme before us we learn he is about to start on a tour through the principal towns, commencing with Glascow. He is to lecture there in the Trades' and City Halls during the present week. His engagements extend to the middle of July, after which, accompanied by his lady, he is to take a stroll over the heather hills to invigorate his frame and prepare him for an Autumnal tour in order to fulfil the pressing invitations that daily crowd upon him.

Russia.—The Russian papers say the saving effected by the abeyance of the Black Sea Fleet will be 15,000,000 to 20,000,000, which would probably be applied to the development and strengthening of the naval force in the Baltic, White Sea and Pacific. Private enterprise in railways was encouraged by the government. The Coronation was fixed for 5th September.

An ukase of the late Emperor Nicholas of Russia, issued in 1850, requiring the Jews in the western governments of the empire to doff the long-skirted garments, and wear coats of Western brevity, is now being carried out with all vigor and severity in Wilna. Kowno, Grodno and Minsk. Another portion of the same ukase requires Jewesses to wear their own hair and discontinue the use of artificial topknots.

The cholera appears to be showing itself again in St. Petersburg. The daily mortality has risen from two or three to as many as twenty-one. The number of deaths that have already taken place is 304.

The East.—Advices have been received from Constantinople to the 9th May. Energetic measures had been taken to suppress fanatical outbreaks in the provinces. A Turkish army, under Omar Pasha's command, will be divided into flying columns. Several large French barracks at Donad Pasha have been burnt down. Accounts from Anapa of the 29th of April say that hostilities have recommenced between the Russians and Circassians.

The Mount of Olives, near Jerusalem, has been purchased by a Madame Polack, the widow of a wealthy banker of the Hebrew persuassion at Konigsberg, in Prussia.

"Vienna.—May 20th. By a treaty concluded between the Sultan and the Western Powers, the period, within which the evacuation of the Turkish territory was to have been completed, has been prolonged. The prolongation is said to be six months from the present time."

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

Washington, June 9, 1856.

Mr. Bright being absent, Mr. Stuart was elected President pro tem.

On motion of Mr. Adams, of Miss. the bill to amend the naturalization law was made the special order for Satauturday next.

Mr. Trumbull of Ill., introduced a bill to restore order and peace to Kansas, proposing to bring it under the Territorial government of Nebraska.

Mr. Trumbull explained that the only object of the bill was to extend the Territorial government of Nebraska over Kansas, and abolish the present government of the latter Territory and the laws made by their Legislature. He thought this proposition worthy of some consideration, as a state of things now exists in Kansas which all good men must deplore. He did not care about having the bill referred, as that would withdraw it from the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. Douglas of Ill., hoped the bill would be referred to the Committee on Territories, who would report on it at an early day. It involved some grave questions, but he was glad to see that the opponents of the Nebraska bill were beginning to acknowledge the principle of that measure. The laws of Nebraska were made by the people of Nebraska, and the laws of Kansas by the people of Kansas; but the proposition is now to abolish the laws made by the people of Kansas for their own government, and place them under the laws of Nebraska, which they had no voice in making.

Mr. Trumbull said that so far from acknowledging the principle of the Nebraska Kansas bill, he did not believe there was any principle in it. It was understood one way at the North and another way in the South. He would admit this bill to re-annex Kansas to Nebraska was not such a measure as he should prefer. He regarded the repeal of the Missouri Compromise as the cause of all the mischief, and would be glad to restore things to their former position. This was a temporary expedient, not intended to carry out his own wishes fully. He meant to occupy conservative ground upon this question, and was willing to yield something, for he was sorry to see strife in Kansas, and anxious that some measures should be immediately adopted to restore peace in that unhappy Territory.

Mr. Douglas said he was anxious to have peace and quietness restored to Kansas as his colleague, and he was also willing to yield something; but he would yield what some of the people of Kansas refused to yield, that was implicit obedience to the laws of the land. If everybody would do this, there would be no difficulty in Kansas or anywhere else. But, if instead of compelling the rioters and rebels to submit to the laws, they were to be placed under the laws of another Territory, the effect would be to extend the strife and tumult to Nebraska likewise. He was unwilling to inflict upon Nebraska the curse of strife and mob violence that existed in Kansas. The people of Nebraska have obeyed the law, and they have peace. In Kansas the law had been trampled under foot, and there was strife. The abolitionists and emigrant aid societies had not interposed in Nebraska to pervert the terms and meaning of the law of Congress. The very fact that both Territories were created under one law, and that in one there was peace and quietness and in the other strife and controversy, shows that the fault is not in the law, but in foreign interference. Strife and violence were the fruits of that interference in Kansas, but there had been non-interference in Nebraska, and peace and harmony had been the natural consequence. If his colleague thought the Nebraska bill was understood differently in the North and South, he had better read the proceedings of the National Democratic Convention. He would find that the principles of the Democratic party were proclaimed North, South, East and West—everywhere alike—proclaimed by the unanimous vote of every State in the Union. True democrats had no trouble in accepting it, and nobody had except those who were opposed to it, and who were determined not to be satisfied with it. The principles of that bill were embodied in the compromise measures of 1850, and confirmed by the election of Mr. Pierce in 1852.

Mr. Trumbull replied that the thing was covered up by the Cincinnati Convention very much as it was in the Nebraska bill. The language was ambiguous, and each section understood it to suit their own views.

After some further debate between Messrs Trumbull and Douglas, concerning the merits of the Nebraska bill, Mr. Trumbull's bill was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. Foot, of Vt., addressed the Senate on the bill amendatory of the act to promote the efficiency of the navy. It was he said, indisputable that errors had been committed and injustice inflicted on the officers, and he should support such measures as would most effectually accomplish a correction. He argued that the President has no power to dismiss any commissioned officer in the army or navy, except in his executive capacity of carrying into effect the laws of Congress and sentences of court martial.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

By the reading of the journal of Saturday it appeared that Mr. Edwards, of N.Y., had given notice of his intention to introduce a bill for the removal of the seat of government from Washington to some point in Ohio within five miles of Cincinnati.

Mr. Jones, of Tenn., moved to strike out the notice, contending that it could not there appear, as no quorum was present on that day.

Ninety two members only voted, which, being no quorum, the House adjourned.

SENATE. June 10.

Mr. Crittendon, of Kentucky, submitted the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas, dangerous popular disturbances, with insurrection and obstruction to the due execution of the laws, unhappily prevail in the Territory of Kansas; and whereas, it is of great importance that the military forces which may be employed for the suppression of those insurrectionary disturbances, and for the restoration of law, peace and protection to the good people of the Territory, should be conducted with the greatest discretion and judgment, and should be under the command of an officer whose rank and reputation would render his services most useful and beneficial to his country in the present crisis, a crisis requiring firmness and prudence energy and conciliation. Be it, therefore.

Resolved, By the Senate of the United States, that the President be, and he is hereby requested to employ the military services of Lieutenant Gen. Scott in the pacification of Kansas, and in the immediate direction and command of all the forces employed or to be employed for that purpose, under such instructions and with such authority and power as the President can or may think proper to give to and confer upon him.

Mr. Crittenden said it seemed to him that the Senate but very seldom had under their consideration a subject of more importance. It was enough to make them feel ashamed for the spectacle now presented in Kansas. They had been in session six months, and not one step had been taken by them to remedy this disgraceful evil, growing day by day, spreading wider and wider, and inflaming more and more passions already to much excited. Not only are the peace and quiet of Kansas disturbed, but the peace of the entire country is seriously threatened. Of debate there had been enough, not of the kind to contribute to impartial judgment, but leading to crimination and recrimination. He wanted to see a broad, general and fraternal peace; and that must be the ambition of all. In the course of his remarks he said that General Scott carried in his left hand the sword and in his right hand peace—gentle peace; and by his voice, "trumpet tongued," he will do more than a thousand bayonets. His (Crittenden's) object was to put an end to war and anarchy in Kansas.

Mr. Mason, (dem.) of Va., was not now prepared to vote either for or against the resolution, and asked that it might lie over till to-morrow. He had doubts as to the propriety of making such a request to the President, who, as Commander-in-Chief of the army, had sole power over the matter. While entertaining the highest respect for the patriotism and judgment of the Senator from Kentucky, he did not think the condition of things in Kansas called for the course proposed.

Mr. Crittenden replied that as General Scott was an old man, the President might feel some reluctance in ordering him on that distant service; but, in his opinion, the Senate ought to endeavor to contribute to the promotion of peace in Kansas.

Mr. Seward, of N. Y., was in favor of sending General Scott there, but thought it would be as well to do it by joint resolution. He also suggested that the preamble to Mr. Crittenden's proposition be omitted, as the facts therein set forth are well known to the President and the country.

Further consideration of the resolution was postponed till to-morrow.

Mr. Foster of Conn., offered a resolution, directing the Committee on Commerce to inquire into the expediency of authorising the issue of a register to the British built bark Resolute which was abandoned by that government and found direlect in the Arctic ocean by the American whaleship George Henry, and by her brought into the port of New London, where she is now lying, all claim to said vessel by the British government having been relinquished to the sailors.

Mr. Mason proposed that the vessel be purchased by government, refitted, and sent back to the British government as a present.

Mr. Foster expressed gratification at this suggestion, and in order that it might be carried out, he withdrew his resolution. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Burlingame, of Mass., presented resolutions of the Massachusetts Legislature, concerning the assault on Senator Sumner.

Laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

One hundred and twenty-one members were present, but as many had "paired off" with absentees, the House adjourned.

SENATE. June 11.

Mr. Bright, of Ind., having returned, Mr. Stuart resigned the office of president pro tem., and Mr. Bright was again elected. He made a short address citing precedents to show that in conferring the appointment on Mr. Stuart, he did not intend to assume an authority which did not belong to him and which had not heretofore been exercised in similar cases.

The Chair then laid before the Senate the resolutions of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in reference to the assault on Mr. Sumner, and they were read.

Mr. Butler, S. C., said they contained a foregone conclusion, because they pronounced judgment before the subject had been investigated. He called it an insulting mockery for the Legislature to ask the Senate to investigate the matter after they had pronounced judgment upon it. He would say no more now, but would move that the resolutions be laid on the table and printed.

Motion agreed to.

Fifty-five thousand copies of the agricultural portion of the Patent Office report were ordered printed.

Mr. Crittenden, of Ky., moved to take up his resolution requesting the President to give to Gen. Scott the command of the United States troops in Kansas.

Mr. Yules, of Fla., hoped the consideration of the resolution would be postponed for a few days, as not half the Senators' seats were filled.

Mr. Clayton, of Del., said, if it was important that what was proposed should be done at all, it was important it should be done at once. He anticipated benefit from the resolution, and hoped it would be adopted. The sending of Scott to Kansas must have the effect of calming the public mind.

A very animated debate ensued on the right of Congress to request the President to take such a step. Some thought it would simply be requesting the President to do his duty, consequently an insult; others thought if Congress would cease talking about Kansas, peace and order in that Territory would be restored; and another class did not believe there was much the matter in Kansas—the greatest war being on the telegraph wires. Without any action, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Speaker laid before the House a message from the President in reply to the resolution calling for any information regarding the action of the Powers of Europe relative to privateering, and the proceedings of the late Paris Conference thereon, saying no information of that character had been officially communicated to this government.

A quorum was present, but many had paired off, and after repeated ineffectual efforts to procure a working majority, the House adjourned.

Terrific Steamboat Explosion and Loss of Life.

Montreal, June 10, 1856.

The steamboat running in connection with the Grand Trunk Railroad, exploded at Longeuil to-day. The mail conductor was killed, and it is feared that a great number were lost overboard.

The explosion occurred at one o'clock this afternoon, making a complete wreck of the boat. Her boiler was blown an immense distance, and the wharf and everything in the neighborhood is completely shattered. A train had just arrived, and the boat was full of passengers from it at the time of the disaster. The scene indeed was fearful. A child was blown from the arms of its mother into the air and landed on the ferry shed. The number of killed is estimated at twenty, and the wounded at thirty to forty.

The following were killed:—Two engineers, Mr. Madden, mail conductor, Hunter, a boy who acted as pilot; two firemen, an engineer and Henry Ballery.

The captain of the boat was severely injured, and is not expected to live.

Major Johnston and lady were thrown into the river but escaped.

These are all the particulars that we have received up to this time. It is reported that fifty passengers still remain unaccounted for.

News from the Plains.

St. Louis, June 10, 1856.

The steamer Gray Cloud has arrived here from St. Pierre, after an absence of nearly a year. She brings intelligence of the adjustment of the Sioux difficulties, according to treaty stipulations.

At a council held in March last, by General Harney, it was resolved to give the Indians seventy-five days to restore the provisions and property they had stolen. At a council held on May 15, seven hundred representatives of the various tribes came and delivered up twelve prisoners and a large number of horses, mules, &c., promising obedience to our government.

Active operations against the sioux are now closed.

General Harney set the prisoners free, after retaining them a few days.

The Enfield Rifle—A Deadly Weapon.

An interesting experiment took place lately at the School of Musketry, at Hythe, and one which must convince the most sceptical how deadly a weapon the Enfield rifle must prove in the hands of men properly instructed in the use of it. Some condemned tumblers and gun limners having lately been procured from Woolwich, on Monday morning last one of these was taken to the target practice ground; to the tumbril were attached six horses with riders made of framework, covered with canvas, stuffed with straw, the whole the size of life. About the gun carriage were stuffed figures, representing men unlimbering and bringing the gun into action. At a distance somewhat beyond 600 yards from the above a party, consisting of about sixty of the men under instruction at the School of Musketry, was drawn up in two divisions, the one extended in skirmishing order, the other supporting. One round was fired by the front rank only of the skirmishing party, which may have consisted of about twenty men, and the result was that a bullet had passed through almost every horse, as also through many of the riders and men employed at the gun. The support was then ordered up to reinforce skirmishers, and the whole fired three or four rounds in skirmishing order, which completely riddled horses, riders and footmen. The party was then closed on its centre and retired to a distance of above 800 yards, when volleys were fired at the supposed artillery, first by sections, then by sub-divisions, and finally by divisions, the whole with an accuracy perfectly wonderful; in short, the experiment clearly proved that in the hands of well-skilled soldiers—men who, having been taught the principles of rifle-shooting theoretically and practically, have obtained a perfect confidence in their weapon—the Enfield rifle must prove more than a match for any field-guns of the present day.

A British Agent Burned to Death.

The Presse d'Orient gives the following details of the dreadful act of burning to death at Marasch the agent of the English Government and his family:—"The name of this unfortunate man was Guarmani. The English army had established in various places in the interior agents to purchase horses and mules. At Marasch, in the province of Adona, M. Guarmani, an Italian, had been appointed. This gentleman was brother to one of the agents on the coast of Syria of the Messageries Imperiales. M. Guarmani lived quietly with his family and several servants, one of whom was a Mussulman. He employed several persons as sub-agents, and one of these had received from him a sum of 4,000 piastres to pay for some mules purchased at a little distance, and to bring them back. Several days having passed without the Turk executing his mission, M. Guarmani sought him out, and demanded the money. The Turk denied that he had received it, and M. Guarmani summoned him before the Cadi, who gave the suit against the complainant. M. Guarmani, being exceedingly irritated at such a decision, used some warm language to the Cadi, who ordered him to be seized and bastinadoed. That, however, could not be executed, for M. Guarmania rushed out of the court, and hurried to his own house, where he barricaded himself in. The populace, being urged on by the Cadi, pursued him and endeavored to force in the door of the house. M. Guarmania, however, having his wife and children to defend, held firm, and all the attempts of the populace proved vain. But the latter, finding every other means ineffectual, determined to set fire to the house. This they did by heaping wood and other combustible matters around it, and then, when the unfortunate family attempted to escape, they used sticks and stones to prevent them, and actually kept M. Guarmania and his family within the fire untill they were all burned to death. No doubt is entertained that Lord Stratford de Redcliffe will insist on the most ample satisfaction for this frightful crime."

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses! Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres e la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence. ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lascivieté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Poetry.

There is Something at Hand.

BY ELDER JOHN LYON.

THERE'S a voice in the valleys, the mountains and floods,
And a rustling wailing is heard in the woods;
The greensward and foliage fall seared in the leaf,
And the gay flowers, untimely, are drooping in grief!
For the Angel of Death pours his curse o'er the land,
And the people amazed cry—"There's something at hand."

There's a sound in the wind, in the Monsoon and squall,
And its bellowings echo th' avalanche's fall;
The ocean laughs loud, while in tempest arrayed,
And the lightnings gleam bright o'er the wreck she has made:
Yet they know not the cause of the corse-covered strand,
But despairingly cry—"Surely something's at hand!"

There are spots in the sun, as the prophets foretold,
And the pale moon looks sad on the earth growing old;
For a harsh sound is heard in her bowels' loud groan,
While her volcanic cough vomits fire in her moan—
Yet though frailty and age tell her last running sand,
Ah! the gay world perceives not this "Something at hand!"

There's a spectre abroad! like the wind's airy breeze,
That cometh to all, yet no mortal eye sees;
In the haunts of the wretched its trophies are seen,
And death strews its pathway where'er it hath been;
Though pestilence rages, they can't understand,
But, terror-struck, cry—"Surely something's at hand."

There's invention and change, Priest, Artist and Sage;
From good, better, to best! stamps the toil of the age;
And their mountebank skill rings the change into gold,
And their gold becomes tin, as new changes unfold:
Thus vesto goes on, touched by Mammon's sly wand!
And the jugglers, delighted, cry—"Something's at hand!"

There's wealth in abundance, and misery in store!
There is wisdom, and learning, and ignorance more;
There is everything better! and everything worse!
More refinement and morals; yet more of the curse;
War! Religion! and slav'ry, the world now command,
And Bab'lon, in wonder, cries—"Something's at hand."

But what is this "Something" all fear and adore?
That so strangely now "casteth its shadows before,"
Which the learned and illiterate look for to come:
Be't for good or for bad? abroad or at home?
'Tis this wonderful truth—tidings awfully grand!
That God's time to reign on the earth is at hand!

An Attempt to Assassinate an Editor.

SAN FRANCISCO has been in a state of the most intense excitement since Wednesday afternoon, in consequence of an attempt having been made by James P. Cassey, editor of the Sunday Times to assassinate James King of Wm., editor of the Evening Bulletin. It appears that an article appeared in Wednesday's issue of the Bulletin in which Mr. King alludes to Mr. Cassey in the following language:

"The fact that Cassey has been an inmate of Sing-Sing prison in New York, is no offence against the laws of this State; nor is the fact of his having stuffed himself through the ballot-box as elected to the Board of Supervisors from a district where it is said he was not even a candidate, any justification for Mr. Bagely to shoot Cassey, however richly the latter may deserve to have his neck stretched for such fraud on the people. These are acts against the public good, not against Mr. Bagely in particular, and however much we may detest Cassey's former character, or be convinced of the shallowness of his promised reformation, we cannot justify the assumption by Mr. Bagely to take upon himself the redressing of these wrongs. This case of Bageley's has caused us much anxiety, and we should have been pleased to have withdrawn cheerfully his name from the list alluded to, but we cannot conscientiously do more than express our gratification at the assurances we get of his present conduct, in which we trust he will persevere. As to the Cassey fight, we suggest to Mr. Bagley if he can explain that away, it would not be amiss to do so, and he can have the use of our columns for that purpose."

After the publication of this article, Mr. Cassey called at the editorial room of the Bulletin, and asked the editor what he meant by its publication; telling him that he was willing that all his acts since he had been in this country should be raked up. King asked him if he was done; if he was, to leave. Cassey then told him, that he should say through the columns of his paper what he pleased; and if necessary, he should defend himself; and then left. Shortly afterwards Mr. King left his office, and was met by Cassey near the corner of Washington and Montgomery street. As King approached, Cassey cried out, "draw and defend yourself, and immediately throwing of a short cloak which he wore presented a navy revolver, when they were but a few feet apart, and shot King in the breast, the ball passing through his body. When he received the wound he exclaimed "I am shot" and staggered into the Pacific Express Office. Cassey was immediately hurried off to the station-house and locked up. In a few minutes after the assault, the street was densely packed with men, all in the highest state of excitement; and as soon as it was ascertained that the assassin was at the station-house, a rush was made there by the whole crowd, with cries of "hang him," "hang him," &c. For greater security he was taken in a carriage by the officers from the station-house to the county jail; and to defend himself while in the carriage, he was armed with a brace of revolvers! During the evening the most tremendous excitement prevailed throughout the whole city. On Montgomery street, where the people had assembled in immense crowds, several exciting speeches were delivered, and strong appeals made to the people to avenge the blood of their fellow-citizen who had been so inhumanly shot down. From there they adjourned to the Plaza; but for want of leaders, no organization was effected. The military were called out, and repaired to the jail, where they remained throughout the night, and by their presence deterred the people, who had assembled in large numbers, from making an attack upon it. On Thursday morning the old Vigilance Committee met together, and came to the conclusion to have the names of those who wished to join, registered. Thousands signed their names, pledging their honor to carry out whatever determination the majority should come to. Great reliance was placed by the populace in the action of the Vigilance Committee. On Thursday afternoon the following placard was posted up:

"EMERGENCY OF THE MOMENT!—TO THE PEOPLE!—FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS, LEND ME YOUR EARS!—The time was when in San Francisco many among us, law-abiding men, regretted the acts of the Vigilance Committee, and were willing to hope that if the law of the land had been duly supported the guilty would have met with their deserts. Since then, better experience has convinced us that the Law is here a MOCKERY; that the weak, the poor, the stranger, may pay his misdeeds by the forfeiture of his liberty or his life; but the rich villain, the powerful gambler, supported by his rich confederates, laughs at the impotence of the law, and stalks through our streets with a bowie knife or revolver to work out his wicked will, conscious of a 'friend at court,' who will screen him from his deserts!

"Patience is a virtue, but there is a point beyond which it degenerates into cowardice. Obedience to the law is the duty of every citizen; but when the law is effete, or its protection becomes tyranicle, resistance becomes the duty of FREEMEN!

"Such is the PRESENT EMERGENCY, to our view. The Law and its Courts are a farce; murder stalks amongst us, AND MUST BE CHECKED. Then up, friends, and let the majority of the people TRY THE PRESUMED MURDERER, and then if he be guilty, EXECUTE!

"BRUTUS."

The streets have been lined with people from morning till night, the scenes of the past few days being the only topics of conversation The bulletin boards of the different papers have been surrounded by throngs of eager people, anxious to learn all they can in relation to the action likely to be taken in the matter. All feel that the time for action has arrived. It has now to be decided whether peaceful and law-abiding citizens can be shot down with impunity in the streets like dogs, and their murderers allowed to go forth uncondemned and unpunished, or whether the majesty of the laws shall be vindicated, and the assassin receive the just punishment of his demerits. The people have now to decide, whether they will arise in their majesty and strength, and thoroughly cleanse the judgment seats and courts of justice of the land from the impurity, injustice and corruption which now abound there, or whether they will submit to have things continue as they have been. If they are but firm and united, and are determined by the expression of the popular will to hurl these office holders, who do not respect either the laws of the land or their constitutional obligations, from the positions of trust and responsibility which they now occupy, a change for the better will soon be apparent, and matters will mend. But if these things are not done, if vice and crime are allowed to thrive unmolested and unchecked, if the blood of the innocent and unoffending can be spilled without restraint, and the murderer be permitted to again go at large and seek fresh victims as has been the case heretofore, then wo unto this city and this country, for the Lord will not permit the blood of the guiltless to cry from the earth unavenged. The cries of the widow and the fatherless made so by the demoniacal passions of men, will not ascend to his ears in vain, he will visit with scourges the people who will permit such things to take place in their midst without taking means to remedy it.

We have had but one opinion of the diabolical attempt there has been made to take the life of Mr. King. With order loving men there can be but one opinion. It was a dastardly and atrocious attempt to silence a man, whose "faults" have been to speak the truth on many subjects too plainly to be palatable. We do not think that Mr. King is faultless, or that he has not been injudicious in some respects; we would be doing him injustice, however, did we not give him credit for fearlessly and manfully speaking out, regardless alike of the smiles or frowns of the corrupt, in opposition to every thing that he deemed wrong. He has battled earnestly and zealously to expose iniquity and to defend the rights of the people and if he has erred, it probably has been for lack of knowledge, and not from a disposition to intentionally do wrong.

Mr. King throughout the whole of Thursday was quite rational, and hopes were entertained that he might recover. Yesterday, however, the physicians made an examination, and pronounced his situation critical. He is surrounded by kind and anxious friends, and his wife, though in a delicate situation, has been unremitting in her attentions upon him.

NEW ORLEANS, June 11.

THE steamship Daniel Webster has arrived at this port with San Francisco dates to the dates to the 25th of May, and San Juan dates to the 6th inst.

Great excitement existed in San Francisco in consequence of a man named Casey having shot James King, editor of the Bulletin, in the street. Casey was immediately arrested and confined in jail. The shooting of King occurred on the 14th ult., and on the 16th he died. On the announcement of his death the feelings of the community became aroused to the highest pitch. The old Vigilance Committee called a meeting, and placards of an inflammatory nature were posted, calling on the citizens to take the law into their own hands, and on the 18th three thousand citizens, completely organized in divisions and companies, and armed with muskets, marched by three streets from the Committee-rooms and took possession of the jail. From thence they took Casey, together with the gambler Cora, the murderer of Gen. Richardson, and carried them to the Committee-rooms where they remained, strongly guarded, on the sailing of the steamer. It was supposed that they would be hung. The whole city was draped in mourning for the the death of King, who was highly esteemed. Casey was formerly an inmate of the Sing Sing Prison, and it was a statement to that effect in the Bulletin that caused the difficulty. The Committee is fully organized throughout the State. It is said they have raised $75,000 to carry out their measures, and they intended to drive out all the gamblers from the State.

The Committee were supplied with arms and ammunition, and their proceedings were characterized by the most perfect order and propriety.

INFAMOUS OUTRAGE UPON CHILDREN—AN OLD SINNER.—Daniel Irvin, a man 87 years of age, residing in Franklin street, near Hudson, was yesterday arrested by Sergeant Webb of the Fifth Ward Police, on a warrant issued by Justice Connolly, charging him with an infamous and indecent assault upon a girl 12 years of age. From facts which have just transpired, it appears that during the past four months this man has induced not less than a dozen girls, varying in age from 9 to 14 years, to go with him, as they came from school, to his house, where he would take them, one at a time, into a room, and there commit the most infamous assaults upon their persons. In order to dissuade them from divulging his conduct he would give them small sums of money, and by this means even induce the same children to visit him again and again. It is thought that the prisoner is insane, and for the sake of humanity, it is to be hoped that such is the case. He owns the house in which he lives, and is said to possess other real estate in the Fifth Ward. Justice Connolly locked him up to await examination on the charge.

Mr. Fillmore's Acceptance of the American Nomination for the Presidency.

WASHINGTON, June 12.

MR. FILLMORE'S letter accepting the nomination for the Presidency appears in the American Organ to day. The letter is lengthy, occupying several columns. In closing he says:

"Having the experience of past service in the administration of the Government, I may be permitted to refer to that as the exponent of the future, and to say that should the Convention be sanctioned by the people, I shall, with the same scrupulous regard for the rights of every section of the Union which then influenced my conduct, endeavor to perform every duty confided by the Constitution and laws to the Executive. As the proceedings of the Convention have marked a new era in the history of the country, by bringing a new political organization into the approaching Presidential canvass, I take occasion to reaffirm my full confidence in the patriotic purposes of that organization, which I regard as springing out of the public necessity forced upon the country, to a large extent, by unfortunate sectional divisions, and the dangerous tendency of those divisions towards disunion. It alone, in my opinion, of all political agencies now existing, is possessed of power to silence this violent and disastrous agitation, and to restore harmony, by its own example of moderation and forbearance. It has claim, therefore, in my judgment upon every earnest friend of the integrity of the Union. So estimating the party, both in its present position and future destiny I freely adopt its great leading principles as announced in the recent declaration of the National Council at Philadelphia, holding them to be just and liberal to every true interest of the country, and wisely adapted to the establishement and support of an enlightened, safe and effective American policy in full accord with the ideas and hopes of the Fathers of the Republic.

I expect shortly to sail for America, and with the blessings of Divine Providence hope soon to tread my native soil. My opportunity of comparing my own country and the condition of her people with those of Europe has only served to increase my admiration of our blessed land of liberty, and I shall return to it without a desire to ever cross the Atlantic again."

Biographical Sketch of Mr. Buchanan.

MR. BUCHANAN, the nominee of the Cincinnati Convention, is in the sixty-fifth year of his age; a hale, hearty man, still in the full vigor of life, intellectually and physically. He was born in the county of Franklin, in the State of Pennsylvania, of comparatively humble, but honest and industrious, parents. Though his parents were able to give him a good classical and academical education, he may be called the architect of his own fortunes. After completing his school education he studied law in Lancaster county, in the same State, which has ever since been his home. In 1814 and 1815 he was elected to the State Legislature, and in succeeding years rose to a high rank among the eminent lawyers which Pennsylvania could boast.

In 1820 Mr. Buchanan was elected to Congress, and remained a member of the House of Representatives during ten years, voluntarily retiring after the first Congress under General Jackson's Administration. He was a warm supporter of the Administration of President Monroe, and was one of General Jackson's earliest, steadiest and most trusted friends. Mr. Buchanan again entered Congress in 1829, and as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee displayed eminent fitness for the position. After retiring from Congress, in 1831, Gen. Jackson, without solicitation, tendered him the mission to Russia which he accepted and filled with signal ability. Among other services, he negotiated the first important commercial treaty between the United States and Russia, which secured to our commerce the Russian ports in the Baltic and Black Seas.

Shortly after Mr. Buchanan's return from Russia, the Democrats in the Pennsylvania Legislature made him their candidate for United States Senator, and elected him. He was twice re-elected to the Senate, and remained in that body until his resignation in March, 1845, when he accepted from President Polk the first seat in his Cabinet as Secretary of State. The ability with which he discharged the duties of that important office, during an important period in our history, is well known to his fellow-citizens. At the close of the Polk Administration he retired again to his home in Pennsylvania, but continued to take an active interest in the political events and questions of the times.

On the accession of Mr. Pierce to the Presidency, Mr. Buchanan was selected to fill the leading foreign mission—that to the Court of St. James. How he has acquitted himself as the Representative of the Republic in England—with what plain republican dignity, and attention to his country's interests and honor, and with what prudent and consummate dipomatic skill he met and mastered the arts and cunning of Palmerston and Clarendon, are matters of too recent occurrence and of too notorious a character to require detailed statement. The distinguished manner in which he conducted the difficult and delicate questions committed to his care, raised him even higher than he had been in the estimation of his countrymen, and pointed him out as the man qualified to hold the helm and guide the ship of State.—[N. Men of the Time.

IN the review of a work recently published in London—Men of the Time: Biographical Sketches of Eminent living Characters—the Woman's Advocate gives the following brief sketch of a few men from among many who have wormed their way from comparative obscurity to a respectable position in Society. With humility and perseverance, tools will work even through the flinty rock. No man need stand still. Onward is the watchword of sensible men.

"In passing through this interesting work, some curious considerations will present themselves to the heedful reader. He will inquire for instance, into the comparative contributions made respectively to the ranks of the Men of the Time by those different portions of the United Kingdom which still present tokens of distinct nationalities. In the part of the book devoted to the male sex, there are—not including foreigners—385 celebrities, or persons assumed to be such; and of that number 259 are English, 88 Scotch, and 37 Irish. Now, taking the population in round numbers, of England at 18,000,000, of Scotland at 3,000,000, and of Ireland at 5,500,000, this will shew a proportion for which some of our readers will hardly be prepared. The Scotch celebrities they will find to be a little more than double the number, according to population, of the English; and the Irish celebrities less than half. In the female sex, the same calculation holds good with regard to Irish women of note, who are less than half the number of English; while Scotch women of note, instead of being double the number, like the men, do not quite come up to the English quota. When the work progresses nearer towards completeness, such calculations will be highly interesting; and perhaps some person, with more time at command than ourselves, may do for the different counties what we have thus attempted for the different nationalities.

Even a very cursory perusal of this volume cannot fail to have an impression on the observant reader highly favorable to the liberality of an age which furnishes instances so numerous, or rather so innumerable, of men rising not merely to wealth, but to greater or less distinction of other kinds, from the humblest and most unpromising circumstances. To begin with the letter A, and dash skippingly on through the alphabet—we find that Anderson, the popular Danish novelist, was the son of a cobbler, and educated at a charity-school; and that he tried to gain a living by various handicraft trades, being frequently on the very brink of starvation. Beranger, the celebrated French lyric poet, neglected by his vagabond father, lived with his good father, a poor tailor, and was a GAMIN on the streets of Paris till promoted for a time to the dignity of a pot-boy. Elihu Burritt, as all know, was a blacksmith's apprentice. Carlton, the Irish novelist, who now enjoys a pension of £200 a year, is son of a peasant, and begged his way to knowledge. Rafael Carrera, president of the Republic of Guatimala, began his life as a drummer-boy and cattle-driver. M. Cobden is the son of a small farmer, and, entering a warehouse in London when a boy, rose through its various grades of service. Sir William Cubitt was a working miller, then a joiner, and then a millwright. Dumas, the French novelist and dramitist, is the illegitimate son of a planter and a negress, and was in all but starvation in Paris, till he hit upon the way of distinction. Faraday, the eminent chemist, is the son of a poor blacksmith, and began his career as the apprentice to a book-binder. Millard Fillmore, late President of the United States, was first a plough-boy, then tried the trade of a clothier, and was apprentice to a wool-carder. The present Emperor of Hayti was born a slave. Herring, the animal-painter, began the profession of art with sign-boards and coach-pannels. Jasmin, the Burns of the south of France, is the son of a tailor, and grandson of a common beggar. Mr. Lindsay, M. P., the great ship owner, left his home in Ayr with 3s. 6d. in his pocket, to push his fortunes as a ship-boy; he worked his passage to Liverpool by assistance in the coal-hole of a steamer; and for part of the time after he arrived, begged during the day, and slept in the sheds and streets at night. Lough, the distinguished sculptor, began the world in the capacity of a plough-boy. Minie, the inventor of the well-known rifle, was a private soldier. Robert Owen was a shop-boy to a grocer, and then to a draper. Johannes Rogue, the leader of the German Catholic movement, tended sheep when a boy. Stanfield, the distinguished landscape painter, was a cabin-boy, and the ship-master was his first patron. Thiers, the well known historian, and ex-minister of France, is the son of a poor locksmith, and was educated gratuitously at the public school of Marseilles. Thomas Wright, the Manchester prison philanthropist, was a weekly worker in an iron foundery for forty-seven years, till a large sum of money was raised by subscription to enable him to carry on his philanthropical labors.

There is encouragement here, we fancy, for the poor and down hearted; and likewise rebuke for those who are continually harping on the wrongs of the indigent, and the impassable barriers between high and low."

Disgraceful Exhibition at Jerusalem.

THE infamous imposture of the Holy Fire was exhibited in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre on Saturday the 25th April, with the usual scenes of profanity, superstition and fanaticism. The church was filled by a mixed multitude of Greeks, Armenians, and a few Mahometans, while in the galleries were a good many Europeans. Some of the people were rushing about in troops, shouting, singing, dancing, raising men on their shoulders and carrying them round the church, and working themselves up to a high pitch of excitement. One man walked round the Sepulchre with another on his shoulders and a boy above him. One man would go before a number of others clapping his hands and singing, his followers answering in chorus. When the Pasha arrived his soldiers were formed so as to keep a clear space for the procession round the Sepulchre, and the people gathered in two dense masses round the holes in the wall from which the fire was to issue, the Greeks on one side and the Armenians on the other. The Greek Bishop then made his appearance, and with seven banners before him, marched three times round the Sepulchre, after which, having divested himself of his cap and outer robes, he entered the Sepulchre. The excitement of the masses round the holes now increased to frenzy; in the midst of great shouting the fire was handed out, and the flames spread from torch to torch amid a general roar of fanaticism. The Greeks and Armenians began to quarrel; very soon there was a general melee, and the church resounded with blows of sticks, crashing of lamps, and tearing of pictures. The Mahometan soldiers were called upon to interfere, and in half-an-hour their bayonets succeeded in clearing the church, the pavement of which was left strewed with broken glass and oil from the lamps. A stick had transfixed the fine picture of the Resurrection over the entrance to the tomb.—[The London Times.

A LADY asked her gardener why the weeds always outgrew and covered the flowers.—"Madam," answered he, "the soil is mother to the weeds, but only step-mother to the flowers."

A Rouge Detector.

IT was lately remarked that an exceedingly brilliant auditory, amongst which were very many elegantly dressed ladies, attended a lecture on chemistry in Berlin, delivered by one of the most celebrated chemists of the age. After witnessing a number of beautiful experiments and hearing of the marvels of science, a young lady grew fatigued, and requested her husband to lead her from the hall.

"My love," said the gentleman, on reaching the landing-place outside, "wipe your cheek, there's a large blue spot upon it."

The lady, much surprised, turned to look at her reflection in the mirrored window of a shop they were passing, and was almost petrified to observe that the rouge on her cheeks had become blue, in consequence of the chemical decomposition occasioned by the gas the professor had used in making his experiment. She quickly wiped her face and stifled her vexation in the thought that she should find herself amply revenged upon the other ladies in the hall. In reality, the lecture closing at this moment, the audience began to disperse, and the gentleman and his wife almost burst with laughter at the sight of cheeks of yellow, blue, black, violet and other colors, which now made their appearance in the street. Some of the ladies who had manufactured for themselves ivory complexions, rosy cheeks, coral lips and ebony eyebrows, were so transformed that they would have excited the envy of a peacock. It is whispered that a lecture from the professor would produce similar effects in other cities besides Berlin. That chemist would be warmly welcomed should he visit Paris.—[Paris Letter.

Treatment of Waiters.

A CHAPTER might be written upon the impatient men who are irrascible and hard upon waiters. I like to be gentle with them. If they do not bring what I want on the instant, they are at least books to me which a I can read and meditate upon; and the only punishment I ever inflict on a neglectful or uncivil waiter, is to ask him for a cigar-light, make him a low bow, and, showing him twopence, inform him that I intend to present it to the waiter at the Hen and Chickens Hotel at Birmingham, whither I am bound by the night-mail, instead of to him. He feels this severely. He would, were he malicious, unwait upon; so all he can do is to overcharge the next customer, which is no business of mine, or to retire to his pantry and repent, which is better. But I know men—I am sure they are tyrants at home—bully their servants, pester their wives, and beat their children—who seem to take a delight in harrassing, badgering, objurating the waiter; setting pitfalls in the reckoning that he may stumble, and giving him confused orders, that he may trip himself up. These are the men who call in the landlords and demand the waiter's instant dismissal, because their mutton-chop has a curly tail—these are the jocund companions who quarrel with the cabmen, and menace them with ruin and the treadmill. I never had a fracas with a cabman in my life; and once, when the driver of a dashing Hanson told me confidently that the fare from the White Horse Cellar to Kensington Turnpike would be four shillings, I poked him in the ribs, telling him he was a droll fellow; whereupon he, seeing the humor of the thing, drove me cheerily to the palace-gates for a shilling.—[Household Words.

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.—A gentleman who had just returned from Arkansas heard the following conversation at a tavern: "Halloa, boy!" "Halloa yourself!" "Can I get breakfast here?" "I don't reckon you can." "Why not?" "Massa's away, missteess's drunk, the baby's got the colic, and I don't care a darn for nobody."

THE following order, verbatum et literatum, was received by an undertaker in the Bowery last Friday morning, from an afflicted widower living in Pearl street: "Sur: my Wiaf is dead and Wants to be berried to morrow, At wonner klok. Unse wair too dig the hole—bi the side Of mi Uther Wiafs—Let it be deep!"

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 1856.

Great Britain and the United States.

Two weeks ago we noticed Lord Clarendon's remarks in the House of Lords relative to Walker's movement in Nicaragua, in which he stated that Mr. Marcy's last communication to the English Government was quite deprecatory of the filibustering in Central America. It was evident that his lordship believed that, on that subject, there was a perfect extente cordinle between the two governments, and that he expected the arms of both nations, were at no distant day likely to be turned against General Walker.

About the time that those remarks were made by Lord Clarendon in London, his last dispatch was received at Washington. In this his lordship writes on the Clayton—Bulwer treaty, and the willingness of the English Government to submit that difficulty to arbitration: at the same time he disclaimed any intention on the part of Great Britain to violate directly or indirectly the Neutrality Laws of the United States by the enlistment for the Crimea, but as it had been so regarded by the Cabinet at Washington he apologised and expressed the regret of her Majesty's Cabinet, that anything should have occurred to serve as a foundation for such a supposition. As President Pierce had instructed the American Minister to the Court of St. James to ask the recall of Mr. Crampton and the three Consuls, implicated in the enlistment movement, Lord Clarendon on the part of the English Government refused to entertain that request, believing that the Minister and Consuls were not in reality the aggressors as had been sworn to by some, or if unintentionally they were such in any manner, that this apology was enough to satisfy any government that had the slightest wish to maintain friendly relations with another nation.

Lord Clarendon's despatch was generally regarded by the press of both countries as exceedingly conciliatory. It is highly probable that some were dissatisfied with the view taken of the enlistment by the English Government; but from anything we have seen the general feeling was that Lord Clarendon had shown a great desire to terminate the controversy and maintain friendly relations with us.

Since Lord Clarendon wrote and spoke as above alluded to, President Pierce has recognised Father Vigil as the representative of the Walker–Rivas Government of Nicaragua, Mr. Marcy has answered Lord Clarendon, was silent on arbitration, maintained the culpability of the Minister and Consuls and President Pierce has dismissed them, and by this time they are about setting their feet on Albion's shores.

The papers that left England previous to the arrival here of the news of Walker's recognition were full of hope that President Pierce and Cabinet would be satisfied and smoke with the Cabinet of St. James the pipe of peace. National controversies and troubles that could never be settled by subtle diplomacy and which were soon arranged when the representatives had met and had a friendly chat were alluded to, and cited as a precedent for Lord Clarendon and Mr. Marcy. Suggestions of this character were rife in England, and if we mistake not the British Secretary had expressed in the House of Lords his willingness to meet the United States Secretary half way, and do the business up. In short the prevailing feeling was that England was desirous of terminating the controversy but could humble herself no further and hoped that President Pierce would ask no more. The last mail brings a batch of papers and the apprehension of war again manifests itself the other side of the water, from the reception of the news of Walker's recognition. What John Bull will think, say or do when he hears of the dismissal of the Minister and Consuls is a question easier asked than answered. It is rumored that the dock-yards of the United States have orders to go ahead with what is on hand.

THE Council of the Church there informs us, that Elder Edmund Walker is appointed agent for the sale of our Church books. Address, Post Office, Box 488.

Spain and Mexico.

ACCORDING to the last advices from Vera Cruz, June 1st, the Spanish minister and plenipotentiary, Don Miguel de los Santos Alvarez, had arrived there to demand satisfaction for the ill-treatment of Spanish subjects in Mexico. In 1853 an arrangement was entered into by the latter government to discharge certain moneyed obligations contracted with Spaniards residing there. Spain charges Mexico with dishonor and dishonorable dealings with those creditors, and is now prepared to enforce their claims. European papers represent the Cabinet of Isabella well sustained by the country in the coercive measures likely to be adopted. Shortly after the arrival of the minister, the Spanish fleet made its appearance off the castle of San Juan d'Ulloa. President Comonfort and his cabinet have therefore refused to receive officially Senor Alvarez while the fleet is in that menacing position.

This movement on the part of Spain is regarded by some journalists here as the first act of a new play. The longing of the United States for Cuba has caused Spain to apply, so it is rumored, to England and France for protection. Mexico is likewise reported to have offered lately to the United States certain advantages of travel through her territory for protection against Spain. These rumors have served for foundation to the report that Spain, supported by England and France, may, at no distant day, measure arms with Mexico, supported by the United States. "Wars and rumors of wars" occupy more attention than all else beside.

Journalists on Utah's Claims.

WE are amused with the comments on Utah coming to Congress. Occasionally some ranting bigots belch out bitter things, but for some time back, thinking, matter-of-fact men, look at the question of Utah's admission as it really is—a matter purely and simply political. The attempts of spiteful zealots to drag the religion of the major portion of the inhabitants of Utah into the debate, have signally failed. Every sensible man sees clearly that the inhabitants of Utah ask nothing from Congress but what Congress must grant some day. For the credit of the wise men of the Nation, the sooner Deseret is added to the Stars and Stripes the better.

The New York Dispatch in its last issue, has the following on the subject:

"KNOCKING AT THE DOOR.—The new Constitution of the State of Deseret will soon be in Washington, when the Mormons will ask for admission. Who will take the responsibility of keeping them out? No doubt there will be opposition to the peculiar institution of Mormonism; but while demagogues are wrangling over one "peculiar institution," they will not be over another. Hence, we have no objection to a little variation of the subject of Congressional Buncombe. It will be a public blessing to get slavery on the shelf for a while."

"MEDDLING WITH OUR NEIGHBORS.—This is a bad business, and we are sorry to see that the New York Advertiser thinks it necessary. It would have Congress reform or annihilate the Mormons, because Utah is about sueing for admission as a State. We think the less Congress has to do with the religious and social relations of any community, the better. We are opposed to the policy of meddling with other people's affairs. It makes about all the disturbance with which the community is afflicted. The surest way to destroy Mormonism is to let it die a natural death. Let Utah be admitted."

The Philadelphia Evening Argus, June 4th, concludes a long article on the Mormons with the following paragraph:

"Rather than give to Mormonism the strength which it must inevitably derive from even the merest pretext of persecution at the hands of the General Government, we would advocate the admission of Deseret, with a Republican Constitution, which does not establish polygamy, and grants toleration to all religious opinions; in the hope and belief that rapid immigration would soon so change the condition of the population, by the infusion of the strong, practical morality of monogmy, as to do away gradually and forever with a social abomination whose permanent growth must be regarded with horror and disgust. In this case, as in many others, caution and moderation, aided by firmness, may effect a radical cure, where haste, rashness, and severity might serve only to aggravate the disease."

We make every allowance for our Philadelphia cotemporary, he feels bad, and what is worse, sees he can't help himself. He thinks "the infusion of the strong practical morality of monogamy" into Utah Territory will "do away gradually and for ever with the social abomination." He has forgotten that the Mormons went to Utah. They have all seen strong practical monogamy in the most civilized countries of the world, and the more they saw of monogamic institutions the more they longed to be far from the dens of infamy, prostitution, base degradation, and blue pills.

Presidential Campaign.

"THE North American National Convention," alias the "Anti Fillmore American Convention," has been several days in session in the Apollo Rooms of this city. On Monday morning a portion of the delegates in favor of commodore Stockton receded and met in a room of the National Hall to carry out their measures. The first Convention continued its sittings, and in the afternoon nominated, as their choice for the Presidency of the United States, Nathaniel P. Banks, Jr., of Massachusetts. The ninth and last vote on which Mr. Banks was elected, was as follows:

Nathaniel P. Banks, Jr., of Mass. -	53 votes.
John McLean, of Ohio - - - -	24 "
John C. Fremont, of Cal. - - -	18 "

Subsequently, Mr. Wm. F. Johnston, of Pennsylvania, was chosen to the office of Vice President.

"The Republican National Convention" assembled at the "Musical Fund Hall," Philadelphia, on Tuesday forenoon, Mr. Robert Emmett, of New York, was nominated temporary Chairman. In the afternoon Mr. Henry S. Lane, of Indiana, was appointed president of the Convention.

On Wednesday morning the resolutions and declaration of principles and aims of the Republican party were read. After a great deal of out spoken badgering and choked murmuring, the Convention got to the ballot in the evening. The result of the ballot was:

For Col. John C. Fremont - -	529 votes.
Judge John McLean - - - -	37 "
Hon. Wm. H. Seward - - -	1 "

On Thursday, W. L. Dayton, of New Jersey, was nominated for the office of Vice President.

The Arrival of the Thornton.

THIS excellent packet ship arrived in this port on Saturday evening with upwards of 750 souls on board. The Saints appeared in good health and lively spirits. The Presidency of the company seemed well satisfied with the conduct of those committed to their charge. Everything about them seemed comfortable and satisfactory. The multiplicity of business prevented Elder Willey from furnishing us with a detailed report of the voyage, and depending upon a prepared report we made only general inquiries.

Elder Willey speaks very highly of Captain Collins and his officers. Before leaving the ship the Saints presented the captain with an address, thanking him for his kind and gentlemanly bearing towards them. We were informed the address of the Saints to the captain was to be published, but we have not yet seen it or we should have given it a place in our columns. The subjoined speaks volumes to the credit of the Saints:

SIR: I must take the opportunity, ere we separate to express to you the high respect I entertain for the passengers (760 souls) on my ship, who are immediately under your guidance and direction, and to affirm that they are the finest body of emigrants I have ever had the pleasure to convey across the Atlantic—they have always been willing to do and act according to my wish, expressed by myself through you, and to render me any assistance that I have required from time to time.

All this I am sensible has arisen from your excellent management. I must also thank you for your assistance rendered to my officers, more especially to my surgeon, to whom you have lent your aid during his arduous duties; owing to this I cannot doubt much suffering has been alleviated. And now, sir, as you are about to leave my ship in a few hours, allow me to express to you my best wishes and hopes that you will be enabled to reach your destination in perfect safety, and find all those near and dear to you in the enjoyment of perfect health—this I am sure will be sufficient reward for your four years of absence and toil in the cause.

Please to express my good wishes to your counsellors, Messrs. Atwood and Ahmanson, wishing them like success and happiness with yourself. My officers, I believe, share with me in the above and will sign after me.

Sir, yours very respectfully,
CHAS. COLLINS, Commander,
B. W. WARD, Chief Officer.
JOHN W. WILLIAMS, M. D.
University of Oxford.

To JAMES G. WILLIE, Esq., President on board this ship, on behalf of the Latter Day Saints.

Elder Willey desired favorable mention of his Counsellors Atwood, Ahmanson and Clough, likewise, Elder John Chislett the Captain of the Guard. He returns his thanks to all the brethren who assisted him in the direction and protection of the Saints during the voyage. There were seven deaths on board, three marriages and three births. We regret not being able to furnish names, we are however, informed, that the deaths were all children but one—a very elderly lady, Mrs. Rachel Curtis.

Those of the company who tarry for the present in the States left the emigrant depot soon after their arrival, those who remain here found locations without difficulty and some have already found occupation. The company for Utah left on Tuesday evening, in good order and buoyant in spirits.

We are glad to be able to notice that Elder Nathan T. Porter, has recovered from his severe indisposition and has left with this company for his mountain home. Elder Levi Savage, who returned a short time since from the East Indies left in the same company. Bro. Savage has been laboring lately in the State of Connecticut and returns to Utah with our approbation and blessing.

Several of the city papers speak favorably of the company by the Thornton. We publish in another column the Herald's report. Mrs. Jervis's case there alluded to is before the Supreme Court. We have nothing particular to say presently about the matter, only if report be correct, Mr. Jervis, who is presently in this city, deserves to be richly cowhided for his beastly, filthy conduct towards his wife—the description of his lewdness would require us to use adjectives which would disgrace our columns.

Departures from Utah.

HON. ENOCH REESE, of Carson, and a small company started on the 17th inst for their residences in that region.

On the 22d, Orson Pratt, George A. Smith Ezra T. Benson and Erastus Snow, of the Twelve; Chief Justice J. F. Kinney and family, Joseph L. Heywood, U. S., Marshal, Secretary Babbitt, Judge Appleby, Truman O. Angell—Church Architect, Bishop A. O. Smoot, Elders Phinehas H. Young and Ira Eldredge, with many others, left for the States and other parts of the earth.

President B. Young visited the rendezvous at the mouth of Emigration kanyon, organized the company by appointing Bishop Smoot, captain; Elder Benson, chaplain; William Miller, captain of the guard; James Ure, clerk; and gave them his parting instructions and blessing.

Professor Pratt goes to Liverpool to relieve President F. D. Richards; Hon. Geo. A. Smith, Delegate from Utah, is en route for Washington, where, in connection with Hon. John Taylor, Editor of the "The Mormon," he will urge Utah's claims to be numbered with the Stars; and what loyal citizen does not love to have the Stars multiply on the broad folds of our national banner? Elder Snow is repairing to his Presidency in St. Louis, and will soon again issue the Luminary, whose light is so much needed in the western wilds.

Marshal Heywood and others are on an official trip to Washington, &c., &c.

It was truly cheering and encouraging to note the readiness and buoyancy of feeling with which our brethren exchanged the farewell for a season, and turned their backs upon true friends, children, wives and dearly prized homes to go forth in obedience to the requirements of Israel's God. Would the world but receive the message with the integrity, alacrity and understanding with which it is borne truth would soon revolutionize the earth.

We wish the brethren God speed to and in their various fields of labor, and anticipate their cordial reception by every person who prefers truth to error.

DESERET NEWS, April 23, 1856.

More Mormons.

THE good ship Thornton, from Liverpool, with seven hundred and fifty Mormons on board, arrived at this port yesterday, and the Saints were safely housed in the emigrants' retiring rooms at Castle Garden before night. They are a solid and comfortable looking body of passengers for the New Jerusalem of the Great Salt Lake. See our reporter's account in another column.

At this rate of increase—for the brethren appear to be sending out to the Salt Lake reinforcements at the rate of from twenty to thirty thousand a year—at this rate, we say, the Mormon Territory of Utah, upon the score of population, will probably be entitled to admission before Kansas, notwithstanding the fact that Utah appears, amid this Kansas fuss and fury, to be wholly overlooked. At all events they may expect at Washington, in a week or two, a formal application from the Saints of Utah for admission into the Union as a sovereign State, polygamy and all. And here comes in a nice question—nicer than niggers—between Congress and squatter sovereignty. Does Congress or does squatter sovereignty cover the question of polygamy? Does the Constitution reach it? What is to be done with it? The question will soon be put, and it will have to be met. We should in the meantime, like to have the opinion of some of our belligerent clergymen, so anxious about the nigger question in Kansas, whether under the constitution, a State can or cannot be admitted into the Union, the religion of which State allows a man two, five, ten or fifty wives at his discretion. Utah and the Saints must be looked after.—[N. Y. Herald June 17th.

We like amazingly the Herald's notion about "belligerent clergymen" giving their opinion on Utah's admission into the Union. They are so remarkably united in their interpretation of the Bible, we should think their interpretation of the Constitution would be beyond all price. Congress could not fail to be greatly assisted by the light of clerical opinions. What would the Herald think of getting "belligerent clergymen" into the Senate, like Bishops in the British House of Lords? Oh! we forgot, there is no national religion in the United States, and it would never do to have Unitarians and Trinitarians, Sprinklers and Dippers, Shakers and Quakers, and all the other ers and isms, in Congress. They would spoil the "peace and harmony" of that honorable body. Should anything of the sort ever take place, Washington might count on the opening of gutta percha cane stores.

Great Arrival of Mormons

Castle Garden filled with Latter Day Saints—A Runaway Wife and a Habeas Corpus, etc.

The packet ship Thornton, from Liverpool, arrived on Saturday bringing 750 Mormons, the most of whom are bound for Salt Lake. The passengers were landed at Castle Garden, where they remain until this morning, when they start in a body for Utah. Among them are 160 Swedes and Danes, and the remainder are composed of English and Scotch, the larger portion being English. They come from all parts of England, from the extreme north to the isle of Jersey, and consist of farmers, mechanics and laborers. Among the mechanics are weavers, carpenters, boot and shoemakers, joiners, miners, potters, &c. The Swedes are mostly farmers, with a few blacksmiths. Our reporter, who visited Castle Garden yesterday, was told by one of the Elders who came out with them, that they were mostly old converts, of ten or fifteen years standing, and were brought out at the expense of the Mormon Emigration fund. A good many, however, he stated, came out on their own expense. Some of them intend stopping here, but the majority are going direct to Utah. They are mostly families, and appear to belong to the better class of emigrants. There seemed to be a preponderance of females among them; so, indeed, there ought to be, to sustain the system of polygamy which prevails at Salt Lake. If Brigham Young should be in want of some fresh wives, we can promise him at least a dozen from this party whom he will not find it bad to take. The number of children, too, is very large, there being nearly one hundred under six years of age. There were three births on board the vessel during the voyage. The party is accompanied by several Elders, and Priests who are returning from their foreign missions. The chief of them is Elder James G. Willey, who has spent the last three or four years in England collecting this flock together, and who now returns to conduct them to the promised land.

[Elder W. has been laboring in England as stated by the reporter and is accompanied by a number from his pastorate but his relationship, with the company of the Thornton has only been since his appointment to the Presidency on board.—ED. OF MORMON.]

The captain of the Thornton speaks very highly of Mr. Willey's management of the Saints during the voyage. He divided the ship into seven wards, and appointed an Elder over each ward to attend to the temporal and spiritual wants of the brethren, and see that they did their praying and got their rations at regular hours. The lower deck was divided into three wards—the first ward being occupied by the Swedes and Danes, the second ward by the Scotch, and the third by the single men of all nations. The upper deck consisted of four wards, and was occupied by English families. Under this arrangement everything went on like clock-work, and the passengers were kept clean, orderly and pious. The only accident that happened was the three births aforesaid, and this the Elders state resulted from causes above and beyond their control.

Among the passengers was a Mrs. Jervis, from Herefordshire, England, who, it appears left her husband at home, and taking her two children with her, embarked in company with the Saints for the promised land. The husband, however, took the steamer and arrived here ahead of her. Yesterday, he entered a complaint before one of our courts, and a writ of habeas corpus was issued to bring up the children, and investigate the merits of the case.

Our reporter was informed by several of the Saints who knew Jervis in the old country that he was utterly unfit to have the guardianship of his children; that he treated his wife in the most brutal manner, and that this was the cause of her leaving him, &c, &c., all of which we received with some grains of allowance, although the Saints averred their willingness to swear to the same in court.

Pennsylvania.

ELDER JOHN F. SNEDAKER writes us from Reading, Berks Co., Pa., June 14. He has been traveling in the northern counties of that State, holding meetings and preaching in English and German, as opportunities were afforded. At the date of his letter he was with the Saints in Reading, whom he represents living faithfully to the principles of the Kingdom. The majority of outsiders he thinks are so fondly attached to this world's goods, that they have no time to think of anything but grasp, and seem to regret very much that they can't take their scratchings and scrapings to some other world. These feelings are not peculiar to Pennsylvania. It is everywhere the same. The nations have been so long without God that they have put their trust in this world's god—that is their best friend—mammon, and as they don't know anything about the world to come, they enjoy here Scheidam Schnapps, lager beer, and sour-crout.

Camp—Iowa City.

ELDER DAVID GRANT writes us from the camping ground, June 6th: "The S. Curling's company arrived in camp, June 2d, about 6 P. M., generally in good health and spirits. The camp band played some lively tunes as the company were entering the camping ground."

Arrivals from Utah.

ST. LOUIS, June 12, 1856.

HON. JOHN TAYLOR,—Dear Sir:—I have just arrived in this city per steamer "Polar Star," and have in possession the papers intrusted to my charge by the Convention to form a Constitution for the State of Deseret.

Professor Orson Pratt, Elders E. T. Benson, Erastus Snow, A. O. Smoot, Wm. Miller, John W. Coward, T. O. Angell, James Beck, Lorenzo Hatch, James Ure, James Palmer, Jacob Gibson, A. Grow, James Taylor, Samuel H. B. Smith, Miles Romney, Thomas Bladen and Brigham H. Young, also, Joseph L. Heywood, U. S. Marshal for Utah Territory, at the same time. We arrived at "Mormon Grove" on the 8th inst., and at Atchison, Kansas Territory, on the 9th. We left Utah on the 22d April. Universal health and prosperity in Deseret. Our company encountered a very heavy storm at the South Pass, which commenced on the 4th of May, and lasted three days with unabated fury. Our animals were kept alive by feeding them on bread and covering them with our bedding.

For a number of days we traveled in snow and our animals being weak delayed our journey to considerable extent.

We shall remain here for a few days, I will notify you of the time I shall expect to be in Washington. Elder E. T. Benson will accompany me and probably Elder O. Pratt, likewise, Marshal Heywood who is upon official business. I mail you a copy of the latest Deseret News.

We are all very much fatigued.

GEO. A. SMITH.

JUDGE APPLEBY writes us from Philadelphia, June 13, stating his arrival there the preceding evening, in company with Col. Babbitt, on their way to Washington. We are pleased to learn they are both well. The sketch of their trip is embodied in the above letter.

Nebraska Settlement.

SOME time ago Bishop Andrew Cunningham was appointed to select a company and go to the extreme western portion of the Nebraska Territory on the north side of, and as near the river Platte as good soil, water and timber could be obtained for a settlement. As I do not know Br. Cunningham's whereabouts at present, I take this method of informing him and those associated with him, that I hope nothing will prevent the carrying out of his instructions in relation to this company. There will also be other companies formed in other locations, so that it will not only facilitate the mails and the forwarding of emigration, but will also be a good opportunity for enterprising men to make themselves farms where they will be able to dispose of their produce for good prices. There will be captains appointed over all such companies. They will be expected also to go prepared to put in grain, build forts, and take with them the necessary implements of defence in a new country. It will be well for the brethren to reflect on these matters, about which I shall say more at another time.

JOHN TAYLOR.

Organization of a Branch of the Church.

A MEETING of the Priesthood and members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, residing at and around Norwalk and Westport, Conn., was held at Westport, June 8th, 1856, for the purpose of organizing a Branch of said Church. Conference opened with singing and prayer. Present, three Seventies, two Elders, one Priest. Elder Levi Savage was chosen to preside on the occasion, and Joseph Bouton, Jr., Clerk. The President stated the object of the meeting and gave much good instruction to the Saints, after which he nominated Elder E. R. Young, of Westport, to be Presiding Elder of the Branch, which was carried unanimously. Elder Young then selected Elders Joseph Bouton Jr., and Francis Sproul, as Counsellors, who were unanimously sustained by the Saints. Brother A. B. Bradley was then sustained in his office of Priest and appointed to act as a Teacher to the Branch. Elder John Armstrong was likewise appointed to act in the capacity of Teacher.

The following Resolutions were then unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we recognize and sustain Bro. Brigham Young, as President of the whole Church, and Bros. Heber C. Kimball and J. M. Grant, as his Councillors.

Resolved, That we will sustain the Twelve Apostles.

Resolved, That this Branch be known by the name of the Westport and Norwalk Branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Thomas Cornelia and Mary Dobbs were then confirmed members of the Church. The officers elected were then set apart to their several callings, under the hands of the Elders. Conference adjourned sine die.

ELDER LEVI SAVAGE, President.
JOSEPH BOUTON, JR., Clerk.

Gas! Smoke and Distant Thunder!

THE Republican Convention embodies in its platform the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Constitution confers upon Congress the sovereign power over the Territories of the United States, for their government, and that in the exercise of this power it is both the right and the duty of Congress to prohibit in the Territory those twin relics of barbarism, polygamy and slavery.

Now, gentlemen, don't get in too great a hurry! Keep cool! The mosquito season is close upon you. Too great exertion in summer is dangerous. If you get the South, Kansas and Utah into your mouths all at once, you may fever in the digestion. Take a kind word from a friend and remember the Russian adage, "Don't sell the bear's skin till you've caught him."

Correspondence from Texas

ELLIS COUNTY, May 26, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR BROTHER TAYLOR—I now sit down to inform you how we are progressing in Texas. We held meetings two days (24th and 25th) of the present month; four seventies were present, viz.: Homer Duncan, John Ostler, M. J. Snedaker and William C. Moody. We spoke of the scattering of Israel and the restitution of all things spoken of by the holy prophets. The spirit of God was made manifest in our midst, and we had a time of rejoicing and as great a union of feeling as I ever saw, which was manna to our souls while in this far-off land. We then proceeded to finish out the organization of a Branch of the Church, commenced by B. L. Clapp, with eighteen members, including three Elders and one Priest, and called it Ellis County Branch. We attended to the ordinances of God's house, confirmed one member, blessed four children, and partook of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Much interest was manifested by the congregation, and prospects are quite flattering for a good work to be done in Texas. We find many good, warm-hearted friends who only require, we are persuaded, to know the truth and they will embrace it. All the Elders present are buoyant in the work of the Lord and determined to roll forward the work, God being our helper. Brothers B. L. Clapp and Preston Thomas are now on their way to the Valley with a company from Texas—all well and in good spirits when last heard from. Many more are making ready to emigrate next season. God bless you, Bro. Taylor; I am, as ever, your fellow-laborer in the gospel of Christ, HOMER DUNCAN.

P.S.—All the Elders present join me in sending their love and respects to you.

Correspondence of Judge Thomas.

En route for Utah.

CHOCKTOW NATION, Southside Canadian River, May 25, 1856.

To the Editor of the MORMON:—

DEAR SIR,—I take up my pen to inform you and (through the columns of your paper) our numerous friends, of our whereabouts, progress, &c. We left our encampment on Matagarda, on the 7th of April, and since that time have every day continued our travels except Sundays and three other days. We are six hundred and seventy-five miles from our starting place. We crossed the Colorado river at Lagrange, the Brazos at Waco, the Trinity at Dallas, and Red river at Preston. For three weeks we had very rainy weather, in the northern part of Texas, during which we were wallowing in the black Prairie mud, which greatly retarded our progress. We were hindered two days by high water, and one day in waiting for the Saints to join us from Washington County. We were joined by one family of Saints from the Guadaloupe valley on the 12th of April, and by the Saints from Washington Co. on the 21st. When we arrived near the place of rendezvous for the Saints on the St. Gabriel's river we found they were gone; on our arrival in Ellis Co. we found Bro. Clapp with his party were gone about three weeks previous, and the Saints from the St. Gabriel had joined his party; when we crossed Red river we were informed they were just two weeks ahead, and when we arrived here, we were informed by the Indians they were about eight days ahead; so it seems we are gaining on them; what route they propose going I am not correctly informed. Sometimes I learn from travelers they design going up the Arkansas river, and then again that they are going up by Atchinson, and the Platt routes.

We have at present thirty-four persons and eight wagons in camp. Br. John Ostler travaled with us from the Southern coast as far as Dallos County, and then returned to join the Elders in Ellis Co. He is a good and wise man, and rendered us very great service whilst with us. The Saints became so attached to him that the whole camp deeply regretted his leaving us to go back, and he likewise desired to go home this year; but when he learned of his appointment by the Texas Conference to stay another year, he seemed reconciled to stay and labor another season in Texas.

Whilst we were passing through Ellis Co., Bro. Homer Duncan and Bro. Snedaker paid us a visit in camp, and spent a night with us; the hearts of the Saints were cheered up by a discourse from each; they had been laboring with considerable success in that part of Texas; about fifteen persons had been baptised, and a pretty fair prospect of others following their example. Bro. Duncan informed me that he had many calls for preaching. Bro. William Moody had gone to Eastern Texas; these seem to be all the Elders now in that State.

Our camp moves along very harmoniously; we have not had a jar since we started; almost no sickness. The hearts of the Saints rejoice from day to day, and the vast prairies and groves are made to reverberate with the songs of Zion as the Saints journey along through the Indian lands. No serious accident has befallen us, and truly the hand of the Lord has been with us for good.

The Canadian river is the boundary between the Chockton and Creek nations of Indians. This morning a notable Creek Indian came into camp, and I had a good deal of conversation with him; on his learning who we were he invited me to preach to his people this afternoon. I consented, and he has gone away to assemble his friends.

It is Sunday to-day, and the whole camp, animals and all, seem to enjoy the rest, after a hard week's travel. I always rest on Sundays, and dedicate the day to rest and worship of Almighty God, but never rest on other days, except some unavoidable circumstance interfere. We feel that we have a long journey before us, and it will take a long time, with a great deal of exertion and industry to accomplish it; but I hardly think my old friends with whom I have often crossed the plains, will charge me with not using sufficient diligence. We are now some 45 miles below Fort Gibson, and expect to pass that fort on the third day from this, where we hope to receive letters and papers from many of our friends. For some time we have had no news from any quarter, only what we could gather from the Indians and an occasional traveler whom we have met. The latest MORMON that I have seen bears date 22d March, and the latest dates from Utah, was some time in January. Judging from the clouds of grasshoppers we have seen for the last three hundred miles, our friends in Utah can have none this year, for they must have all emigrated to this country.

I ask your indulgence for drawing so largely upon your columns, in publishing so long a letter, and also the privilege to publish another, with a list of all the names of the Saints in camp when we leave the Frontier.

May Heaven's choicest blessings rest upon you, and crown your labors in New York with complete success; and may we be gathered to our mountain homes in safety, with all scattered Saints, and stand at last in the Celestial Kingdom of our God, is the prayer of your devoted Brother in the New and Everlasting Covenant. PRESTON THOMAS.

Narrow Escape on the Harlem Railroad.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

I HAVE been requested by several of the passengers passing over the Harlem road on Saturday last, to give you the particulars of a wonderful escape from a dreadful catastrophe on that road.

The train leaving New York at 15 minutes past 2 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, consisting of four large passenger cars, with the usual apparatus, was approaching the Harlem bridge at its usual speed, the flagman displayed the "white flag," signifying that the "draw" was closed, and all was right, the engineer drove on, as was right on his part, when he, faithful to the responsibilities of his position, kept his eye on the lookout, and behold! he discovers the draw wide open. Instant and utter destruction seemed ready to swallow up himself and all of his two hundred and more passengers. But he was equal to the emergency; sounded the alarm to man the brakes, and with engine reversed, succeeded in stopping at the very brink of the gulf which yawned beneath them.

When the passengers discovered the miraculous escape which they had made, and the imminent danger that threatened them, they were enraged at the imbecile and careless management of the road, and the wicked carelessness of this reckless flagman. He is still retained in the service of the company, and allowed to jeopardize the lives of thousands passing over that bridge daily.

The individual holding a position of this nature, and guilty of such gross—almost wilful—neglect, not only deserves to be driven from a post he has disgraced, but should be driven from the community which he has so basely betrayed by his neglect.

The Harlem Railroad Company is becoming more and more notorious for the utter inefficiency which pervades every department of the road. The end is not far off.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

In consequence of the great political commotions of those times, Italy, the "Garden of Europe," upon which bounteous Nature has bestowed so many physical advantages, suffered to the utmost extremity, fields, that in times of peace were teeming with the golden fruits of civilisation, lay uncultivated and barren, in fact the whole country was a poverty-stricken peninsula, from which lamentable circumstances misery, as it were, gnawed the very core of society. In consideration of which, Maecemas being aware of Virgil's great knowledge and experience, set him to write the Georgics (rural poems on agricultural pursuits,) in order to induce the people to devote their time more to husbandry, as the only means left to save Italy from utter ruin. The publication of this remarkable production was received by the public so favorably, that in reality from that epoch the era of agricultural improvement commenced, Italy recovered from the desolation of wars and strife, and all went on well. The Georgics are the best of Virgil's Works, not only on account of their beautiful language, but on account of the reasonable suggestions for the rise of husbandry, so that the rules laid down in that inestimable book are practiced among the leading nations of the world in our own day. Virgil spent seven years in composing that great work.

After having rested himself a few years from his arduous mental labors, he commenced writing the Æneid in which he has portrayed in glowing colors Augustus' character by the introduction of Æneas; in fact, he has given the most correct account of Roman history, with that of several other nations, from the earliest ages down to his own, so that he is looked upon as one of the best and most erudite historians of the Roman era. The Æneid is an epic (heroic) poem, and is one of the noblest compositions in poetry. After having finished the Æneid, the poet went to Greece, where he purposed spending the remainder of his life in the study of philosophy, in the contemplation of Nature and its Supreme Creator. After a short residence in Greece, he got sick. Augustus returning home from his Eastern expedition, Virgil consented to accompany him home; but on his arrival in Brundusium, he departed this life, in the year of Rome 735, and in the fifty-first year of his age; his remains were interred at Naples, where the traveller can see his tomb to this day. He was one of the best and wisest men of the age, mild, unassuming, even bashful, and extremely temperate, but of a very frail constitution.

Cicero was one of the most eminent statesmen, orators and philosophers of his age, of the greatest integrity, urbane and kind to every one, and always desirous of promoting the happiness of his fellow citizens. He devoted all his time to improving the condition of the people, that had chosen him one of their leaders. His greatest works are the Orationes (orations pro Roscio) and others, in which he was advocating the cause of some compromised citizens and endeavoring his best to acquit them. His natura deorum (nature of gods) is evidently a great proof of his immense intellectual powers, and of his close application to the study of natural philosophy, of course it cannot be expected that the hypothesis introduced by him are to be all correct, very far from it; but there is a vast amount of intellect displayed in setting forth his ideas on Deity and Nature. Independent of the above works, Cicero wrote the Laelius or de amicitia (on friendship,) de officiis ann de senectute (on the duties of man and old age,) the Laelius is to my judgement one of his best compositions, showing the noble, amiable character of that man who has done so much for the welfare of his country. All his works are a pattern of philological skill and experience, both language and style are simple, but sublime and strictly correct.

Although Cicero had bestowed great and lasting benefits on the Romans, and they were under great obligations to him on account of his persevering, untiring zeal for the rise of the mighty Republic, he had his enemies, that concocted the plans, by which they might get rid of that noble mind, he was assassinated and thus fell a victim of private hatred and intrigue. When will man learn to realize his important position on the earth, when will the idea strike his mind, that God through the instrumentality of his angels sees and watches the movements of us pigmies, and that we are responsible for all our actions! The laws of the Great Jehovah are unchangeable; as well might we try to unhinge the machinery of the universe, toss from their fountains the everlasting mountains, pull the sun from his place in the firmament, or extinguish the eternal flight of the stars of heaven, as expect to see God deviate from the course he has once taken, hence we find, that as Shakspeare says, the Gods are just, our vices are the punishments to scourge us, that is to say, every evil deed has its fatal results, as well as every good and noble action has its salutary consequences, and so it was in relation to the Roman Republic, Cicero's assassination proved to be a curse and not a blessing. The man that had stood at the helm of affairs, calmly contemplating how to steer the frail bark of Government through the boisterous waves of political commotions, was gone, and no other found to take his place.

Horace, as the Romans called him, Horatius, was one of the best poets of the Golden Age, his works are not voluminous, they embrace the Odes (poems that were sung to the lyre,) the satyres, epistles, and his ideas on poetry. He describes in his compositions the manners and customs of those times, with beautiful and correct delineations of the leading characters of the classical era, criticising sharply the foolishness of man, the inconsistency of their actions, and showing the necessity of a social improvement. The variety of metre, of subject, ideas, scenes, the beauty and harmony of the language, made him a pattern of Latin poetry, and any one, that desires to get familiar with classical lore, will do well to engage in the perusal and study of Horace. He was a man of rare talent, of a great suavity of manners, affable, kind and modest in intercourse with his fellow-citizens. His name is held to this day in reverential remembrance by the literary world.

Julius Cæsar, one of the most eminent generals, statesmen and historians of his age, has given a very interesting and faithful account of his campaigns in Germany, France, and other neighboring countries. By his command the Roman eagle was carried to England, Hibernia, to the dreary regions of the north, where the sun of civilizatien had not yet risen, where superstition, barbarism and ignorance were stalking through the different tribes of European savages; where the images of death and annihilation came to mingle themselves with even the most smiling scenes of Nature. He was happy in seeing the train of his thoughts and actions bring forth so many beautiful results, he introduced the Roman alphabet in England; he destroyed the bloody altars of the Druids, it was only a pity that his mind was like a mountain-torrent, dashing and chafing against the rocks that impede its source; ambition, that has beguiled so many to follow the headlong career to destruction, led him to the pinacle of earthly greatness, and hurled him from the same in the abyss of death; he was stabbed in the midst of the Senate by those, whom he supposed to be his friends. His works are both in language and style equal, if not superior to the best of his age, and are generally studied as patterns of the classics in colleges.

Latest From Europe

By the arrival of the America at Halifax we have news up to the 9th inst. The popular talk in Europe is the position of England and the United States. Mr. Crampton was expected, but the English Government had not been officially informed of his dismissal. In the Lords and Commons the Cabinet ministers were interrogated on the subject but respectfully begged to be allowed to retain for the present their own counsel lest it should complicate matters instead of bettering them. The indulgent Lords and Commons agreed to "wait a little longer."

Public opinion is against Palmer, as about a dozen other persons of his acquaintance, with whom he has been related, have disappeared under rather suspicious circumstances.

From Venezuela.

CARACAS, May 21, 1856.

THE Congress was dissolved on the 8th inst., after the passage of an act increasing the number of provinces from sixteen to twenty-one, declaring the functions of all the old Governors at an end, and authorizing the President to appoint new ones for the twenty-one provinces. All members of Congress, either of the House or Senate, whether their time had expired or not, were also to cease their functions, so that an entire new Congress may be elected in August. It is understood that the President is to designate the members who are to be elected through the newly appointed Governors; and of course no citizen will presume to vote for member who is not thus nominated.

The President has not been declared "Dictator," as was contemplated, but the new Congress will be under his immediate control, and will act precisely as he desires, thus relieving him from any responsibility to the people. Who can say after this that his Excellency General Jose Tadoe Monagas is not a wise man? We shall see what another year will bring forth.

The cholera has returned to Caracas with all its direful consequences. The troops have been almost annihilated.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, June 12, 1856.

Mr. Hamlin of Me., rose and asked to be excused from serving as Chairman of the Committee on Commerce. He said for the nine years he had held a seat in the senate he had almost been a silent member. Upon the subject that had so much agitated the country he had rarely uttered a word. He loved his country more than he loved any party—more than anything that could agitate and disturb its harmony. Although he believed the repeal of the Missouri compromise was a great moral and political wrong, unequalled in the annals of the legislation of this country, and unequalled in the history of almost any country, still, with a desire to promote harmony, concord and brotherly feeling, he sat quietly amid all the exciting debate which led to that fatal result, and opposed it, not by his voice, but by a consistent, steady and uniform vote—not only in accordance with his own convictions, but in accordance with the instructions of his Legislature, passed by almost a unanimous vote. But the thing was done in violation of the principles of that party with whom he had always acted, and in violation of the solemn pledges of the President of the United States in his inaugural address. Since, however, that wrong had been endorsed by the Cincinnati Convention in its consummation and in its results, he felt it his duty to declare that he could no longer maintain party associations with any party that insisted upon such doctrines, and could support no man for President who avowed and recognized those doctrines; and with whatever power God had endowed him, it should be used in the coming contest in oposition to that party.

The motion to excuse was agreed to.

Mr. Butler of S. C., said the necessity for his addressing the Senate on this occasion was brought about by events over which he had no control—events which have grown out of a controversy for the commencement of which the Senator from Massachusetts, not now in his seat (Mr. Sumner,) should be held exclusively responsible by his country and his God. He had delivered a speech the most extraordinary that had ever had utterance in any legislative body recognising the sanctions of law and a constitution. At that time he (Butler) was not present. What he would have done if he had been it would now be perfectly idle to say, because no one can substitute the deliberations of a subsequent period for what might have taken place on the impulse of the moment. His impression was, that if he had been here, he should have asked that Senator before finishing some of the paragraphs personally applicable to him, to pause; and if he (Sumner) had gone on, he should have demanded of him to retract or to modify the offensive remarks, so as to bring them within the sphere of Parliamentary propriety. If, then Sumner had refused this, what he (Butler) would have done he could not say; but one thing he knew, that was, he would not have submitted to it. To what mode of redress he would have resorted he could not tell; he would at least have assumed (upon all the responsibilities of a Senator from South Carolina,) the consequences, let them fall where they might. But instead of that, that speech had involved a friend and kinsman (Brooks) to the extent that he had been obliged to put his fortune and life at stake.

Mr. Butler vindicated the course of his kinsman Mr. Brooks: exhonorated himself from the charge of undignified language in his former speech to which Senator Sumner replied and for which he received Mr. Brooks's visitation: and charged the Senator from Massachusetts with mistaking the affairs of South Carolina or being ignorant of them.

Without concluding, Mr. Butler yielded the floor for adjournment.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

One hundred and six members were present—not being a quorum, the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. June 14.

Mr. Thurston of Rhode Island, Mr. Dean of Connecticut, and Mr. Trafton of Massachusetts, severally presented the resolutions of those States in relation to recent occurrences in Congress and Kansas. Adjourned to Wednesday.

SENATE. June 16.

MR BROWN submitted a resolution, which was adopted, calling on the President to communicate a copy of the instructions to Mr. Buchanan "on free ships making free goods," and Mr. Buchanan's letter to Lord Clarendon on the same subject.

Mr. Clayton said it would be remembered he had carefully abstained from uttering during the present session one word calculated to add to the excitement growing out of the present distressing occurrences in Kansas. He had endeavored to conciliate all parties, in order that he might on some suitable occasion present a measure of harmony, justice and peace. He now rose for the purpose of making the proposition in the sincerity of an honest heart, desiring to propitiate no particular party nor section. He would not present his bill as a partisan of any candidate for the Presidency, but like the sailor, he desired to go in a gang by himself.

He was the Representative of a little State, (Delaware,) which occupies middle ground between the Northern and Southern portions of the confederacy. The northern country of that State, with fifty thousand inhabitants, has scarcely one hundred slaves. The southern is grossly pro-slavery as Georgia. The middle country is the one which gave him his birth, and is conservative and fairly divided in opinion; but the whole of that little State is deeply anxious to preserve the Union and prevent rupture, if possible.

He had objections to Kansas coming into the Union now as a sovereign State. One reason was there is not a federal population of twenty thousand, exclusive of Indians and others, not taxed. There is a feeling in the North which if suffered to continue will result in serious injury to the common Union. He stated his objections both to Mr. Douglas' and Mr. Seward's bills, which propose the admission of Kansas into the Union, and referred to the latest accounts from that Territory, asking, shall we sit by when forty men were recently slain, and the excitement constantly increasing, and towns sacked and plundered, without endeavoring to avert this shameful condition of things. It is only by justice that peace can be restored.

Mr. Clayton said he submitted his bill as supplimentary to the act to organize Nebraska and Kansas.

The bill brovides that the Secretary of State shall cause a census to taken, making one thousand persons the basis for one Representative in the lower branch of the Territorial Legislature and two thousand for the upper. Legal voters must be bona fide residents of the Territory three months, and residents of their respective Election Districts one month before each election. After the apportionment, the Governor is to issue his proclamation directing the election of members of the Legislative Assembly, such election to be held not less than fifty nor more than sixty days after the date of proclamation.

No law shall remain in force violative of the great pridciple asserted in the Kansas-Nebraska bill relative to non-intervention on the subject of slavery, or whereby the people shall be prohibited from a free and full discussion of their own domestic institutions or interests, or whereby said people shall be prohibited from advocating or denying the extension or propriety of prohibiting slavery in the Territory, or be visited or threatened with any penalty or punishment, nor any test oath required relative to the Fugitive Slave law or any other law of Congress. Trial by jury shall be in accordance with the common law, and no challenge or objection to a juror shall avail which is not authorized by the rules of the common law, any statute to the contrary notwithstanding. The bill provides that when the Territory contains 93,420 inhabitants, the people shall be authorized to call a Convention for the formation of a State Constitution.

Mr. Butler caused to be read a letter from Dr. Boyle to him, complaning that the note of Dr. Lindsley, read at the instance of Mr. Wilson on Friday, did him injustice. Dr. Boyle says that Dr. Lindsley himself, on the 30th of May, informed him that there was "not much the matter" with Mr. Sumner. Dr. Boyle incloses a letter from Dr. Miller, for the purpose of showing that Mr. Sumner's condition has not been critical as has been represented by Dr. Lindsley.

Mr. Adams made a speech in support of his bill proposing to extend the term of naturalization to twenty-one years, and exclude foreign paupers and criminals from voting, in order to prevent these and European serfs from controlling elections, thus perilling our liberties. He said the South are more interested in this subject than the North, and essayed to prove the assertion by reference to statistics.

Mr. James presented the resolutions of the Rhode Island Legislature, condemning the assault on Mr. Sumner by Mr. Brooks. He said while he had the honor to hold a seat in the Senate, he should defend here or elsewhere, if need be, the freedom of debate.

Mr. Brown remarked—He had not seen on the part of any one an attempt to restrain the utmost freedom of debate. If a man departs from his legitimate sphere to make an attack upon another, he must hold himself responsible and take the consequences.

After some debate on the non-responsibility of Senators out of the Senate for language used in debate, the resolutions were ordered printed. Adjourned till Thursday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

June 18th.

Mr. Harrison introduced a resolution requesting the President to inform the House what measures, if any, have been taken under the act of Congress appropriating twenty-five thousand dollars to procure from Hiram Powers the sculptor, some work of art to ornament the Capital. Adopted.

Mr. Grow, of Pa., said that for some days past there had appeared in the public prints what purports to be a letter from Governor Reeder to him. In justice to Mr. Reeder, and to vindicate himself from an imputation of gross breach of confidence in publishing a private communication, he declared that no letter had been received by him from Mr. Reeder on any subject whatever. He made this explanation that the forgery may be known to the public.

Mr. Phelps, of Mo., said the letter to which the gentleman just referred was addressed to Mr. Grove, of Kansas, purporting to have been written from this city by Mr. Reeder, and in which allusion is made to the Wyandot fleet.

Mr. Grow, replied that his object was merely to clear himself from any connection with the lettter.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, gave notice that he would, on next Monday, endeavor to take up the report of the Select Committee on the Sumner assault. Adjourned.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Cornelille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là. dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

The Rival Sisters of the Heart.

BY FIGARO.

Two chambers has the human heart,
Where Joy and Sorrow ever dwell;
Close they nestle, yet apart,
Each within her silent cell.

Is laughing Joy in hers awake,
(For they never wake together!)
Sorrow then her rest doth take,
E'en as dark and sunny weather.

Merry-hearted Joy, beware!
Lest thou wake thy sister sleeper;
Let thy laugh be soft and fair;
Slumber best becomes the weeper.

Mr. Buchanan's Acceptance of the Nomination for the Presidency.

THE Committee appointed by the Democratic Convention to inform Mr. Buchanan of his nomination, have received the following letter in reply.

WHEATLAND, NEAR LANCASTER, }
June 16, 1856. }

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 13th inst., informing me officially of my nomination by the Democratic National Convention, recently held at Cincinnati, as the Democratic candidate for the office of President of the United States. I shall not attempt to express my feelings which I entertain towards my Democratic fellow-citizens, for having deemed me worthy of this—the highest political honor on earth—an honor such as the people of no other country have the power to bestow. Deeply sensible of the vast and varied responsibility attached to the station, especially at the present crisis in our affairs, I have carefully refrained from seeking the nomination, either by word or by deed. Now that it has been offered by the Democratic party, I accept it with diffidence in my own abilities, but with an humble trust that, in the event of my election, I may be enabled to discharge my duty in such a manner as to allay domestic strife, preserve peace and friendship with foreign nations, and promote the best interests of the Republic.

In accepting the nomination, I need scarcely say that I accept in the same spirit the resolutions constituting the platform of principles erected by the Convention. To this platform I intend to confine myself throughout the canvass, believing that I have no right, as the candidate of the Democratic party, by answering interrogatives, to present new and different issues before the people.

It will not be expected that, in this answer, I should specially refer to the subject of each of the resolutions; and I shall, therefore, confine myself to the two topics now most prominently before the people.

And, in the first place, I cordially concur in the sentiments expressed by the Convention on the subject of civil and religious liberty. No party founded on religious or political intolerance towards one class of American citizens, whether in our own or in a foreign land, can long continue to exist in this country. We are all equal before God and the Constitution, and the dark spirit of despotism and bigotry which would create odious distinctions among our fellow-citizens, will be speedily rebuked by a free and enlightened public opinion.

The agitation on the question of Domestic Slavery has too long distracted and divided the people of this Union and alienated their affections from each other. This agitation has assumed many forms since its commencement, but it now seems to be directed chiefly to the Territories; and judging from its present character, I think we may safely anticipate that it is rapidly approaching a "finality." The recent legislation of Congress respecting domestic Slavery, derived, as it has been, from the original and pure fountain of legitimate political power, the will of the majority, promises ere long to allay the dangerous excitement. This legislation is founded upon principles, as ancient as Free Government itself, and in accordance with them, has simply declared that the people of a Territory, like those of a State, shall decide for themselves, whether Slavery shall or shall not exist within the limits.

The Nebraska-Kansas act does no more than give the force of law to this elementary principle of self-government; declaring it to be "the true intent and meaning of this act not to legislate Slavery into any Territory or State, nor to exclude it therefrom; but to leave the people thereof perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States." This principle will surely not be controverted by any party professing devotion to popular Government. Besides, how vain and illusory would any other principle prove in practice in regard to the Territories! This is apparent from the fact admitted by all, that after a Territory shall have entered the Union and become a State, no Constitutional power would then exist which could prevent it from either abolishing or establishing Slavery, as the case may be, according to its sovereign will and pleasure.

Most happy would it be for the country if this long agitation were at an end. During its whole progress it has produced no practical good to any human being, while it has been the source of great and dangerous evils. It has alienated and estranged one portion of the Union from the other, and has even seriously threatened its very existence. To my own personal knowledge, it has produced the impression among foreign nations that our great and glorious confederacy is in constant danger of dissolution. This does us serious injury, because acknowledged power and stability always command respect among nations, and are the best securities against unjust aggression, and in favor of the maintenance of honorable peace.

May we not hope that it is the mission of the Democratic Party, now the only surviving conservative party of the country, ere long to overthrow all sectional parties, and restore the peace, friendship and confidence which prevailed in the good old time among the different members of the confederacy. Its character is strictly national, and it, therefore, asserts no principle for the guidance of the Federal Government which is not adopted or sustained by its members in each and every State. For this reason it is everywhere the same determined foe of all geographical parties, so justly dreaded by the Father of his Country. From its very nature it must continue to exist as long as there is a Constitution and a Union to preserve. A conviction of these truths has induced many of the purest, the ablest and most independent of our former opponents, who have differed from us in times gone by, upon old and extinct party issues, to come into our ranks and devote themselves, with us, to the cause of the Constitution and the Union. Under these circumstances, I most cheerfully pledge myself, should the nomination of the Convention be ratified by the people, that all the power and influence constitutionally possessed by the Executive shall be exerted in a firm but conciliatory spirit during the single term I shall remain in office, to restore the same harmony among the sister States which prevailed before the apple of discord, in the form of Slavery agitation, had been cast into their midst. Let the members of the family abstain from intermeddling with the exclusive domestic concerns of each other, and cordially unite, on the basis of perfect equality among themselves, in promoting the great national objects of common interest to all, and the good work will be instantly accomplished.

In regard to our foreign policy, to which you have referred in your communication—it is quite impossible for any human foreknowledge to prescribe positive rules in advance, to regulate the conduct of a future administration in all the exigencies which may arise in our various and ever changing relations with foreign powers. The Federal Government must of necessity exercise a sound discretion in dealing with international questions as they may occur; but this under the strict responsibility which the Executive must always feel to the people of the United States and the judgement of posterity. You will therefore excuse me for not entering into particulars, whilst I heartily concur with you in the general sentiment, that our foreign affairs ought to be conducted with such wisdom and firmness as to assure the prosperity of the people at home, whilst the interests and honor of our country are wisely but inflexibly maintained abroad. Our foreign policy ought ever to be based upon the principle of doing justice to all nations, and requiring justice from them in return; and from this principle I shall never depart.

Should I be placed in the Executive Chair, I shall use my best exertions to cultivate peace and friendship with all nations, believing this to be our brightest policy as well as our imperative duty; but at the same time, I shall never forget that in case the necessity should arise, which I do not now apprehend, our national rights and national honor must be preserved at all hazards at any sacrifice.

Firmly convinced that a special Providence governs the affairs of nations, let us humbly implore his continued blessing upon our country, and that he may avert from us the punishment we justly deserve for being discontented and ungrateful while enjoying privileges above all nations, under such a Constitution and such a Union as has never been vouchsafed to any other people.

Yours, very respectfully,
JAMES BUCHANAN.

The Emperor of Russia in Berlin.

THE Berlin correspondent of the London Times, in giving an account of the Czar's late visit to Berlin, thus describes his personal appearance:

The Emperor hardly looks so old as he is—38; appears to be about 5 feet 10 inches high, rather slight than stout, and by no means of the athletic form of his father; his countenance, when not deformed by the Prussian Lancer's cap, as I at first saw him, is expressive of mildness and goodness and a certain degree of conscientious perseverance. Possibly there may be at other times a greater appearance of imposing energy than it just now wears, for, according to all accounts, he suffers very much from the fatigue that his present position entails upon him. I have seen him again to-day twice, he was returning from the Kreuzberg and shortly after as he was going out again to Potsdam. On each occasion he was seated in the corner of an open baroche, in the one instance with his brother Michael, in the other with his adjutant seated on his right side and somewhat forward, so as to recieve and return the salutes of the people. The object of the Emperor seemed to be to gain a little time and rest for himself, by escaping unnoticed and unrecognized; and in by far the majority of instances he was successful, and long after that unostentatious young officer of Lancers had driven by the people remained standing and gaping for the Emperor. On each occasion he was attended simply by two mounted policemen, to clear the way, and followed by another open carriage with his adjutants and attendants, but with no guard of honor or escort.

I mentioned, yesterday, the Emperor's habit of drawing back from the tiresome, fatiguing honors thurst upon him wherever he goes. This was evidenced very plainly at the Opera on Saturday night. The royal state box, which here occupies the entire centre of the premier tier, was brilliantly lit up, and sparkled with Court dignitaries in stars and order, and dashing uniforms, so that all eyes were kept turned in that direction, even for some time after the Emperor, accompanied by the King, had entered and taken their seats in a private proscenium box. As soon as he was noticed, however, the whole audience (which by the way, was almost exclusively military) rose from their seats and gave him three rounds of cheering. The Emperor, evidently very much surprised at the warmth of the greeting, rose from his seat and turned towards the King as if attributing this welcome to him, and appealing for information. The King, however, gave a deprecatory wave of the hand, which implied that not he, but his guest was the subject of this ovation, on which the Emperor bowed to the audience several times in acknowledgement. While the national anthem was being played by the orchestra, the Emperor remained standing at the King's side; and at the end of it the audience volunteered him three rounds more.

In various Paris letters I observe it mentioned that this visit of the Emperor of Russia to this Court is looked on as a political demonstration against the triple treaty of April 15. There is very little ground for this idea, as far as I can see, of the state of affairs. The real nature of the visit is that of a private and family event; the presence of so many distinguished persons here at the same time arises from the circumstances of the navigation of the Bay of Finland having been reopened just at that time that the Empress was paying her visit here, which of itself, in connection with the Emperor's visit to Warsaw, invited the latter's coming here just now if he was to come at all. As any alliance between Russia and Prussia of any more intimate kind than the mere amicable relations which are kept up in spite of many grievances felt by the side of the Russian frontier is totally out of the question, and least of all against England and France, from whose power Russia can no more shield Prussia than she can Russia, it is totally groundless to say that the demonstration which is connected with all visits of crowned heads is in this case directed against the triple treaty of April 15. On the other hand, there can be no doubt or hesitation in pronouncing it a demonstration on the part of Russia against Austria, not only for her joining in the late treaty, but also for her conduct towards Russia in the late war. The nature of the political demonstration is this—that it is an exhibition of the most intimate family and friendly relations to the Court of Prussia at the time when the relations of the Court of Austria have fallen to the zero of coolness. Further than this goes, I believe it would be incorrect to call it a political demonstration.

Treatment of Women in Uncivilized Countries.

OF all indications of the tyrany of the stronger and of the suffering of the weaker sex, that of infant betrothal exhibits the grosest violation of personal right, for it subjects women at once to the utmost degradation; she not being treated as yet as a person having thought, passions, or will, but as transferable property. Among the aboriginies of New Holland, and Western Australia, this custom is carried to an outrageous extent, the female children being always betrothed a few days after birth: and, from the moment of the betrothal, the parents cease to have any control over the future settlement of their child. Should the husband die during the infancy of the girl, she then belongs to his heir. This custom is also common in China, the Sogroup, and in New Zeland. But of all the methods of at once obtaining a wife and a slave, that of purchase is most universal. It prevailed over the vast continent of North and South America, and many of the isles of the Pacific; to this day it is carried on in Africa, and practiced by both black and brown races of the Indian Archipelago, and by nearly all the nations of Asia. Not the least remarkable feature of this traffic is the singularly low price at which the article may be procured. The Tambourkie women are marked at one ox, or two cows; the ladies of Yea (one of the Loyalty isles) are valued at as much timber as will build a large canoe; while the African women of the Mandigo tribe are each equivalent to two cows, two iron bars, and 200 kolla nuts. But these latter women are evidently rising in market, since in 1620 they fetched 50 nuts. At New Guinea a wife is worth ten slaves, and is, therefore, a costly article; but in the Arru islands she may be had much cheaper, with this drawback, however, that no credit is given. Among the lower class in these islands the common price is a whale's tooth, or a musket, and this once paid, gives the husband such an entire right to her person, that he may kill and eat her, in any excess of love or dearth of provisions.

A Phase of Life.

PARIS, Monday, June 2, 1856.

HOW RUSSIA BREAKS THE PEACE.

THE peace is scarcely declared and already Russia commences hostilities. A complete razzia has been made on the pretty actresses of Paris, for the theatres of St. Petersburg, and the hostilities do not even stop here. Before the war a certain number of the beauties of the Demi-monde, that class of aristocratic beauties who hold a floating position between respectability and its opposite, were in the habit of emigrating annually to the city of the Czars, with ambitious views in their heads. This emigration, encouraged by the Russians themselves, has set in again with a vivacity that will soon make up for lost time. It is not simply the hope of Russian roubles that stimulates this feminine pilgrimage; it is a higher ambition than that. A few of their sisters have come back from Russia carrying noble names and noble arms on their escutcheons, and this is the ambition, the acme the furor of this class. In Paris their position is compromised; as far off as St. Petersburg it would be difficult to examine references. In Paris they effect titles; in Russia they hope to obtain the true. The "Baronesses d'Ange" abound in the semi-aristocratic saloons of Paris. Thus, when peace was declared, there went up one long, loud shout from the Rue Laffitte to the Barriere Blanche; all lorettedom was in a ferment of expectant womanhood. The beautiful sinners know that the reputation of their charms is world-wide, and and that it only requires peace to release that class from which they call their pigeons.

But sometimes a false Russian falls in their midst, and then instead of a Count they only get a Chevglier d' Industrie, and find, when it is too late, that they are the pigeons. They are not all as fortunate as Sophie Cruvelli or Celeste Mogador. And for those shrewd enough to know that it is better to seek the husband where he is known, than to let him seek them where they are known and he is not. It is the title they seek, and not the man.

Lately half-a-dozen of these semi-respectable ladies have sold their personal effects at auction, preparatory to starting to the golden Mecca. The sale of Mademoselle Delphine Marguet, in the rue Favart, who goes to fill a place on the scene of the Theatre-Francais of St. Petersburg, ran through three entire days. Mademoselle Allice Theric and Mademoselle Eliza Demain, both of the Comedie-Francaise, have sold out for the same destination. But the most remarkable sale of late days was that of Mlle. A., of rue St. George's. This sale lasted four days. Such a remarkable collection of precious objects of art perhaps were never found in one small suite of rooms. Pictures, bronzes, marbles, engravings, books, jewelry, and even cashmeres and cambrics, were piled up in a profusion that astonished amateurs the most blase in these kinds of collections. The purchasers were made up of the golden youths of the Maison d' Or, Tortoni's and the Cafe Anglais, and of the class to which the proprietor of all these valuables belonged. It was curious, too, to see here and there a closely veiled lady, who, knowing nothing of that mysterious life by which these precious objects of art had been acquired, had stolen in by an irresistable feeling of curiosity, which all women possess, to take a peep in disguise into the interior life of that class of their sisters whom they can only thus see. They handled the fine cambrics and the jewelry with astonishment, and when, anxious to carry away a souvenir of the collection, they attempted to buy, they were made to pay dear for their temerity, for everything sold at an enormous price. The sale realized 200,000 francs, and if Mlle. A. fails to marry a Muscovite boyard, she can at least return to Florence or Rome, and there, after the example of Mlle. Saint Marc, of Vaudeville, select a husband, and then give him the money to buy a title. It is something, even at the Vaudeville, to flourish the name of Countess Roncani; it serves to keep the carpenters and poupiers civil.—[Cor. of the N. Y. Daily Times.

Boundary Line Between the United States and Mexico.

THE President has just issued a proclamation, stating that the surveys are completed, and declaring the boundary line between the United States and Mexico to be as follows:

"Retaining the dividing line between the two Californias as already defined and established, according to the fifth article of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the limits between the two Republics shall be as follows:

"Beginning in the Gulf of Mexico, three leagues from land, opposite the mouth of the Rio Grande, as provided in the fifth article of the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, thence, as defined in the said article, up the middle of that river to the point where the parallel of 31 deg. 47 min. north lattitude crosses the same; thence due west 100 miles, thence south to the parallel of 31 deg. 20 min. north lattitude; thence along the said parallel of 31 deg. 20 min. to the 111th meridian of longitude west of Greenwich; thence in a straight line to a point on the Colorado River 20 English miles below the junction of the Gila and Colorado Rivers; thence up the middle of the said river Colorado until it intersects the present line between the United States and Mexico."

Development of Heat in Steam Boilers.

Harshman's Method.

SOME time ago, in detailing an experiment made with reference to the bursting of boilers, we promised to make in our own establishment experiments to test the facts of the rapid development of the heat in steam-boilers covered by Harshman's method. Since then we have conducted the experiments to our own satisfaction, and now give their results to our readers.

Our boiler is an upright tubular one, with flues of one inch opening each. The boiler was thoroughly cleaned out, and put in the best possible order. The engineer was then directed to run for one week, carefully weighing his coal, as well that used in getting up steam as the consumption to do the work. The result of the week's experiment was an average of 750 lbs. of coal consumed per day. The quantities varying from 25 to 50 lbs. per day according to the work to be done. We should here state that the engine also had been put in good repair. At the expiration of the week, having satisfied ourselves of the average consumption, we directed the copper casing to be tied around the boiler, the engineer continuing as before to weigh carefully the fuel consumed.

The result of the first week's consumption after the copper was put on was 475 lbs. per day. The consumption of fuel and the comparative advantages gained by the copper covering would therefore be represented as follows: Consumption without copper casing, 47 lbs; Consumption with copper casing, 430 lbs; saving 300 lbs.

This result was to us, who paid the coal bills, highly satisfatory. But apart from its economy, it presents an interesting subject for consideration. That a steam boiler does not radiate 40 per cent. of heat received must be evident. If it did, enclosing the boiler in wood or other non-connecting substances would show an equal saving in the consumption of fuel. Yet such is not the fact. We are informed by practical men that a wooden case effects a saving of from 5 to 10 per cent. It is also stated that a sheet-iron casing will effect about an equal saving. The saving of 40 per cent. by a copper casing wrapped loosely around the boiler, is a fact for the consideration of the curious and philosophical.—[R. R. Record.

What Will the Next Generation Be?

BETWEEN 9 and 10 o'clock last evening a most atrocious murder was committed at the corner of Green and Little Paca streets, upon the person of William Skinner a boy about twelve years old. It seems a fishing club was passing through the street, and when opposite to Warner-street, a difficulty occurred with some colored persons, and one of the latter it was stated, wreaked his vengeance upon an unoffending boy named William Skinner, aged about twelve years. He was stabbed through the heart and died almost instantly. The body of the diseased was taken to the apothecary store of M. M. Hayden, corner of South Little Paca and Green streets, where it was kept until claimed by his father, Mr. Wm. Skinner, ship builder, who resides corner of York and Hanover streets. At the inquest before the Coroner's Jury, the following testimony was elicited: George Fitzpatrick, a lad some twelve years of age, stated that he was walking along with the fishing club, in South Paca-street, and when near Warner-street, two colored boys were attacked by some white boys; one of them was knocked in the gutter; when he got up Edward Skinner smiled; the negro asked what he was laughing at; Edward said nothing; the negro then struck him; Edward walked a few steps, remarking that he had been struck with a knife, and then fell on his face. The Jury returned a verdict, that the deceased came to his death by a stab of a knife from the hands of a colored boy. It is most atrocious that a murder could be perpetrated in a street crowded with men and the man allowed to escape. We trust that our city officials will use every effort to effect the arrest of the murderer.—[Baltimore Patriot, 19th.

THE Columbus (Ga.) Times, of the 14th instant, states that two boys, aged respectfully 16 and 18 years, at school at Tuskegee, Ala., got into a fight on the 18th inst., when one of them, named Williams, drew a knife and cut the throat of his antagonist, named Ashley, from ear to ear, causing instant death. Williams was immediately arrested, but bailed by his father, who lives in Macon County. The body of Ashley was sent to his family, who resides in Montgomery County.

How to Spoil Other People's Temper.

THE London Christian Observer gives the following capital rules for this purpose, which we cordially recommend:

1. If you are staying in a family, and especially if the master is rigidly punctual, take care to be always a little too late.

2. Especially extend this practice to family prayers so as to keep all the family standing in the library and the servants in the hall.

3. If you know a man has a sort of hobby in opinion or practice, make a point of laughing at it.

4. Always look for a flaw in whatever he says, and be sure to bring it into notice.

5. Be liberal of contradiction.

6. If you have disputed with a person a hundred times without coming to a conclusion bring up the subject again, always re-asserting precisely what you said before, as though it had never been answered.

7. Stop a man in the midst of a story, which he is telling with immense enthusiasm, by referring to some slight inaccuracy which is not of the very smallest consequence.

8. Take care always to condemn his friend or party, and to exalt his opponents.

9. Pick little holes in everything that he says, or has, or does—in his house, his horse, his arguments, his sermons; in the Church he has restored, or the garden he has laid out.

10. Carefully avoid eveything like sympathy with him. Be as preverse as "the children in the market palace." Always laugh when he cries, and cry when he laughs. If he is deeply moved by some passage in prose or poetry, go to sleep, or pretend to do so.

11. Say cutting things in the smoothest language.

12. If he is a little deaf take care never to use the smallest effort to make him hear.

12. If he is fond of music, talk as loud as you can when his wife or daughters are singing.

Shipwreck in the Gulf—82 Lives Lost.

INTELLIGENCE was received that the ship Pallas, Capt. Spillane, bound from Cork to this port, with emigrant passengers, was wrecked at St. Paul's Island, and 82 lives were lost. The Pallas sailed on the 28th April with 136 steerage passengers, and had a good run to the entrance of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. On the night of the 30th May, about 10 o'clock, during a thick fog, with moderate breeze—the ship running at the rate of four and a half knots—she struck on the south side of St. Pauls. The life-boat was got out, and every soul on board, as well as the baggage, might have been saved, but the passengers rushed into the boat, and no persuasion could induce any number of them to leave her. The boat in consequence was stove in, and all on board it were drowned. The master, and the remainder of the crew and passengers, stood by the wreck until morning, when they were safely conveyed ashore in boats from the Island. Capt. Spillane crossed to Sydney, and hired the schooner Nazare, to bring up the survivors to Grosse Isle, when they were transfered to the regular steamer, and arrived in Quebec yesterday afternoon. Seventy-nine passengers and three of the crew—in all 82 lives—were lost. The bodies of the three seamen and three of the passengers who perished were all that had been washed ashore, while those who were saved remained on the Island. We regret to learn that the poor sufferers by this disaster have lost everything they possessed. The vessel broke up soon after the Island boats had taken off the last passenger.—[Quebec Gazette, June 18.

DURING a thunder storm, a few days ago, the lightning came down upon a pasture of Charles Titcomb of Kensington, N. H., descending perpendicularly into the earth for about thirty feet, so as to form a good well of water. The hole is as big as a barrel, and it was formed like the holes of the chipmunk, without throwing out any earth.—[Boston Post.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 28, 1856.

What is to be Done with Utah?

THE New York Sun publishes an article this week—"What is to be done with Utah?" The Sun has great difficulty in speaking correctly about anything; we are, therefore, prepared to hear him twaddle in the clouds about Utah and the Mormons. He recognizes that "the Utah Constitution is certainly republican in character, and thus conforms to the United States Constitution;" but apprehends that when Utah becomes a State, Mormonism is likely to become the State religion and polygamy and slavery two of its peculiar institutions. The Constitution formed by the inhabitants of Utah has made provision for the toleration of all religions, and solemnly declares that no religious test will ever be required from the occupant of any office in the State of Deseret. Why should the Sun, then, suppose that the Mormons would proscribe all religions from Deseret? Mormonism does not require legislation to give it the pre-eminence. It has been preached throughout this land, throughout all Great Britain and Ireland—has found its way to France, Switzerland, Germany, Italy, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Australia and the islands of the sea, or seas rather; and has it required any State assistance, or had any? On the contrary. Yet it has brought out converts from all religions and had to cope with every kind of obstacle that the human mind could throw in its way. Through all it has struggled, unaided, alone, and accomplished a work which astonishes the nations. If not only unprotected, but abused and roughly opposed, Mormonism could maintain its own position abroad, what necessity for its becoming at home the State religion for protection or preference? The idea is foolishness. The inhabitants of Utah proclaim liberty of religion in the coming State of Deseret. They invite honest, pure and virtuous men from all nations and of every creed to come to their Territory, and know well that Mormonism can and shall flourish from its own intrinsic merits, and that the better when other religions are groaning beside them. Polygamy is to become a State institution—is it? The Sun is again veiled in darkness. Polygamy is an institution of Heaven, and the Mormons have not stopped to ask anybody if they were pleased or displeased about it, and don't mean to do so now. It is no question with the Mormons what outsiders will think, say or do in the matter. We mind our own business, whether it be in monogamy or polygamy, and calculate to continue doing so, and we expect everybody with brains will do the same; but should the other class not have yet learned the advantages of that course, they may yet learn by dear-bought experience.

"Polygamy is Mohammedanism, not Republican." "Dear me"—after all, the longer we live the more we learn. This is certainly "something new under the sun." We really think it is right under the Sun, for our eyes are so dazzled we can scarce look at it without wiping our cheeks.

Perhaps the Sun will be kind enough to tell us what religion is republican? Next week we shall expect from him the exact measurement of the bottom of the bottomless pit. He has talent for mysteries.

The Sun says: "Our Government would not be warranted in applying force to break up the Utah settlement, but why not seek to christianize Utah?" and concludes with the ollowing touching appeal to Christians:

"Let the christian people of the United States do their duty, and there can be no doubt of the happy result. We are, indeed, astonished that our churches have been so long indifferent to heathen power which apostles of error are building up in our midst. They ought to have met the enemy in the field, and sent the soldiers of Christ to battle with the wily and active foe. Utah ought now to be full of able christian missionaries and christian schools. Ought not the christian churches of America to be more than a match for the emissaries of the false prophet? We appeal to them to consider their duty and enter at once on its performance. Religion, devotion to their Heavenly Master and patriotism, all urge them to it."

We quite approve of sending missionaries to Utah. We, and others, have repeatedly invited our christian neighbors to send out their bright and shining lights to our dark and benighted home, but their ears are hardened and deaf to our cries. The Bible Society got up a report about two months ago that they were going to send a Bible agent out to Utah. We then hastened to offer them our co-operation; but as we advance to receive the precious gifts, they vanish into their original element—gas!

Editors don't understand why their christian brethren are so backward in going forward to Utah—we don't mind letting out the secret. The fact is, missionary and Bible agents find one rub against the Mormons enough. Missionaries know well that they can only flourish among barbarians who don't know the Bible; but the Mormons do know it, and missionaries are aware of it. Editors should consider it is one thing for Missionaries and Bible agents to lecture a child and flourish trumpets around his head, and it is quite another thing to meet, to be modest, an equal.

A Philadelphia Scribbler in Great Grief.

A few weeks since we had occasion to notice a slanderer at Philadelphia—The North American and United States Gazette. We spoke plainly to him, he required plain speech, as he does not seem to possess an intellect that can take a hint. We have had forwarded to us last week's Gazette by which we learn that our plain speech reached him. We are glad of it. He is sick and has been reaching a little. His health is likely to improve however, by a little attention now and again. His neighbors may consider him as unworthy of our attention as he is of theirs, still, we think that, for the sake of society at large, some persons deserve looking after.

The Gazette says: "A delegation is on the way to Washington, to present the Constitution of the new State of Deseret." Let us hasten to give him credit for one true statement, let it be recorded that the North American and United States Gazette, published at Philadelphia, has really chronicled a fact. His forlorn friends may now be encouraged.

The remainder of the article is a random attack on the Mormons and polygamy. He mourns the loss of departed gentlemen who held the reins of government when the glorious Thirteen States formed their federal compact. Were such men now on the stage of life they would "scorn the contact with foul polygamists" and "the heathen impostors" of Utah, "recoiling from them as from a loathsome reptile," but "the standard of certain huckstering politicians is so fallen" that the poor Gazette says: Deseret's recognition as a State "threatens to become a fact." "The danger is appalling" and "the wretched fanatics" are by the force of arms going to propagate their villianous creed and "fill their harems with women" obtained "by foray and capture, among the gentiles."

"The evil must be met and the sooner the better." Twice these rascals have been forcibly dispossessed, and the third onset will lead to their extermination." If the executive government of the United States don't see to destroying the Mormons root and branch, "The questionable expedient of border law is to be tried." How bad the Gazette must have felt before he got out all these pretty words. Surely his soul, if he has any, is at rest now. To comfort him a little we extend to him an invitation to join the exterminators that may some day think of going to Utah; and be kind enough to dispatch in advance an express to let us know that he is in the crowd and we shall come out with songs of joy and rejoicing to meet him. If he don't we shall conclude the judgment of his neighbors is correct. We saw in the papers the other day that a gentlemen had slipped from his keeper, and friends could learn nothing of his whereabouts. Have they enquired at the Gazette office? We opine not.

Our Nation in Trouble.

Men's Hearts Failing Them.

THE clergy of Richmond convened on Thursday, the 19th inst., and drew up an address to their "Brethren and Fellow Citizens" on the present alarming crisis in our national affairs." After speaking of the great blessings Jehovah has vouchsafed to America, the address proceeds:

"We have seen with painful solicitude the agitations which have marred the peace and threatened the stability of our Union. Sectional jealousies and bitterness have, to a great degree, usurped the place of patriotism and brotherly love. Citizens of the same country, descendants of the same race, inheritors of the same priceless privileges, guardians of the same beneficent institutions, are set in deadly hostility against each other. The spirit of violence, showing itself in misrepresentation and abuse, in the licentiousness of the tongue and of the press, in personal assaults, in insubordination, and in armed resistance to lawful authority, is rife and spreading in the country. The flames of civil war are kindling on our borders. As American citizens we are humbled, and as Christians we are deeply mortified and grieved at this state of things."

Passing condemnation upon the agitations that distract the country, it concludes:

"We earnestly request our fellow-citizens to unite with us on the Sunday preceding the Fourth of July next in prayer, secret, social and public, to the God of nations, that He would mercifully restrain the angry passions of men, inspire our rulers with a moderate and pacific spirit, disperse the clouds overhanging our favored Republic, restore the harmony which once existed among the States of the Union, and enable us to transmit to our posterity, in their entireness, the inestimable privileges which we have received from our ancestors."

The above is good in itself; we hope the nation will take their advice and go a little further—repent and be baptized and live by the commandments of the God of Israel.

Arrival of the Hon. Millard Fillmore.

AFTER twelve months visit to Europe this gentleman has returned to his native country. The Atlantic, by which he arrived at this port, was announced coming up the bay by the firing of cannon on Sunday evening about nine o'clock. The friends of Mr. Fillmore and the committee appointed to receive him were early at the quay, and after introduction and congratulations conducted him to the St. Nicholas, where he was to reside during his visit to the city.

On Monday he was waited upon by friends and expectants.

On Tuesday he was escorted in procession through the principal streets and met the committee at the City Hall, from whom he received a very flattering address. Some political opponents speak unfavorably of the procession and represent the affair altogether as being rather cool. We think the honorable gentleman was well received. His countenance beamed with pleasure at seeing so many friends and bore every evidence of being the index of a good honest heart.

On Wednesday he was enthusiastically received at Brooklyn. In the evening he returned to the St. Nicholas and was greeted with great cheering. Towards nine o'clock, a great company crowded round the hotel and called for Mr. Fillmore, who, being fatigued with the attentions of the day, gave but a short address. He left for Buffalo on Thursday morning.

The Thornton.

WE have for sometime expected to see the address, presented by the Saints who came by this ship, to Captain Collins; but we presume our brethren in charge of the company have not had opportunity to send it, as it has not reached this office. We called this morning (Friday) upon Captain Collins and requested a copy for publication. We have much pleasure in publishing this address, as we have learned from all the passengers with whom we have conversed that the kindness of the captain to the Saints generally and the sick in particular was highly worthy of commendation. Captain Collins' kindness and attention will long be remembered—how blessed it is to live in the affectionate remembrance of a grateful people. The doctor and officers of the Thorton are likewise kindly remembered by the Saints. Our passengers have generally been well treated on their voyage from Europe. Not unfrequently numbers of the ship's crew have been baptized on the high seas; and in one case the whole ship's company, which speaks volumes for the Saints on board, and, may we not add, the best argument against the testimony of the low scum of rowdies who are hunted up to testify against the morality of this people.

A Testimonial,

Presented to Captain Charles Collins, commander of the ship "Thornton," by a company of Latter Day Saints, who sailed with him from Liverpool, on the 4th May, 1856, for New York.

CAPTAIN COLLINS,—Respected Sir:—On the eve of our separation, we the undersigned, do for ourselves, and on behalf of the passengers of this ship, take pleasure in presenting you this small token of our esteem, for your unceasing kindness to us during our passage from Liverpool to New York.

Those who have been sick especially will ever have cause to remember you. When so much overcome by sea-sickness or other diseases as to be unable to partake of the ship's rations, you have kindly administered to them from your own table; for this and many other acts of kindness you will ever live in their memories.

Your fatherly attention and kindness to the little children we cannot overlook, and though their young minds may not retain the various incidents which occurred during their youthful transit across the Great Atlantic, doubtless their parents will often recall them to their minds and teach them to speak in praise of Captain Collins. Finally, when we consider the previleges and favors which you have extended towards us all, in allowing us the free use of the quarter deck for devotional and recreative exercises, and many others of a similar nature too numerous to mention, we cannot but express our gratitude in this way, and beg you to except it as a faint remembrance of our respect and esteem. May Heaven's blessings attend you and family through this life and prepare you for that to come. Amen.

Signed on behalf of seven hundred and sixty Latter Day Saints.

Dated an board of the "Thornton," 11th day of June, 1856.

While on board with the captain and doctor this morning we drew their attention to the case of "Jervis vs. Jervis," now before the Supreme Court. We asked the captain what he could say about our passengers and what he had witnessed in the treatment of the children. He replied: "Before I left Liverpool several captains of my acquaintance remarked to me—what a fine company of people I had and that I was a 'lucky fellow.' I found them a very obedient people; they did anything I required of them, and was pleased with them in every particular. I allowed them all the privileges I could on board; the children played on the poop deck, and when young or old were sick and feeble I felt it a pleasure to be able to render them assistance and give them anything suited to their situation. I wish I had always Mormon emigrants to cross the Atlantic in my ship." The doctor supported the statements of the captain in every particular. We refer our readers to the captain's letter to Mr. Willie in last week's paper. Our space and time prevent us from saying more than that it would be well for those who are hunting information about the Mormons to go to the proper places and persons, and not catch up all the rag-and-bobtail nobody's that infest society.

Letter to the New York Herald.

MORMON OFFICE, 102 Nassau-street, }
Thursday, June 26, 1856. }

To the Editor of the Herald:

SIR—Confiding in your partiality for truth and impartiality for men, I beg space in the Herald for some remarks on the deposition of Robert Murray in "The Mormon Case," reported in this morning's issue of your paper.

Robert Murray is reported to have spoken of the utter heartlessness of the Mormon emigrants for their children in sickness, and states that "last Christmas a ship arrived from Liverpool with Mormon emigrants; a child, who had been a passenger among them, died at Castle Garden during the day. One of the Elders of the Mormons mounted a box or chair and addressed the emigrants thus: 'Brothers and sisters, all we can say about it is that we have one pig less to feed.'"

During the sojourn of the emigrants alluded to, at Castle Garden, I had the entire charge of that company, and, according to Mormon order in traveling, the emigrants were only addressed by those who were in charge—Mr. Merril, Mr. France and myself. The two former attended to the business of forwarding the emigrants, in connection with the Mormon office in this city, and I attended to general business for them while in the Garden. Frequently I "mounted a box or chair and addressed the emigrants" before and after the death of the child alluded to, and presume I am the person on whom falls this charge. I unhesitatingly brand the statement of Mr. Murray as a scandalous falsehood. I am not acquainted with the names of many of the gentlemen employed in Castle Garden, but during my sojourn there about Christmas and during frequent visits made there since, I have had many evidences of their respect and attention, and in no instance have I seen anything but the utmost courtesy, from the highest to the lowest, among the employees there, to myself and associates, which we could never have received had such heartless and utterly barbaric statements issued from our lips. Furthermore, I deem it not impertinent to the case to state that my own family—wife and four children under six years of age, were about the last of the company in Castle Garden, entirely on account of my whole time being devoted to the interests of the other emigrants, and, I regret to be obliged to add, to the injury of my family's health.

Mormons are well known to be obedient to those in authority over them; but had I or any man there dared to speak of a dead child as "a pig less to feed," we should have been hurled from the chair or box in less time than it took the man to tell the falsehood. Mormon leaders can accomplish nothing but by the influence which their actions entitle them to among their brethren, and I cannot conceive how a man could destroy his influence better than by using such language there attributed to "an Elder."

It is very likely that Mr. Murray has seen cases of seeming inattention to the sick, but it would be far more consistent to attribute it to the awkwardness of the situation than to gross heartlessness, above all as it is well known to the world that the Mormons, more than any other class of people, prize highly a numerous posterity. A fact in point: many emigrants now living in New York, who have lost their own children, since their arrival, by death, have gone to the institutions of the city and adopted children out of them.

The above statements can be corroborated by scores of persons now in New York if required. Of the statements respecting polygamy I can say nothing; only, if any man of that company told Mr. Murray that he had nineteen or seven wives, he spoke what was not true. In justice to Mr. Murray I should, however, add that I was informed while there that persons frequently talked to young frivolous boys and asked them how many wives they had, and one of them told me that he replied he had several. I rebuked him for doing so, and his only excuse was that the people wanted something to talk about polygamy, and he gave them that statement.

I am on hand at the MORMON office or anywhere else to confront Mr. Murray, and believe that the majority of the employees in Castle Garden will testify to our solicitude for that company.

I am, sir, yours very respectfully,

T. B. H. STENHOUSE.

Beaver Island Mormons.

AT the present time the people calling themselves Mormons living on Beaver Islands are attracting a considerable share of public attention, by reported evil deeds. We know not what foundation their may be for the accusations against them and care nothing about it, but justice to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, recognizing Governor Brigham Young as President of that Church throughout the whole earth, requiries us to state that with the people calling themselves Mormons on Beaver Islands we have no connexion and never had with any person, believing in the mission of Mr. Strang.

Since the foregoing was in type we have seen an account of an attempt at the assassination of Mr. Strang. He is reported to have received three balls in his body and likely to terminate fatally. Though we repudiate in the strongest manner his course, and have not the slighted sympathy for him or his followers, we say the report, if true, is that of a cowardly assassination that demands the keen eye of the officers of justice, and the visitation of the law upon the criminals.

Death of Mother Lucy Smith.

AT the moment of going to press, Elder Phineas H. Young informs us that, through his son, who was last week at Nauvoo, he has learned of the death of this honored lady, mother of the Prophet Joseph Smith. We have no particulars about her last days. May her ashes rest in peace till the morning of the first resurrection. Her memory is dear to thousands of God's people.

Letters at Our Office.

Elder Dulin informs us that a great many unpaid foreign letters have lately come to this office for different persons. Some entertain the idea that unpaid letters are more likely to arrive at their destination. In this there may be truth, but we object to lay out money for persons of whom we know nothing, who have never asked our permission to use our name and whose letters may remain with us altogether. We are willing to oblige but not disposed to be imposed upon; from this day, therefore, unpaid letters will positively be refused. Parties expecting letters will do well to inquire in future at the Post Office. Millenial Star please copy.

The Wellfleet.

THIS ship left Liverpool for Boston on the 31st ult., having on board 146 Mormons under the presidency of Elder John Aubrey. This is the last company of emigrants expected from our Liverpool office for the present season. The total number of Mormon emigrants that have left Liverpool since the 1st of December last is 4,326, of that number 2,012 have come out under the regulations of the Perpetual Emigration Fund Company.

Arrivals.

Iowa Correspondence.

CAMP, NEAR IOWA CITY, }
June 19, 1856. }

PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR—Dear Brother:

Thinking you would like to hear from the Mormon camp induced me to write this letter.

The Mormon camp for the European emigration to Utah is situated about two miles west of Iowa City; it is a pleasant location. The site was selected by Bishop Cunningham, under the direction of President Taylor. Elder Spencer is President of the emigration department, assisted by James Ferguson. Daniel Tyler is Bishop of the camp; Daniel Spencer and James Ferguson are his counsellors. Chancey G. Webb superintends the making of hand-carts. Edward Bunker superintends the making of ox-yokes, ox-bows and the hauling of timber. David Grant is captain of the guard. John D. T. McAllister is commissary. William Woodward is clerk to the camp. Besides the abovenamed, the following returning missionaries are in camp: Dan. Jones, William Walker, John A. Hunt, G. D. Grant, John McDonald and B. W. Hodgetts.

G. D. Grant came into camp on the 17th, with 16 mules. Mr. Thatcher accompanied him to this place.

John Van Cott is expected in camp in a few days with a large herd of cattle, numbering from 450 to 475 head.

Elders Erastus Snow and Daniel Spencer came into camp last night about ten o'clock. Brother Spencer has been on business to St. Louis.

The first hand-cart company of Mormon emigrants left the camp on the 9th inst., under the charge of Capt. Edmund Ellsworth; he is assisted by John Oakley and William Butler. This company numbered 275 souls; they took with them 55 hand-carts, 3 wagons, 3 mules, one horse and 6 yoke of cattle. This company is accompanied with a brass band. Capt. Ellsworth's company left this point in fine spirits.

The second hand-cart company rolled out of camp on the 11th inst. under the charge of Capt. D. D. McArthur; he is assisted by Spicer W. Crandell and Truman Leonard. This company numbers 222 souls; they took with them 44 hand-carts, two wagons and six yoke of oxen.

These two companies are prospering on their journey. They can out-travel the ox-teams that are along with them. James Ferguson has visited them on the road; they are in fine spirits and panting to cross the plains.

The next hand-cart company that will start from this place will be composed mostly of Welsh Saints.

An ox-team company will leave in some eight or ten days time, under the charge of Capt. B. W. Hodgetts.

The camp is full of business. Health and peace prevail in our midst. Meetings are held on Sundays; much good instruction is given; many strangers attend. Some few are baptized into the Church.

The b'hoys desire a kind remembrance to you and wish you much success in editing THE MORMON and representing Deseret's interests at Washington.

Yours truly,

WILLIAM WOODWARD.

Important from Central America.

THE Baltimore Sun gives the following, as an extract of a letter dated Granada, June 1:

"We have just received a communication from the Government of Costa Rica, in which they acknowledge the Government of President Rivas and General Walker, considering the war at an end, and offering to become responsible for all the expenses of the war."

Large Fire at Cleaveland.

CLEAVELAND, June 24, 1856.

THERE was a fire here this morning, destroying a number of buildings, including H. N. Gates' grain elevator, loss $10,000, no insurance; Barney, Coring & Co., rectifiers, loss $12,000, fully insured in the Etna Company, Hartford; and some coal and lumber yards. Total loss over $30,000.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

On Wednesday evening there was a great assemblage of the friends of Fremont and Dayton at the Broadway Tabernacle to ratify the nomination of these gentlemen.

Ratification meetings for the various candidates for the Chief Magistracy of the Union, are the principal facts of the day. Buchanan, Fillmore and Freemont are the guests of the nation. Buchanan for love and faithful services, Fremont for climbing mountains and facing Indians, Fillmore for known honesty and uprightness while in the presidential chair. Each has his party and each party are certain of placing their man in the White House next November. Well there will be a change if Buchanan, Fillmore and Freemont are in the same chair at the same time next November!

The Steamship Quaker City brings advices from Havana up to the 10th inst. Another cargo of 500 coolies had arrived making an aggregate of ten thousand introduced within the last four years and a half.

On Sunday afternoon a heavy thunder storm passed over this city. The forenoon had been excessively warm, the thermometer previous to the storm stood at 96 degrees. The squall was terribly severe in the bay and r. ers. Several painful accidents occurred resulting in the death of quite a number of persons. Boats were upset and their occupants thrown into the water. Several of whom were drowned. Several houses were struck by lightning, in and around New York, and one or two persons killed. Some persons during the intense heat, died from coup de soleil.

THE clipper ships Driver and Ocean Queen, which sailed from England on the 12th and 15th of February last, for New York, have not since been heard of, and have been given up as lost by their owners. The former had 344 passengers, and the latter also a very large number.

THE New York and Erie Telegraph Line is now in perfect order, working promptly between New York and Dunkirk direct.

THE St. Louis News of the 19th inst. says that it has to "record to-day the first arrival of Wheat of the crop of 1856. Troy (Illinois) has the credit of the first show of the new crop in this market; and, if the whole country turns out as good a quality as the Trojans present in their sample, there can be no starvation for one year at least. The price paid was in the neighborhood of $1 50 per buahel.

On account of the interest our readers have in Territorial matters at present under discussion in Congress, we have given this week lengthy reports.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

PRUSSIA.—The Czar of Russia has recently visited Berlin. The King of Prussia was to have met him on the road to Warsaw, but yielding to pressing solicitation he consented to visit Berlin, where he was received with great eclat. The knowing folks discovers in this visit to Prussia an expression of Russia's contempt for Austria. The Czar before he left Warsaw, granted a general amnesty to Polish exiles—those who would renounce hostility to the powers that be and acknowledge that they deserved all the persecution to which they have been subjected. Of course, only the proverty stricken, broken hearted, and unprincipled will return and kiss the rod that smote them.

SPAIN.—On the 28th ult., as the Queen was returning from the Theatre del Principe, a young man, named Fuentes, attempted to discharge a pistol at her, but was prevented by the interference of a police agent. He is reported to be connected with a band of conspirators for the assassination of her majesty.

FRANCE.—The French Government has discovered that the imperfect copy of the treaty of Peace which appeared in the papers in Europe and America before the Official Treaty was published had got to the public through a news agent bribing one of the Imperial printers for a copy. The news agent has been sentenced to two years and the printer to fifteen months imprisonment. The subscriptions deposited in the Treasury of France for the relief of the victims of the inundations amounted, evening of June 7, to 384,324f.; those collected by the Prfecture of Police to 740,027f.; those received by the Constitutional to 85,597f.; by the Siecle to 39,000f., &c. At Lyons, the private subscriptions down to Friday evening, 6th, produced 358,300f., independently of 125,000f. voted by the Municipal Council of the city. The Emperor has returned from the scene of devastation to St. Cloud. He handed from his private purse twenty thousand francs to the Prefect of the Loiret; five thousand francs to the Mayor of Beaugency; twenty thousand francs to the Prefect of the Loire-et-Cher; fifty thousand francs to the Prefect of the Indre-et-Loire, and he also sent a sum of fifty thousand francs to the Prefect of the Maine-et-Loire. On Monday the Emperor again set out to visit another scene of the inundations. He went by way of Chartres to Angers, where the slate quarries have been completely overwhelmed with water, and ten thousand persons have consequently been thrown out of work, and at the same time deprived of shelter by the destruction of their cottages. The latest accounts state that the rivers were subsiding. Nothing like an accurate estimate of the damage done by the inundations has been published; but it has been rougly estimated that forty thousand people have been rendered houseless, and that one hundred thousand have been thrown out of employment.

TURKEY.—A telegraphic dispatch from Trieste, forwarding news from Alexandria, announces that Arabia is still in a state of insurrection. It has declared it will no longer recognize the rule of the Sultan. The Governor of the Hedjas holds out firmly, but is without relief or support. Another dispatch, of doubtful authenticity, records a great fermentation among the Turks on the subject of the Hatti-Humaioun. At Pedgorizza, it is said, the Turks have burned two Catholic churches and killed two Christians; at Niseki, near Montenegro, the Christians, in order to avenge themselves for the continual outrages they meet with, have attacked and pillaged a caravan coming from Ragusa; fourteen Turks were killed.

Latest From Europe.

QUEBEC June 25 1856.

The steamship Anglo-Saxon, from Greenock 13th inst., arrived here at 4 o'clock this afternoon. She brings dates from London to the 12th, and Glasgow to the 13th inst.

GREAT BRITAIN.—The American Minister had an interview with Lord Clarendon, at the Foreign office, on Wednesday.

The Daily News again calls attention to the domestic troubles of America. The Post, in a leader on the serious aspect of the internal politics of the United States' says Kansas is but the field in which the great American question of Slavery is to be debated, most probably in arms; and so thoroughly is the vital character of the crisis understood in America, that there are many who hold that the postponement of the contest would be cheaply purchased by a foreign war as its only means of uniting the jarring States once more under the same banner.

The Times says: "There is unfortunately, no longer any doubt that Mr. Crampton is to be dismissed, and though the exact news of his dismissal has not yet reached us, we may certainly expect to receive information to that effect by the next arrival. At the same time that our Minister is dismissed, the exequatur will be withdrawn from three Consuls whom the American Government consider guilty of violation of their municipal laws."

Of the correctness of this intelligence, the Times does not pretend to express any doubt. "The American Government's intimation of its intention," it says, "is accompanied with the most profuse assurance of good-will and respect towards this country."

Mr. Dallas, the Times is assured, is armed with the fullest powers to negotiate and finally settle the disputes with the Central American question, and if unable to come to an agreement the contracting parties are empowered without further reference to America, to refer the question to the arbitration of some imperial third person, to be selected by mutual conqurrence.

"As regards our retaining Mr. Dallas," says the Times, "that question should rest entirely upon the guilt or innocence of Mr. Crampton. If the latter be innocent, Mr. Dallas ought not to remain, and if he be guilty no false pride should prevent us from acquiescing in his expulsion."

In the House of Commons, on Thursday, Mr. Disraeli said if the Government did not go on with the army estimates, they might expect a discussion on our relations with the United States. The Chancelor of the Exchequer, in reply, said he would fix on Monday, if there was no objection, to discussion on the estimates.

FRANCE.—The Times correspondent writes from Paris that the French Army will be further reduced to 20,000 men.

HOLLAND.—There had been a Ministerial crisis in Holland, and the Premier, Vanhall, had resigned.

Still Later From England.

The Cunard mail steamship Asia, Captain Lott, arrived from Liverpool, whence she sailed on Saturday, 14th inst. There is much excitement in England respecting American affairs. The London Times and the Morning Post, both government organs, demand in offensive terms, the recall of Mr. Dallas; but it is not supposed that he will be dismissed.

Meantime, Liverpool and Manchester have issued a peace circular, addressed to the citizens of America, and the feelings of the people seem more active and more general in favor of peace.

Government, however, talks in a hostile tone, both Palmerston and Clarendon having stated in Parliament on Friday evening that they had not then made up their minds whether Mr. Dallas should be dismissed or not.

Lord John Russell has given special notice that on Monday he would move an inquiry as to what is the intention of the British government on this question, inasmuch as the almost universal feeling of the British people is in favor of peace.

Palmer was hung on Saturday morning. He died without a struggle. He made no confession.

The Asia brings ninety passengers.

Kansas Affairs.

ST. LOUIS, June 23, 1856.

A letter from Westport, June 17, to the Republican says: "Col. Sumner has kept the California and Santa Fe routes and all the principal roads leading through Kansas under blockade. He has driven Buford, Jones, Shelby and all leading emigrants, desirous of becoming peaceable settlers, out of the Territory.

Another letter from Kansas City, 16th inst. says: "Col. Sumner intends to arrest every person under indictment in Kansas, and has declared that neither Lane nor anybody else shall come with an armed force into the Territory through Iowa, Nebraska, or other route, except over his dead body.

"On the night of the 13th inst., an attempt was made to murder the new Sheriff of Douglas County, who lives at Franklin. Three men came to his house, and fired into the window at his bed, then broke open the door, when the Sheriff shot one dead, and the rest fled."

The same letter states that Col. Sumner had received dispatches from Fort Kearney, giving him information that a band of Cheyenne Indians had joined a party of Sioux, and had again proclaimed war. One white had been killed. Col. Sumner immediately dispatched a company to Fort Kearney, from the camp near Westport.

HATRED.—It is the nature of the human disposition to hate him whom you have injured.—TACITUS.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

Washington, June 19, 1856.

Mr. Clayton made a personal explanation, stating that he had been misrepresented by Lord Clarendon in certain remarks made in the British House of Lords respecting Central American affairs.

Mr. Butler, in replying to Mr. Sumner, relative to certain provisions of the Constitution of South Carolina, stated that Mr. Wilson had misrepresented the Constitution of that State altogether.

Mr. Cass made some remarks supplementary to those of Mr. Clayton, and on the same subject.

Mr. Pearce sustained the American interpretation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Mr. Toombs wished to have it understood that he did not agree with Mr. Clayton that the Central American question was the proper subject for arbitration. He could see no reason why it should not be left to an umpire.

Mr. Geyer gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill supplementary to the act to organize the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska.

The House resolution for supplying new members with the usual number of books of a public character was passed.

Mr. Douglas offered a resolution for the adjournment of Congress on the first Tuesday of July next.

Mr. Weller thought the resolution had better lie over, as Congress, with a large amount of business before it, cannot possibly adjourn then, and would not likely be prepared to do so until the 15th of August.

The resolution was postponed.

Several bills of minor importance were then passed, and the Senate adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Lindley of Missouri defended his political position from the strictures of The Union newspaper, saying that the latter was opposed to the nomination of Mr. Buchanan, and rather than Mr. Benton should have any influence with Buchanan in the event of his election, it would crush the Democratic party in Missouri. Mr. Lindley vindicated the Benton Democrats, so far as their connection with his election was concerned, and himself from charges of being tinctured with Free Soilism.

No quorum. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

June 20.

The House proceeded to the consideration of private bills.

One hundred and twenty-seven members were present.

No bills were passed. No quorum of voting members present.

Mr. Campbell of Ohio said that as next week had been set apart for the consideration of territorial business, and as the report on the Sumner assault had not yet been printed, he should not move to take up the latter for consideration, until Monday the 30th of June. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

June 21.

Mr. Colfax branded the code of laws emanating from the Legislature of Kansas as one of oppression, outrage and wrong, which would be as disgraceful to the Legislature of any State as they are to the Goths and Vandals who seek to tyranize over the citizens of that Territory.

Mr. Burlingame of Mass. defended Massachusetts against general and specific charges, claiming that in all that constitutes true greatness, she is the first State of the Union, and that her present performances are superior to her past patriotic recollections. He was sorry to find at the head af the list of her assailants the President of the United States, who had deliberately perverted history to eulogize the South at the expense of the North, and who had become the chieftain of sectionalism. Massachusetts believed, with South Carolina, the Fugitive Slave law unconstitutional.

Mr. Keitt of S. C. here asked Mr. Burlingame for his authority relative to South Carolina.

Mr. Burlingame, to prove his statement, cited the remarks of The Charleston Mercury, which spoke of the Fugitive Slave law as an infringement of one of the most cherished principles of the Constitution. In conclusion, he referred to Mr. Sumner's speech—to the purity and nobleness of its sentiments, and to the severity of its strictures against tyranny. He said Mr. Sumner never had a personal enemy. His character was as pure as the snow which falls upon his native hills, and his heart was ever overflowing with kindness for every human being bearing the upright form of a man. He was an accomplished scholar and a chivalric gentleman. A member of the House, who had taken an oath to support the Constitution, stole into the Senate and smote him as Cain smote his brother.

Mr. Keitt—It is false. [Sensation.]

Mr. Burlingame replied, he would not bandy epithets. He was responsible for his own language only, and doubtless the gentleman was responsible for his.

Mr. Keitt.—I am.

Mr. Burlingame after describing and severely condemning the assault upon Mr. Sumner asked, Call you that chivalry? In what code of honor did you get authority for it? If we are not to have freedom of speech, what is all this Government worth? If we are to be called to account by some "gallant nephew" of some "gallant uncle" for saying something which does not suit their sensitive nerves, we want to know it. If the conflict is to be transferred from this peaceful and intellectual field, where the honors are equal and easy, we desire to know it. The time may come when Massachusetts may withdraw her representatives to her own bosom, when safety cannot be found for them under the flag of our common country. But while her representatives are here they will speak how and when they will, uncaring for the consequences, and if they are pressed too long and too far, they will not shrink from defending the honor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the freedom of speech.

Mr. Keitt sought the floor, but it was awarded to Mr. Carlile, who refused to yield it.

Mr. Keitt gave notice that he should on Monday, reply to some of the points of Mr. Burlingame's speech.

Mr. Carlile, of Va. condemned the resolutions of the Cincinnati Convention, or, as he said, the fillibustering platform of the Democrats. Fremont would not receive the electoral vote of any District except that represented by Mr. Giddings. The contest is between Mr. Fillmore, the candidate of the National party, and Mr. Buchanan, who is supported by faction.

Mr. Washburne, of Maine, urged the necessity of a union of the opponents of the administration, and those adverse to the extension of slavery in the Territories, and spoke about Col. Fremont. Adjourned.

SENATE. June 23.

Mr. Fish presented a letter from George Sumner, brother of Senator Sumner. It states that the impression which might be drawn from Dr. Boyles, letter, that the latter was dismissed from his attendance upon Mr. Sumner, on account of the character of his testimony, before the House Committee, was unfounded, as he did not know at the time that Dr. Boyle was dismissed what his testimony before the Committee was. Senator Sumner was suffering from high fever, with his pulse at one hundred and four, and Dr. Perry being willing to take charge of the case, Dr. Boyle's services were no longer required.

Mr. Toombs gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill to take the census of Kansas, to protect the exercise of the elective franchise in that Territory, and to provide for calling a convention to form a constitution preparatory to the admission of Kansas into the Union.

Mr. Toombs desired to have some complete and final measures adopted for pacification in that Territory. In order to effect this the census should first be taken. This would take away all motive for either section of the Union to attempt to force people into Kansas, and thereby endanger the peace of the country, in order to promote a sectional advantage by having institutions made for the people of the Territory by a population who have no interest in the question.

The bill also proposes to protect the freedom of the ballot box, and to that end submits such questions to five commissioners, to be selected by the President, who shall cause an enumeration to be made, for the purpose, first—of having a proper distribution of representation so as to give fair and equal representation to the population, very unequally distributed over the Territory. And, secondly, for the purpose of having a registry of all bona fide inhabitants of the Territory. The bill provides that all male inhabitants over 21 years of age shall be registered as legal voters, and Kansas be admitted into the Union as a State with as little delay as practicable. As soon as a census is taken, and it shall be ascertained who are real inhabitants of Kansas, they shall proceed forthwith to the election of delegates to a convention to form a State Constitution. This election he would have take place on the first Tuesday in November. That would give sufficient time, and allow four months' residence to inhabitants, and would come on a day when the people of the different States would be prevented, in consequence of being occupied with the Presidential election, from even attempting to defeat the real wishes of the people of Kansas by interfering with their election.

This measure was liable, he said, to but one objection, and that not of principle nor expediency. It was solely as to the small number of inhabitants there. But that objection was waived by a considerable portion of the Senate, and by a very large part of the people. Believing that this proposition would meet with favorable reception; and be promotive of good, he should at an early day ask leave to introduce the bill.

Mr. Wilson explained the error in the Globe report of his speech, of which Mr. Butler complained on Thursday. It occurred in consequence of his being absent from the city, and leaving another person to read the proof sheets. The error did not occur in the uttered remarks.

Mr. Evans replied to Mr. Sumner's remarks on South Carolina, vindicating her revolutionary history, and defending her domestic institutions. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

This week being set apart, by previous agreement, for the consideration of territorial business.

The bill to authorise the President to cause the Southern boundary line of Kansas to be surveyed and marked, was passed.

Mr. Wakeman gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill amendatory of the act of 1817, prohibiting the introduction or exportation of slaves.

The bill authorising the people of Oregon to form a Constitution and State government was considered. It is the same as that heretofore passed by the House, but lost in the Senate for want of time.

Mr. Jones, of Tenn., proposed an amendment requiring Oregon to have a population equal to the ratio of representation established under the last U.S. census.

A debate ensued involving the question whether such a restriction should be imposed upon new States. Adjourned.

SENATE. June 24.

Mr. Mason, of Va., introduced a joint resolution appropriating $40,000 for the purchase and restoration to the British government of the ship Resolute, late of the British navy, which was abandoned in the Artic seas, and found by the crew of an American whaleship, by whom she was brought to this country. Passed.

A message was received from the President, in response to a resolution asking for a copy of the instructions to Mr. Buchanan, late Minister at England, on the subject of the invitation to the British government to enter into a treaty similar to that between Russia and the United States, recognising the principle in favor of neutral commerce that free ships make free goods.

In presenting this subject to Lord Clarendon, (August 30, 1855,) Mr. Buchanan says:—"It is scarcely necessary to observe that the present proposal does not proceed from any apprehension that Great Britain will ever hereafter reverse the precedent she has so recently established. It has been solely dictated by a desire to give to the principle of her majesty's government the solemn sanction of both governments, and thus by their combined influence to recommend the adoption of them to other nations of the civilized world." No response from France or England accompanies the President's message.

Mr. Geyer, of Mo., introduced a bill, supplementary to the act organizing the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, and providing for the faithful execution of said act in Kansas, according to the true intent and meaning thereof.

Mr. Hunter, of Va., replied to the allusions of Mr. Sumner to the State of Virginia, and commented on the resolutions of the Massachusetts Legislature concerning the late assault. He knew of no previous instance in which the Legistation of any State had stepped forward to pre-judge a case of this kind, and he thought it could result only in increasing the exasperation of that unfortunate sectional feeling which is now threatening the peace of the whole country, and endangering the perpetuity of its institutions. Massachusetts had nothing to say by way of rebuke to Mr. Sumner for his offensive personalities, but so far from that she had actually endorsed that speech and thanked him for having made it. He (Mr. Hunter) repelled the attack of Mr. Sumner on Virginia as a being a State where human beings are bought as cattle at the shambles, where little children are sold upon the auction block, and a dungeon rewards the pious matron who teaches a negro to read the Word of Life. The foundation upon which the Senator from Massachusetts rested was the fact that slavery and the slave trade existed in Virginia, that negroes were held in bondage and liable to be sold from one place to another. But he (Mr. Hunter argued that slavery was the best condition for the colored race, and that no community was to be blamed for the inseparable incidents of a necessary institution. He also essayed to prove that the attack of Mr. Brooks upon Mr. Sumner was not a breach of privilege, but merely a matter for the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of law.

Mr. Seward, of N. Y., in reply to Mr. Hunter's argument relative to the Brooks assault, said the remarks of the Senator had filled him with profound surprise and deep regret. When the assault was made, the personal and political friends of Mr. Sumner were silent, and his colleague (Mr. Wilson), in a few calm and temperate words, simply stated the facts as they occurred. A motion was then made for raising a committee to examine into the matter, and report their opinion. Their report was concurred in by almost the entire Senate, and although the report was condemned by many at the North as not coming up to their ideas of what ought to be done, yet he (Mr. Seward) was satisfied with it, and was glad to have the subject drop there and not be again mentioned in the Senate, as freedom of debate had been vindicated. But now, the Senator from Virginia had taken a position contrary to the decision of three-fourths of the Senate and a vast majority of the people of the country.

Mr. Butler, of S. C., said Mr. Sumner was the first man who had ever abused his privilege as a member of the Senate, to lay his profane hands upon the Revolutionary history of one of the original thirteen States.

Mr. Pearce, (national) of Md., Chairman of the Committee who investigated the assault on Mr. Sumner, defended the positions laid down in that report, and replied to Mr. Hunter's arguments against it.

Mr. Hunter briefly rejoined. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The bill establishing two additional land districts in Minnesota was passed.

Mr. Whitney, of N. Y., introduced a bill to preserve peace and protect public property in Kansas. Referred to the Committee on Territories.

The consideration of the bill authorising the people of Oregon to form a constitution and State government, was then resumed.

The Oregon bill was debated and laid aside.

The bill explanatory of the act of 1854 establishing additional land districts in Minnesota was passed. Adjourned.

SENATE. June 25.

Mr. Wilson, of Mass., presented a petition from the officers of the Massachusetts Emigrant Aid Society, setting forth the objects of that organization, and stating that they have been much misrepresented by the majority report of the Committee on Territories. They say that their society did not cause the troubles in Kansas, having never infringed any law nor interfered with the peaceful execution of it—that they have never invested a dollar in any munitions of war—that they have never sent persons to control elections in Kansas, nor hired any man, except as a business agent, to go there—that they have never paid the passage of a single emigrant, nor is it within the knowledge of the company that any person has gone out under their auspices with any other views than those of settling and staying in the Territory. They also represent that their property has been destroyed by the recent outbreaks, and pray that the offenders may be brought to justice, and compensation be made for the losses and injuries they have sustained.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. Johnson, of Ark., took exception to some of Mr. Seward's comments yesterday, on the conduct of Mr. Rust in assaulting Horace Greeley some time ago.

Mr. Seward vindicated the correctness of what he had said, according to the facts, so far as they were within his knowledge and recollection. He did not, however, at the time remember the precise grounds on which the attack was made.

Mr. Foster, of Conn., alluded to the passage of the Kansas Nebraska bill at about the hour of midnight, on the 25th of May, 1854. The darkness which then enveloped the earth yielded to the light of the coming day, but the darkness and gloom which had been caused by that bill did not pass away. It had been increasing until it now enveloped the land with a broad black shadow. Mr. Foster spoke with earnestness in defence of the Emigrant Aid Society, and vindicated Prof. Stillman and Rev. Mr. Beecher and Mr. Dutton. The meeting in New Haven, in Mr. Dutton's church, was to bid farewell to their friends, who were about to leave for Kansas, and the arms furnished were merely for self-defence. It was a significant fact that not one of that party who were thus furnished with rifles had ever been engaged in any of the disturbances in that Territory. If Professor Stillman had no stone cast at him except by those who had done more than he for the good of his race, he would be much more likely to attain the age of Methuselah than to suffer the martyrdom of Stephen. Mr. Foster maintained that over slavery in the States the General Government has no power, and that where there was no power there was no responsibility, and should be no intermeddling. The existence of slavery in the Territories was an entirely different matter. Being unsuccessful in discovering what was the great principle in the Kansas Nebraska bill, he laid down what he conceived to be the true doctrine, namely, that Congress has exclusive power over the matter. If slavery was right, he could be wrong. He would recommend that wherever slavery existed in the Territories, that it be abolished; and wherever it was not, that it should be forbidden.

Mr. Benjamin, of La., expressed his gratification at the tone and temper of Mr. Foster's speech, it being so different from what he had been accustomed to hear from those entertaining such opinions on the subject of slavery. The matter had been discussed in a manner eminently becoming a Senator representing one of the sovereign States of the confederacy.

On motion of Mr. Weller, the Kansas bill and all the proposed amendments were then re-committed to the Committee on Territories. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed a bill authorising the President to cause to be delivered, at the expense of the United States, to Utah and New Mexico, such arms as they are entitled to under existing laws.

The bill establishing two additional land districts in Kansas was tabled by 26 majority.

Mr. Grow, of Pa., said that on the 30th of May, 1854, an act was passed organizing Kansas as a Territory, and that the census of 1855 showed 2,905 voters; but at the election which chose the Legislature that enacted a code of laws for Kansas, there were 6,331 voters. Those laws the people believed oppressive and wrong, and emanating from the usurpation of legislative power, they are not bound by considerations of justice and right to submit to them. Senator Clayton recently declared those acts to be unexampled, and palpably unjust and oppressive, and some of them unconstitutional, besides being insulting to honorable men who might differ from him on political questions. The people of the Territory, believing that resistance to tyranny is obedience to God, called a convention, in a constitutional and legal way and adopted a constitution at Topeka. Mr. Grow gave a history of the attendant proceedings and spoke of the difficulties in Kansas, and of the fruitless efforts of the federal authorities to suppress them.

Mr. Stephens, of Ga., gave notice of his intention to submit a substitute for the pending bill, to guard against all the evils of which Mr. Grow complained.

Mr. Smith, of Tenn., said reason, not passion, ought to reign. We had passed through many scenes of disturbance since the adoption of the constitution. The public mind was willing to come to a reasonable conclusion on the questions which have divided all sections of the country. The gentleman from Pennsylvania denounced the Executive for a failure to enforce the laws, or partiality in their execution but some men in the South utter similar complaints. This furnished the highest evidence that the President has nobly done his duty to the entire country. This was not a time for recrimination, but, if possible, at once to quiet the prevailing excitement. He thought the bill recently introduced into the Senate by Mr. Toombs equitable and just, and based on a principal, so far as slavery is concerned, on which all men who love the Union could unite. Mr. Smith believed that both sections have acted imprudently regarding the Kansas difficulties, which are fast bringing into disrepute the fair fame of our republic. The President has done all in his power to prevent insurrection and preserve the public peace, and he was gratified to know that the efforts of the Executive were likely to succeed; but Congress has done nothing, notwithstanding the recommendations of the President for the adoption of additional measures to secure tranquillity.

Mr. Grow moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. Dunn, of Ind., said he understood Mr. Grow's design was to prevent the bill from being sent to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union. He hoped, however, that a bill involving so many important principles would be sent there, so that it might have the widest discussion. Experience had shown that it was the best place for that purpose. Amendments may there be offered and fully debated. If what appeared in the newspapers there be true, the Governor and Lieutenant Governor of Kansas, and all gentlemen connected with the government there, are under indictment for treason, which offence was not bailable. Suppose Kansas was admitted into the Union, what provision did the gentlemen from Pennsylvania make for that state of affairs? Let the tribunals of the country take their quiet course. Talk of a dissolution of the Union, it would be mockery in comparison with the revolution and bloodshed which would ensue under this condition of things. He would go far to establish freedom in that Territory, but would oppose all measures to establish it by the subversion of our country. He was not to be moved by outside pressure or inside persuation. Let this important measure go where other important bills go, and be there considered.

Mr. Grow said Mr. Dunn knew as well as any man that to send the bill to the Committe of the Whole on the State of the Union was to kill it effectually. Any man who would vote to send it there might as well vote against the bill directly. The question was whether the House was ready to relieve the people of Kansas from their present oppression by admitting them as a State? What right would thus be trampled down? As to the Governor and Lieutenant Governor being indicted for treason, the admission of Kanas into the Union would perhaps furnish a remedy; but if not, provision could be made to meet the case.

Mr. Dunn moved to refer, pending which the House passed a bill to establish a road from Fort Ridgely, Minnesota, to the South pass of the Rocky Mountains, in Nebraska. Adjourned.

Destructive Fire in Portland, Maine.

Portland, June 24, 1856.

At 3 o'clock this morning a fire broke out in the stable of Barber & Dingley, on Temple street, from which it communicated to the Temple street Church, the Codman House, and the Casco House—all of which were destroyed, together with the wooden buildings in the center of the square.

The fire then spread across Temple street, burning two or three wooden buidings on the southerly side, together with stores occupied by Winship, hatter; Jacob S. Paine, music store; F. E. Pray, tailor; and C. C. Dyer, tailor Muzzy's Block, occupied by L. D. Hanson, shoe store; H. P. Stover, dry goods; and J. Corey, dry goods; also the stores occupied by N. T. Mitchell and Merill & Quimby. The goods from all the stores and the stock of most of the mechanics were saved.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Cornellie, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection!" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

IT IS BETTER TO REPRESENT OURSELVES, THAN TO BE REPRESENTED BY OTHERS.

VOL. II.—NO. 20. NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1856. PRICE FIVE CENTS.

Poetry.

Anniversary Song for the Pioneers.

Commemorating their first Entrance into the Valley on the 24th of July.

Hail! ye mighty, noble Chieftains!
Hail! ye faithful Pioneers!
Powers unseen your footsteps guided,
'Twas Jehovah led you here.

CHORUS.

Zion's Banner—Freedom's Ensign,
Broad and gloriously unfurl'd,
Waves amid the Rocky Mountains—
Heavenly beacon to the world.

From our birth-place, home, and country,
Lo! a people, brave and free,
Driven by men, by Gods directed
Here in search of Liberty.
Zion's Banner, &c.

In the hiding-place of Israel—
In the chambers of the West,
Crown'd with nature's rich abundance,
In these valleys we are blest.
Zion's Banner, &c.

Justice here directs the sceptre—
Truth and love and friendship meet,
Smiling peace her downy carpet
Proffers to the stranger's feet.
Zion's Banner, &c.

Here will virtue be respected,
Industry and useful toil,
Youth and innocence protected
Like the plants of heavenly soil.
Zion's Banner, &c.

Brigham Young, the Lord's annointed—
Lov'd of heaven and fear'd of hell:
Like Elijah's on Elisha,
Joseph's mantle on him fell.
Zion's Banner, &c.

Mighty men compose his Councils
Inspiration makes them wise—
None can circumscribe the measures
Zion's counsellors devise.
Zion's Banner, &c.

Here the hosts of Israel gather—
Abra'm's seed from every land,
Through the Priesthood's light preparing
With the Lord of Hosts to stand.
Zion's Banner, &c.

God will come to bless His people—
Jesus Christ and Joseph too—
Come to introduce a scenery
Great and glorious, grand and new.
Zion's Banner, &c.

How Food is Digested.

Many of our readers will remember a series of experiments, published by Dr. Beaumont, of the United States army, almost twenty years ago, on the phraseology of digestion, in which he was aided materially by a person named St. Martin, a Canadian voyageur. This man had been wounded, by the accidental discharge of buckshot, one of which, entering the lung from behind, traversed it and emerged at the stomach, leaving an opening which could never be united again, and through which Dr. Beaumont was enabled to witness the whole process of digestion, and to make the series of experiments with which his name is so honorably connected.

This opening made by the bullet was about three-fourths of an inch in diameter. Dr. Beaumont tried to effect a cure by keeping St. Martin without food for two days. The gastric juice secreted by the mucous membrane of the stomach would not allow the reunion of the torn walls of the organ. The consequence has been natural—a fistula or opening from the stomach—so that if St. Martin does not keep a compress to the aperture in drinking water on shallowing anything else, the whole contents of the stomach will pass out through that opening. Through this opening comes out a small part of the stomach, i. e., the inner coat, which shows its different appearances—thick or swollen when under the work of digestion, and thinner when the digestion is over.

St. Martin having been lost sight of by the scientific world, after nearly a quarter of a century, has suddenly turned up again as a subject for digestive experiment. He is now in this city, on his way to Europe, under the auspices of Dr. Bunting, of Montreal, who proposes to extend more minutely the series of experiments so successfully commenced by Dr. Beaumont, and also to enable the savans of the old world to witness the experiments. Mr. St. Martin is at present a little upwards of fifty years of age, of a spare frame, but apparently capable of considerable endurance. He is in excellent bodily health, and has much vivacity of manner. His early life was spent upon the frontiers, and since leaving the employ to Dr. Beaumont he has married and resided at Montreal. The opening of the stomach has had no injurious effect upon his health, nor has it prevented him from pursuing active and severe labors. Indeed it is possible that his daily knowledge of the effect of food upon the stomach may have prevented him from abusing this important organ for the gratification of momentary taste. He is a man of simple tastes in his diet, and drinks, it is said, no ardent spirits.

On Saturday afternoon a meeting of several emenent physicians of this city was held at the N. Y. Hospital, for the purpose of being introduced to Dr. Bunting and his celebrated patient, and of witnessing some of his experiments.

The first experiment performed was that of introducing the thermometer into the stomach through the opening, from which its temperature was ascertained to be 101 Fahrenheit. Dr. Bunting next introduced into the stomach the gum elastic catheter, and extracted nearly an ounce and a half of gastric juice, which was presented to Dr. Griscom, and examined by him and others, as to its taste and other properties. The experiment consisted in causing the patient to drink two tumblers of water, which was immediately afterwards poured out through the orifice into a basin held by Dr. Bunting. The experiments being concluded, various questions were pronounced to Dr. Bunting in regard to the time consumed in the digestion of various foods. In reply, he observed that the carrot would consume between five and six hours, while rare roast beef would thoroughly digest in an hour and a half. Malted butter would not digest at all, but float about in the stomach. Lobster was comparatively easy of digestion. Upon the application of the gastric juice to a piece of purple tissue paper, the color at once faded. In relation to the patient's health, Dr. Bunting observed that it had been uniformly excellent, having since his recovery from the effects of the wound, supported a large family by his daily labor.

These experiments do not differ materially from those made by Dr. Beaumont. The latter ascertained the difference between the natural and artificial digestion, by a very simple and beautiful experiment.

He took from the empty stomach, at an early hour in the morning, two ounces of gastric juice, which he divided into two equal parts and placed in separate vials, in each of which he placed a given quantity of roast beef. The one was placed in a sand bath at 99 degrees, and the other in the open air at 39 degrees. He likewise put the same quantity of meat in a like portion of clear water, and intermixed a similar portion with gastric juice previously extracted, of the temperature of the air.

The meat in the fresh gastric juice, placed in the warm bath proceeded towards digestion as if contained in the stomach, and was finally wholly digested by the addition of a further quantity of gastric juice. That contained in the water was simply macerated, and that in the gastric juice having a low temperature, was affected but slightly.

The series of experiments instituted by Dr Beaumont, to ascertain the time required to digest various articles of food, are familiar to medical and scientific men. Boiled rice was found to require one hour to digest, and pork five hours, these two being the extremes.

These experiments also as a general rule, confirmed the opinion previously entertained, that farinaceous vegetables are more easily digested than succulent, and wild game, and the meat of full-grown animals than those which are young.

Another very important law of digestion developed, was, that fluids, like soups and broths, require to have their nutritious parcels converted into a solid substance before they can be acted upon by the gastric juice; the consequence is that such aliments are less adapted for weak stomachs than more solid food.

Occasionally St. Martin's temper, although usually placid, becomes violently ruffled. The effect upon the digestive process was instantaneous and decided. Digestion proceeded, but instead of the formation of healthy chyme, the stomach contained a thin gruel-like substance, much tinged with bile, which, under ordinary circumstances, is not to be found within it.

The case of St. Martin is altogether a peculiar one, the like, singularly enough, not being found on record. It is at the same time one of marked interest, not only on account of what has been contributed by it to our knowledge of digestion but what we may hereafter reasonably expect from it.

It is worthy of remark that St. Martin's life has been a regular one, and that, consequently, the experiments made in advanced years are as valuable as those prosecuted in his youth.—[N. Y. E. Post.

Union of the Mississippi and the Lakes.

Green Bay, June 17, 1856.

Yesterday was a proud day for Northern Wisconsin. The first boat from the Mississipi, the steamer Aquilla, from Pittsburgh, came down from Lake Winnebago, working her way through the canal and locks just completed, around the numerous rapids of the Lower Fox, and at 5 o'clock P. M., bathed her prow in the clear waters of Lake Michigan. This event is justly regarded by the people of this valley as one of the most important in the history of the North-west. It opens a direct communication across the State, from the Lakes to the Father of Waters, with the Great West, which stretches far away beyond us, toward the setting Sun, and opens to the hardy pioneer a rich, and as yet but partially developed region upon the Fox, Wolf, and Wisconsin Rivers, whose hitherto almost undisturbed waters now bear daily upon their bosoms the rushing steamer freighted with wealth and life. As I came down yesterday in the beautiful little steamer, and gazed upon the wild but lovely scenery upon the banks of the river, and marked the thriving towns that are rising like magic on its shores, from the bosom of the forest, the words of the poet came forcibly to my mind:

"Behind the scared squaw's bark canoe
The steamer smokes and raves,
And city lots are staked to view

This is peculiarly true of this portion of Wisconsin, where but a very short time ago the primeval forest was undisturbed by the axe of the settler, and the red man and the wild beast alone contended for mastery, are now smiling and beautiful villages and cultivated farms; and yet, this country is but partially settled, and is destined, I think, to receive an impetus from this "Fox-River Improvement" unprecedented in the history of the West. A more attractive region than the Valley of the Fox will, I think, need to be sought for long before it will be found. A salubrious and healthy climate and fertile soil, scenery of surpassing beauty, and a water-power unsurpassed, if, indeed, it is equaled in the country. And soon, to complete its attractions for the enterprizing settler, the neighing of the Iron-Horse will echo through its grand old woods with a sound so shrill and clear and with such an unmistakable ring of "Young America" in its tones of triumph.

The citizens of Appleton, the county-seat of Ontagamie County, confindently anticipate the completion of the Chicago, Fond-du-Lac and St. Paul Railroad to this place within the next eighteen months, whence it will undoubtedly be speedily completed to Lake Superior. Push on the Columns. When this enterprise is completed, Appleton will be the most important town in the Northern part of this State. Her water-power is much superior to that of any other town in the valley, and the town site by far the most beautiful I have ever seen—always excepting the City of Cleveland.

Seven years ago, a dense forest covered the spot now occupied by this thriving place, of some two thousand inhabitants. The town stands upon the north bank of the river, six miles below the outlet of Lake Winebago, at the rapids of the "Grand Chute," and is growing rapidly. It has a goodly number of stores, a fine Hotel (the National,) a number of mills, shops, &c., and one of the best schools in the State (Lawrence University,) and must in time be a large manufacturing place; indeed, I think this must yet be true of the whole valley of the Fox River. All that is needed to develop the vast resources of this section of the West is capital, and enterprise to judiciously apply it to manufacturing purposes. In a very short time the vast iron and copper regions of Lake Superior on the North, will be at their very doors, and the exhaustless coal-fields of Illinois on the South, will be cheaply and readily accessible by railway. Then capital and energy can find profitable opportunities for investment at that point, and I have the faith to believe that Eastern capitalists will have the wisdom to see, and seize, this golden opportunity.—[Cor. Emigration from England and Ireland.

We extract the following from The London Times:

That interesting annual compilation "The General Report of the Emigration Commissioners," in its issue for the current year, presents us with a comparative analysis of past and present emigration, which is eminently fertile of suggestions on the state of the labor market and the prospects of the working classes in England. It appears from this summary that since the year 1815, in which the great French war terminated, nearly 4,300,000 persons have left the United Kingdom for the United States and the British colonies. Of this number, more than 2,620,000, or over 61 per cent., have emigrated during the last nine years. For a succession of years the annual efflux of population was inconsiderable. In 1842 it slightly exceeded 129,000. In 1847 the Irish famine brought on the Irish exodus, which in the eight years ending in 1854 has swelled the average of the annual emigration to 305,000 souls!

The following is a comparative statement of the numbers who have quitted the country during the last four years:

1853	329,937	1855	176,807

The above quoted numbers represent the total emigration from our shores; the subjoined is a category of the Irish proportion for the last five years. There left Ireland in

1851	254,537	1854	150,209
1853	192,569

We thus see that our emigration has been in a rapidly decreasing ratio for the last four years; and this decrease is more signal in the case of Ireland than England, for the year 1852, which exhibits the maximum for England, exhibits a diminution on the part of Ireland as compared with the preceding year; and while the decrease in the general emigration in 1854 amounted to 12.29 per cent., and in 1855 to 52,05, the decrease in the Irish emigration amounted to 33.23 and 64.95 per cent., during the same periods. But this is not all. Not only have much fewer persons left the United Kingdom within the last two years, but a noticable portion of those who have left seems to be returning. During the year 1855 not fewer than 22,821 persons, (or 13 per cent., of the whole emigration of the year,) returned home. Of these 18,402 came from America, and 4,419 from Australia. Of these the proportion of cabin to steerage passengers was from Australia only 16¼ per cent., and from America only 1¼ per cent—a proportion which the resources of the diggings and the antecedent position of many Australian emigrants might have led us to anticipate.

Struck by Lightning—A Remarkable Case

A most singular and remarkable accident occurred on Saturday night, involving a portion of the crew of the barque Fame in its consequences. As that vessel, bound for this port with a cargo of lumber was off the mouth of Grand River, Canada, at about 9 o'clock on the evening mentioned, she was struck by lightning, and a majority of her crew who were on deck, were disabled by the shock. The remarkable part of the narrative is, that not a mark is to be seen upon the vessel, indicating that she has been subject to such an accident. The persons injured are Rufus Derby, 2d mate, badly burned on his right leg; (he is a married man and has a family in Buffalo.) Francis Scott, severe burn on thigh and hip; Peter Johnson, severe burns on back and arm; Geo. Branson, head burned and swollen; William Kimball, leg and arm badly burned. The barque, rendered unmanageable by the deprivation of most of her crew, drifted about the lake until Sunday, when the schooner Melrose bound for the canal, was spoken, from which two hands were obtained, and the Fame was brought into port. That a vessel could have been struck by lightning and six of her crew suffered from the shock, without so much as a scorch or splinter to show that the subtle fluid had touched her, seems wonderful; and the fact adds another to the many mysteries connected with the subject of electricity.—[Buffalo Express, 10th.

Despotism in Utah.

It is a mystery to us, how men, occupying prominent positions as journalists, and who profess to be well posted up in the history of the times, can give utterance to the idea, which we occasionally see advanced, that the people of Utah are completely bound hand and foot, body and soul, under a tyranical despotism, without the power to extricate themselves from that position by leaving the territory, or doing anything else that is the inalienable right of freemen to do, unless it meets the mind of their superiors in the Church. To assert, as a weekly paper of this city (the Golden Era) lately has done, that the professers of the Mormon faith are under the constant surveillance of the spies of the Church, or that the threat of assassination deters them from exhibiting the disaffection which they feel, and prevents them from hurling defiance at "Young and his cut-throat minions," is simply preposterous, and totally at variance with every thing reliable that has been written or told about the people. What men can expect to gain by perpetrating and publishing such malignant perversions, that every one, who is in the least informed on these subjects, must know to be such, we cannot divine. Such reckless fabrications betray a malicious and contemptible spirit, as their originators must be aware that they are utterly false.

Who does not know that there are hundreds of men leaving the Great Salt Lake country every season, for the east and the west, and if there are any there who wish to leave they are as much at liberty to do so as they would be were they in California; and yet this paper says that one-third at least of the professors of the Mormon faith would, if they did not have the fear of assassination before their eyes, renounce the religion to which they are held unwilling converts. A few weeks ago it was stated in this paper to which we allude, that nine-tenths of the converts to Mormonism were knaves, &c.; now it appears that the editors have had more recent intelligence, for by some means, not set forth by them, "one-third, at least, of the Mormons" have become suddenly transformed in their estimation from knaves to honest men, and are now only kept from renouncing Mormonism through the fear of the omnipresent spies of the Church. A few weeks ago the Mormons were, with scarcely an exception, if we may believe them, a pack of cut-throats, subsisting by plunder, etc.; but now they have suddenly ascertained that the minions of Gov. Young are the only cut throats, and have obtained information through which they now know that there are men of property in Utah who dare not on the peril of their lives, or the sacrifice of all they own, leave the Territory. We cannot conjecture how these different statements of theirs can be reconciled, or how they can escape the charge of falsification; unless, indeed, they consider they are licensed to say everything bad about the Mormons they possibly can, without the slightest regard to facts or testimony. To draw the long bow, and to deal as largely in romance, as they evidently do when they attempt to write about Mormonism, requires a good memory, if not gifted with that necessary qualification, a perusal of their previous articles is necessary, or they will inevitably lose their credit for consistency among reflecting and discerning men.

We are aware that in noticing these foolish and untruthful statements, we are bestowing more attention on them than they deserve; but emanating from the quarter whence they do—from a paper professing to be the leading weekly in the State, they demand exposure. With the Mormons themselves such statements pass unheeded, even those who have never lived among the people have sufficient penetration to understand at a glance the spirit by which they are dictated; and all who bestow any reflection on the subject must perceive that such a state of things cannot possibly exist. The Territory of Utah is not walled in nor completely excluded from outside influences and intercourse: since the great discovery of gold there has been a constant stream of emigrants passing through there to California, and if any portion of its inhabitants were disposed to leave, they had abundant opportunities of doing so.

These gentlemen state that they know a man of property dare not leave the territory; will they cite us to the instance where they have been unlawfully detained there? Were they fully conversant with Mormonism, they would know, that instead of measures being taken to prevent the disaffected, whether men of property or otherwise, from leaving Utah, the people have always felt that the community has been benefitted by their absence, and would, therefore, never be guilty of interposing force to deter them.

We think that it would be a good plan for writers, who are striving so zealously to give the people all the knowledge they can about the despotism under which the Mormons are living, to give their readers, at the same time, a little insight into the secret of the Mormons' unity, and freedom from litigation, broils and bloodshed. It is universally conceded that with all their corruption and fanaticism, they enjoy these blessings to an unparalleled extent; and we conceive that it would be a work of philanthropy to make known the causes which produce these results. Will not some individual, out of the numbers who profess to know all about the Mormons, step forward and do this?

The State of California is noted for the number of its pious, self-sacrificing and Christian ministers, who are devoting the whole of their time in endeavoring to suppress vice, inculcate virtue, and institute a better order of things; but it is remarkable that with all their labors and the vast outlay of money there is made to carry out their plans, they are immeasurably behind the Mormons in accomplishing the objects to which they profess they are devoting their lives. Their labors have been useless and unfelt.

Comparisons are proverbially odious; but we can scarcely refrain from instituting a comparison between the situation of the two people—the people of California and the people of Utah. The land of one filled with bloodshed, crime and violence; while the other is enjoying a complete immunity from these evils, and order and harmony everywhere visible in all their proceedings. Probably some of these writers on "Mormonism and the Mormons," can explain the cause of this palpable difference. If despotism produces the good order and harmony witnessed among the Mormons, we have an idea that it would not be a bad move to engraft a sufficient amount of it into our republican institutions in this country to produce similar results.

If men would but reflect, there would be no need for lengthy argument to prove to them that these absurd and ridiculous statements made about the Mormons are false. Can an evil tree bring forth good fruit? Will a pure stream proceed from an impure fountain? Is it possible that Utah, if her inhabitants were as wicked, and her government as despotic, as they are represented to be, would have less crime and bloodshed committed within her borders, from the time of her settlement up to the present, than there has been frequently committed in one week in this State? We leave it for just and virtuous men to decide.—[Western Standard.

Microscope Marvels.

Let us look at some of the animalculæ to be found in a drop of water. Of these creatures which differ in size from the 30th to the 30,000th thousand part of an inch, one the most remarkable is the naviculæ. Upon examination it appears to be cased in an armour of flint, but it contrives to walk about upon twenty or thirty legs. If we watch it narrowly for five or six hours—no inconsiderable period in the existence of an animaculæ—we shall note a thin transparent line spreading across it in some direction or other. After the line makes its first appearance, it becomes more visible every minute, and rapidly increases in width. At length the creature begins wriggling its limbs violently, the body splits asunder, and two new naviculæ are made out of one old one. This curious creature has something like a hundred stomachs, and its mouth, which is situated near one extremity, is surrounded by a number of almost invisible tentacula, with which it grasps its food; but as soon as the transparent line appears, which denotes its approaching division into two, as, another mouth will be wanted, another is seen sprouting from the other extremity, and is ready to perform its functions as soon as the separation is effected. The naviculæ come to maturity at the age of 12 hours, and under ordinarily favorable circumstances divides itself into two every 12 hours. It is, therefore, reproduced from Mr. Malthus's principle, that is, according to a geometrical ratio; and, at the end of a month, such is the result of geometrical progression, that there were no checks to their increase, a single naviculæ would have produced eight hundred millions of living beings. But it would seem that even such a rate of increase is not sufficient for the demand; because some kinds of naviculæ split themselves into sixteen instead of two in the same space of time.

Keeping Secrets.

Constantly I see quoted, as if it were an excellent lesson in morals, the maxim, "Never expect another to keep a secret which you can not keep yourself." The maxim is the concentrated essence of selfishness and falsehood. To receive secrets, to hold them sacredly, and use them wisely in intercourse with the depositors, is the highest office of friendship. The power to keep another's secrets better than your own, is one of the surest signs of a noble nature. The very impulse to confide—the eagerness of the "O'er fraught heart" to relieve itself—is a suggestion that another will keep its secret for it, and love the more, and not the less. All friendship that is worth the name, is a giving and receiving of confidences. My friend is one to whom I can show myself as I am, without reserve, sure of his sympath and counsel. I hope he will find me as ready to give as to take in the commerce of love and service. If he tells me a secret of his, I will strive to deal with it, as he would have me do, if he could enter my mind and regulate my thoughts. If by insight or observation I come to know what I have reason to believe he would not have me know, or if, in a moment of excitement, he himself tells me what when soberer I fear he would wish blotted from my memory—then I will hold such a secret more guardedly than even one which he has formally intrusted to my keeping. I am never afraid of knowing too much of my friend. I am sure I can get more readily at his worst than at his best; and my happiest hour is that in which I look up to him and think him superior. If he were not noble I should not have chosen him—if he is, I will trust in him, though he slay me.

If you find this philosophy too high-strung, then look you to it quickly, and make up your soul's accounts—for the fault is in you, and not in the philosophy.—[Tait's Magazine.

Nineveh was 15 miles long, and 40 miles round, with a wall 100 feet high, and think enough for three chariots abreast. Babylon was 60 miles within the walls, which were 75 feet thick and 300 feet high, with 100 brazen gates. The temple of Diana, at Ephesus, according to Pliny, required 220 years to complete it, and was supported by 127 pillars, 60 feet high, having been raised by as many kings. The largest of the pyramids is 481 feet high, and 653 on the sides; its base covers 11 acres. The stones are about 30 feet in length, and the layers are 208. It employed 360,000 men in building. The labryinth of Egypt contained 300 chambers and 12 halls. Thebes, in Egypt, presents ruins 27 miles round, and had 100 gates. Carthage was 25 miles round. Athens was 25 miles round, and contained 250,000 citizens and 400,000 slaves. The temple of Delphos was so rich in decorations, that it was plundered of £100,000, and Nero carried away from it 200 statues. The walls of Rome were 12 miles round.

Transmission of Sound.

The nearer the bells are hung to the surface of the earth, other things being equal, the further they can be heard. Franklin has remarked that many years ago the inhabitants of Philadelphia had a bell imported from England. In order to judge of the sound, it was elevated on a triangle in the great street of that city, and struck, as it happened, on a market day, when the people coming to market were surprised on hearing the sound of a great bell at a greater distance from the city than they ever heard before. This circumstance excited the attention of the curious, and it was ascertained the other sound of a bell struck in the street reached nearly double the distance it did when raised into the air. In the air sound travels at the rate of from 1,130 to 1,140 feet per second. In water, 4708 feet per second. Sounds are distinct at twice the distance on the water that they are on the land.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1856.

Last Chance for Office.

"Old Bullion" up for Prophet.

Col. Thos. Benton, alias Old Bullion, like the dying gladiator, is making the last struggle for life. Lately he has been trying to raise an excitement among the "Pukes" in the hope that in some unguarded moment he might slip into the governorship of Missouri. There are folks in the world not over scrupulous about how a thing is done,—"The end justifies the means." The Colonel's speech at St. Louis on the 21st ult. is a wholesale tirade of accusation against the present administration at Washington, the best resemblance that we have yet seen of an attack of a charlatan pill vender upon a more successful candidate for public patronage. The administration is everything that is crooked, ugly and despicable, and Col. Thomas Benton has announced the judgment. Amongst the many crimes charged to President Pierce, leniency to the Mormons is not the least. That our readers may understand Old Bullion's claims to be ranked with the Prophets, out of Israel we presume, we publish entire his tirade against Gov. Young and the inhabitants of Utah, in which he parades his prophetic spirit. We think it may serve a good purpose to give Mr. Benton's short description of the state of the Territories by way of introduction:

"Neglect of the Territorial governments is another of the offences of this administration. Political partisans and pot-house demagogues are sent out to fill their offices—men unfit, if they were disposed, but merely electioneerers, engaged in the State and federal elections, while the protection of the federal government is utterly unknown; and violence, bloodshed and disorder overspread the land. Beale, whose ascendant over the savage mind charmed the Indians into infantile submission, was dismissed because he would not electioneer, to make room for a pot-house demagogue, who could do nothing else. California, Oregon, New-Mexico, are all the scenes of bloody outrage. Indian wars rage—private murder prevails—law is impotent—the federal officers are of no account, and the citizens are driven to the necessity of providing for themselves.

I need not mention Kansas; the condition of that blood stained ground is sufficiently known to you. I will speak of Utah, where the federal government is ignored and repudiated—its laws and authority set at defiance. The term of the Mormon Governor, Brigham Young expired three years ago. As he had thrown off the authority of the United States, it was determined to send him a successor—a military graduate of West Point—and Capt. Steptoe was called from his pleasant quarters to go upon the enterprise. When Brigham heard of it, he made a speech to his people, in which he told them what President Pierce intended, and what he himself intended—one sending a new Governor, and the other intending to repulse the compliment. It was in that speech that he said to his people that he intended to remain in his place until the Lord should say to him, "Brigham, I don't want you to be Governor of Utah any longer."

The administration was afraid of him, and undertook to out manœuvre him, and that in the highest style of West Point tactics; they determined to smuggle Steptoe in. For that purpose the military governor was furnished with a battalion of soldiers, and directed to proceed to the Mormon Kingdom, as if he was going to California, stop there to hybernate, and, watching the chance, slip into the governor-ship some day when Brigham was out—something like a weazel that gets into anothers hole when he finds the occupant gone. When I heard of this fine scheme, I said to my acquaintances, and can prove that I said it, (for I do not indulge in ex postefacto predictions,) that the next time we should hear of this Gov. Steptoe again, he would be on his tip-toes, marching to the tune of "Hey, Betty Martin, tiptoe fine," and so it was; for before the hybernation was over he was on his march in good truth to California, to return thence to the United States.

But there was something else which I did not forsee, which was, that this military governor carried off four dozen of the Mormon Betty Martins with him, to the infinite distress of the Saints, profoundly chagrined to find themselves so encroached upon by the Gentiles. But it was the last encroachment of the kind. No more of the United States military have been there since, and Brigham says he has promised the Lord that if they come again he will fix them so that they will let his Betty Martins alone. And that was the end of the attempt by this administration to give a Governor to Utah. Brigham holds on to the place, and Mr. Pierce stands with hands off, and the scandalous spectacle is seen of a man assuming to be Governor by the will of the Lord, repulsing the United States authorities, trampling the laws under foot, insulting and defying the federal government, and no attempt made to reduce him to law and order. Such is the insurgent condition of the polygamous kingdom of the Latter Day Saints.

All have heard of this polygamy—a state of things at which morality, decency, shame revolts; and I have been told how an institution so abhorrent to human nature is kept up, and that it is by virtue of the civil power vested in Brigham and his Saints, still more than by his religious power—there are enough to overturn the institution, if it was not that all civil power, as well as the religious jurisdiction, is in the hands of Mormon authorities; so that this administration is actually responsible to the moral sense of the civilized world for the present continuance of polygamy in the Territory of Utah."

Col. Benton may find it convenient to let some portion of the inhabitants of Missouri know his hostility to the Mormons; it may secure him some extra votes. We are, however, no stranger to his feelings towards us; we know a little more than we have time now to touch, but he is likely to have a little of our attention at a more convenient season. We confine ourselves presently to the last burst of his passion.

On what authority does Mr. Benton charge the inhabitants of Utah with ignoring and repudiating the Federal Government and setting at defiance its laws and authority? He gives none: probably he is satisfied with the rambling, topsy-turvy, helter-skelter accusations of run-a-way Brocchus & Co. of 1851. The inhabitants of Utah set at defiance law and authority, ignore and repudiate the General Government—do they really? Will Thomas Benton point to us a Territory wherein the General Government, laws and authority are more respected? We defy him to do so, and tell him in our plainest English that his charge against Utah is pure calumny. Brigham Young never threw off the authority of the United States, and we defy Thomas Benton to state when, where, and in what manner he did so. His mere ipse-dixit is but another calumny.

We pass over the prediction, its fulfilment and march of four dozen Mormon Betty Martins, if Col. Steptoe and President Pierce are satisfied to let pass in silence Old Bullion's interpretation of events, we can well afford to let the gentleman rejoice in his place among the prophets. Should he, now that he has enrolled his name on the list, cultivate a closer acquaintance with Israel's prophet and renowned legislator, we should not at all be astonished to see him giving laws from the gubernatorial chair, if he ever get there, for the regulation of that very polygamy against which he talks so much and understands so little. Time works wonders.

"Brigham holds on to the place, and Mr. Pierce stands with hands off." Of course they do; but not from rebellion on the one side or fear on the other. Gov. Young is there because "Providence, that shapes our our ends, rough hew them as we will," has so decreed it. Mr. Pierce is one of God's creatures, and may insensibly and unintentionally accomplish His high purposes; but had it been otherwise decreed, had Mr. Pierce appointed any gentleman to succeed Governor Young, and had he accepted the appointment, there would have been no difficulty among the Mormons. It is a long time since they learned to rejoice in all the dispensations of Providence, whether they might be "for the present joyous or grievous." The Mormons sing,

"Behind a frowning Providence
He hides a smiling face."

And we can assure Mr. Benton that, whether he will acknowledge it or not, Moses, the great historian, set forth a true principle when he said, The Lord raised up one and cast down another for the accomplishment of His own purposes; and however Mr. B. may be scared by "the scandalous spectacle of a man assuming to be Governor by the will of the Lord," it is quite correct. The Pharoah that would not listen to Moses was raised to his throne for the accomplishment of His purposes, and if the Lord wanted to scourge this nation and raised up Thomas Benton to the office of Chief Magistrate for that purpose, the Mormons, whether they made bricks without straw or not, would acknowledge the hand of the Lord, and think the selection becoming the work to be done. We hope he is now converted, for we have done the very best our limited time and space in this article permit us, to proselyte.

Governor Young is charged by Thomas Benton, that would-be-Governor of Missouri, with "repulsing the United States authority, trampling the laws under foot, insulting and defying the Federal Government." Again we ask on what authority, when, where and how? We defy Mr. Benton to answer. He has undoubtedly heard reports, but does any man who respects himself become the echo of all the infamous stories that pass from lip to lip? An honorable man is quick to hear, but slow to speak; he carries the torch of examination and of criticism upon the work of another; weighs the accusers; repulses those whom ignorance, passion, and ifinterested motives may have misled; according to others a degree of confidence proportioned to their known integrity, and carefully examines above all the facts—those incontrovertible witnesses that cannot be disputed. Has Col. Benton done all this before he made his charges against Gov. Young? He has not, and is therefore a mere echo; the defamer of a man the equal of whom he can never be, were he to live here a thousand eternities.

The pure, virtuous, immaculate Col. Benton could not bridle his calumniating tongue till he had spit at the morality of the inhabitants of Utah. "All have heard of this polygamy—a state of things at which morality, decency, shame revolts."

When we read such charges we think of what surrouds us, and oh, how our heart sickens at the hypocrisy and brazenfaced impudence of some men. Morality, decency and shame revolt where polygamy exists! Oh, Thomas Benton!—But what is the use of arguing? Some men, Solomon says, if pounded in a mortar would come out the same. We leave old Bullion to a more convenient season, hoping he may improve, during the interim, the opportunity of reading the Bible he professes to believe, and repenting bitterly of all his folly.

Polygamy,

The Interesting Subject at Washington.

The all-wise and intelligent Creator of the Universe, knowing the influence and power of practical life upon men, chose an humble and upright man, led him from his idolatrous nation to another country, where, far removed from former associations and far from importunate friends, he might teach him the true value of all earthly things in and of themselves; man's incompetency to accomplish much through his own unaided action; the benefits resulting from a well-regulated life and a proper organization, and thus qualify him for a public preacher to all generations. This man, Abraham, properly instructed, walked in the fear of his instructor, was blameless in all his ways. His son and grand-son, Isaac and Jacob, were likewise faithful to the laws of their great Creator. Their upright conduct, humility and acknowledgment of God's hand in all their prosperity, gained for them a high place in His esteem. They were remembered among His friends. From their loins sprang princes, prophets and rulers; and no less a personage than Jesus Christ.

Their memories were cherished by future generations long after they descended to the grave. The Lord whom they served raised to their names an imperishable monument—I am the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Inspired poets and prophets honored them and loved to be accounted of their race. Jesus, the highest and purest of men, spoke of them with veneration and pointed to them as models for all who desired to work righteousness. All good men were proud of their lineage from Abraham, and even hypocrites, who had nothing of themselves to boast, remembered and vaunted of having Abraham to be their father. But, alas! darkness, gross darkness covereth the children of men. Prophetic fire has for ages been quenched. Generations of men have for ages played their part on the stage of life and passed away, and little or no remembrance of the past has been before their eyes. Some few have claimed Abraham for father according to the flesh, but wallowing in darkness they have been scattered throughout the earth, abandoned and forsaken.

Though darkness has long covered the minds of men, a ray of hope has been cherished by the few that a time would come when the barren earth would again be visited with refreshing showers from on high; that "the day-star would arise with healing on his wings." Prophets among scattered Israel comforted the repenting few with the hope that God would yet have mercy and bring again Zion, that the waste places of Jerusalem would be rebuilt; that the nations should once more hear the glad news, the tidings of salvation. The predicted day has arrived; the day-star sheddeth forth its purest rays, though the darkness comprehendeth it not, and those who have the hearing ear and the understanding heart, know in what they trust.

The world may deride; nevertheless, the lessons taught Abraham have been taught again in our day. Joseph, like Abraham, has listened to the voice of his Creator, been instructed in His paths, and walked humbly therein. The wise who understand rejoice in their association with the man who has been instructed in the value of earthly things; the man who taught the blessings of associations and organizations, and lived by the order of heaven. No dearer to ancient Israel could be the memory of Abraham than that of Joseph to his brethren now. The revelations to Joseph are more than all earthly things. Those who know them, and live by them, are prepared to defend them by their life. They know their value, and know no master but one—that is God. To Him they adhere; His voice they obey; they know no other. Years have rolled round since the young prophet spoke to the world, and reminded men of the dealings of God with Abraham; that the latter was the father of the faithful; that heirship to thrones, principalities and powers in the Kingdom of God was for those who were of the faith and did the works of Abraham. The wicked have raged, threatened and sought to despoil Israel, but they have stood the shock. Everything that could be shaken has been shaken; but the immovable rock remains unchanged, and no power on earth can shake it.

It is certainly a difficult business to uproot early education. When Jesus poured out upon the pharissical hypocrites of Jerusalem it was hard to bear him, and none but the truly noble, conscientious few, who had confidence in Moses and the prophets, stood firm and declared for the reading of the law. We, therefore, presume that the committee who father the bill are not great sticklers for either Abraham or the prophets, and should think they have but a slight acquaintance with Hebrew literature, and that it has been some time since they consulted the Divine oracle, or they would have hesitated to qualify patriarchal marriages pollution.

With this introduction, we publish the subjoined bill, presented by Mr. Morril, of Vermont, in the House of Representatives, Washington, and every one can judge of the support the Vermont Representative will draw from men who fear God:

A Bill to punish and prevent the practice of polygamy in the Territories of the United States and other places over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction.

Whereas, It is admitted that polygamy is permitted by the municipal regulations of one of the Territories of this Union, and is sought to be justified on the ground that this abomination in a Christian country is a religious rite of the inhabitants of said Territory; and whereas, no principle of self-government or citizen sovereignty can require or justify the practice of such pollution; therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That if any person or persons, being married and an inhabitant of any Territory of the United States or other place over which the United States possess exclusive jurisdiction, shall intermarry with any persons, or cohabit with any person or persons, or live with any person or persons as partners acknowledging conjugal relations, the former husband or wife being alive, he, she or they so offending shall, on conviction thereof, pay a fine not exceeding $500, and be imprisoned not less than two years nor more than five years; Provided, nevertheless, that this section, or anything therein contained, shall not extend to any person or persons whose husband or wife shall absent him or herself one from the other for the space of five years, the one of them not knowing the other to be living within that time, nor to any person or persons who shall be at the time of such marriage divorced by competent authority, or to any person or persons whose former marriage by sentence of competent authority, shall have been declared void.

We should think all good folks in the Union, with few exceptions, believe that our fathers who framed the Constitution lacked neither wisdom nor patriotism when they decreed toleration to every creed; we expect, therefore, that those who love their memories will not forget this attack from Vermont, and those who have any respect for Abraham will be expected to sustain the purity of those marriages through which the blood of the Father of the Faithful was transmitted to his royal descendant, Jesus Christ. For Christianity's sake—if not for Mormonism, which is the same—we would counsel Mr. Morril to take back the bill and offer it on the altar—a burnt offering for bigotry. It is not too late to learn, even in Washington, that God is mighty and will prevail.

The Horizon.

THIS fine ship arrived at Boston dock on Sunday morning with a large company of Saints. We have seen only one family who came by that ship, and from them we have a most favorable report of Captain Reed and his crew. The captain has been a kind father to them all, ministering to them everything he could during their sickness. Our heart warms to such men; when we hear of their kindness to our brethren we feel in our souls to say God bless them.

Delegation from Utah to Washington.

HON. G. A. SMITH left here for Washington on the 26th ult. Hon. John Taylor proposed joining his colleagues before this time; but we are sorry to say that after he had got through with much pressing business and was on the point of starting for Congress he was taken suddenly indisposed and became very weak in body. He has retired to the country, hoping that a few days will restore him to his wonted health. That this "champion of rights" may realize his expectation and soon be qualified for his mission, will be the prayer of all the Saints.

Arrival.

PRESIDENT ERASTUS SNOW has just walked in, unexpectedly indeed, to our sanctum, right from the cars, covered with dust, but feeling first-rate. He is on Deseret business to Boston, Washington and New York. He left the camp, Iowa City, on the 23d. Hand-cart business was very brisk; the third company was ready to start, which cleared the ground of P. E. Fund passengers. The health of the emigrants was good. The Thornton's company left Chicago for the camp the same day.

Departures for Europe.

PRESIDENT ORSON PRATT left Boston on Wednesday, for Liverpool, accompanied by President Ezra T. Benson, Elders Phineas H. Young, Truman O. Angell, and Lorenzo H. Hatch.

The same day, the following Elders, who arrived in this city within the last ten days, embarked on the New World, in this port, for Liverpool: Thomas R. King, Peter Robinson, Elijah E. Holden, Almerin Grow, from Fillmore City, U. T.; William Pace, from Spanish Fork; Isaac Higbee, from Provo City; Thos. Bladen, from Cedar City; Jesse Hobson, from Farmington; James Taylor, from Lehi; Jas. Ure, James Beck, Miles Romney, from G. S. L. City.

Elder William Miller leaves for Liverpool, by the Atlantic, on Saturday.

Departures for Salt Lake.

FOURTEEN members of the New York Branch of the Church left on Wednesday afternoon, by the Erie Railway, for Iowa City, en route for Utah.

Kansas.

THE Special Committee appointed some time since by Congress to investigate the troubles in the Territory of Kansas, having performed the duties assigned to them laid, before the House on Tuesday a voluminous report on the past and present of this unhappy Territory. The Herald gives the following epitome:

"We devote a large portion of our valuable space this morning to the publication of the majority report. It is indeed, a formidable document; and for the benefit of such of our readers as may be deterred by the prevailing warm weather from its perusal we give the following synopsis of its contents: The report shows that as soon as the bill to organize the Territory of Kansas was passed, a large number of the citizens of Missouri went into the Territory and held squatter meetings, passed resolutions denouncing abolitionists, and declaring that slavery existed therein. In the autumn of 1854, a secret political society, called "The Blue Lodge," was formed, the plan of operations of which, with its oaths, &c., are given in the report. This Lodge controlled all the subsequent movements and invasions on the part of the Missourians. At the election November 29, 1854, for a delegate in Congress, there was no evidence of fraud except in sparsely settled and remote districts, where citizens of Missouri appeared and voted. During the winter of '54–'55 great excitement existed in the Territory, on account of the invasion, and much bitter feeling was manifested. In February, 1855, a census was taken, and the number of legal voters was ascertained to be 2,905. Previous to the election in the spring of 1855, active preparations were made in Missouri to invade the Territory, and a complete organization was effected. Leaders were chosen, tents, provisions, amunition and arms distributed, and the forces were drilled in companies in Missouri; and on the day before the election, it is testified, at least five thousand Missourians took up the line of march for Kansas, and companies went into every representative district of the Territory except one. From accurate and almost absolute proofs it appeared that about 6,300 votes cast at the election for members of the Territorial Legislature, 5,000 were those of non-residents. The majority of the members of both houses of the Legislature, would have been free State men if there had been no invasion of Missourians.

"The committee took a large mass of testimony regarding the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly, which proceedings they state are characterized by recklessness and injustice. The report likewise alludes to the murders, robberies and other crimes committed in the Territory, and states that in no case, except that of McRae (a free State man) was there any prosecution for those offences. No indictments were found, no arrests made, and no measures taken to bring the perpetrators to justice. The report says it is clearly proven that Samuel J. Jones, the Sheriff, was the main cause of the recent disturbances in which he so prominently figured. It is also proved that Mr. Oliver, one of the Investigating Committee, went into Missouri with one of the invading companies. The conclusions of the Committee are, that each of the elections in Kansas was carried by invasion from Missouri; that consequently the Legislative Assembly is an illegally constituted body and has no power to pass valid laws: therefore its enactments are void. The election of G. W. Whitfield, as delegate to Congress, was not held under any valid law—neither was that of Mr. Reeder in accordance with law. The Committee suggest no remedy. The report alludes to obstructions thrown in the way of the Committee and to the general violence which prevails in the Territory."

War and Peace.

THE European Times of June 14th, published at Liverpool, contains an address from the President of the Liverpool Financial Reform Association to the Commercial and industrial classes—subject the differences between Great Britain and the United States. In the copy sent us "American Editors are requested to publish" and forward a copy of the paper in which it might be inserted, to Mr. Willmer. We may inform that gentleman that every man, be he English or American, possessing sound sense is fully convinced of the blessings of peace and the curse of war. John Bull may feel at perfect ease on the war movement, Jonathan has plenty of it at home without going abroad to kick up a row for the fun of the thing.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE official organ of the Government of New Grenada, published at Panama, appeals to England and France against filibusterism they feared from the North, and begs the two Governments to take Central America under their protection as they did Turkey against the Czar of Russia. The appeal is soapy. The following is a specimen: "God bless you, mighty Albion, heroic France! The whole world looks on you, and Spanish America beholds in your alliance the defence of feeble nations and the regeneration of humanity. Therefore, as the vulture of the frozen regions fell down from his lofty height, in the same manner—and the day is not very far—the boa, which silently slides into our groves, will die from the glorious cannon of Sebastopol. Oh, certainly, the name alone of France and England is like a victory, and they will not permit this enchanting America to become the unfortunate victim of an iniquitous filibusterism. France and England watch over the peace of the world, and Spanish America will save herself—and likewise, as Turkey has saved herself from the European vulture, in the same manner that the virgin of Columbus saved herself from the Northern boa."

The Herald of the 29th ult. publishes a correspondent's letter on preparations for an expedition to Mexico—a good imitation of an advertisement, which, by its right name, would be illegal: "An expedition is being formed in this (New York) and some Southern cities whose destination is Mexico. It is to be commanded by American officers, and the men armed with Minie rifles and revolvers; the corps has already enrolled over 400 men, and will be off as soon as the ranks are full; 500 being the full complement. It is to act with the present Mexican Government."

The last news from Nicaragua represents great distress and dissatisfaction in Walker's army, owing to the cholera and fever which prevail there to a terrible extent; provisions are scarce, and the country is under martial law. Walker is expected to commence hostilities against Costa Rica when the weather becomes a little more favorable. Many of his soldiers desert when they get a chance.

Last Sunday afternoon and evening, nine of the Shakers of Lebanon—six sisters and three brothers—held service in Military Hall of this city. Subject: "The blessings of celibacy."

A company of armed emigrants from Chicago to Kansas were stopped at Lexington by Missourians and South Carolinians, who would not permit them to proceed on to the Territory. The company returned by the same steamer to Alton, Ill., escorted by a guard of South Carolinians.

The French residents in this city are raising subscriptions for the sufferers by the late inundations in France.

Casey, who lately shot Mr. King in San Francisco, was executed by the order of the Vigilence Committee on the 22d ult., at the same time Cora paid the penalty of his crime. Casey made a speech, justifying his shooting King, on the ground of his early education teaching him to resent injury. Cora said nothing—thought more. "Yankee" Sullivan, the pugilist, who had figured largely in the elections at San Francisco, was kept in durance vile by the Committee. Fearing the fate of Casey, he committed suicide by opening a vein in his left arm. Previous to committing the deed, he gave some curious revelations on electioneering.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

FRANCE.—Towards the termination of the war in the Crimea, Baron de Barancourte was sent by the French Government to the seat of war for the purpose of compiling a "Narrative of the Crimean Expedition." The Baron's work has recently been published, and created almost as great interest and excitement as the war itself. English journalists charge the Baron with partiality for his nation and its army, "injustice to the English," and "calumny." The Moniteur declares the work non-official and proposes to review it.

His Imperial Highness, Prince Napoleon, was to leave Havre on the 15th ult. on a scientific voyage to the North seas, for which the Emperor has placed at his disposal the Imperial yacht, the Reine Hortense, and the steam aviso Le Cocyte. In addition to the members of his household, the Prince takes with him a commission of staff officers, engineers of the navy and miners, naturalists, draughtsmen, &c. The voyageurs expect to be absent three months. The command of the expedition is entrusted to captain Baron de la Ronciere Le Nowry, commander of the Reine Hortense.

Lous Napoleon is taking steps to have the Empress appointed Regent for her son.

The project of law on the subject has been sent to the Senate, and debated with closed doors. The project proposes that on the Emperor's demise the Empress shall reign, assisted by the Council of the Regency, whose names the Emperor will leave under a sealed envelope. Meanwhile, the Government papers are writing up the project. The Moniteur also gives the project of the Senators Committee on the Regency. It states that the Empress mother is to be regent and guardian of her son during his minority, but not to contract a second marriage while it continues. In case of the death of the Empress, the Regency is to pass to the senior Prince of France, thence to the other Princes in order of hereditary succession, and failing them all, to the Council of the Regency chosen by the Senate.

Two and a half million of francs have been collected for the sufferers from inundation.

ENGLAND.—Mr. Dallas will not be dismissed, but no successor to Mr. Crampton is likely to be appointed under the administration of Mr. Pierce.

In the House of Lords, on Monday evening, the 16th, the Earl of Clarenden stated in reply to the Earl of Derby, that it was not the intention of the government to advise her Majesty to suspend diplomatic relations with the United States. The announcement was received with loud cheers. The Earl of Derby expressed his satisfaction at the statement, but he regarded the course taken by the government as humiliating, and as acknowledging that they had been in error.

Lord Clarendon appealed to the House not to join the Earl of Derby in pressing the question; and the subject then dropped.

Sir Edmund Lyon is to be raised to the Peerage for services rendered in the Black Sea—being the only Peer manufactured from war with Russia.

The Queen gave a grand ball on the evening of the 17th. Two thousand invitations had been given out. Mr. Dallas was present.

Prince Napoleon is visiting English ports in a yacht.

Collections continue in England for the sufferers from the inundations in France.

The baneful ribbon system is prevailing extensively in the northwestern counties in Ireland, especially Donegal and Sligo. Owing to instructions from the government, the constabulatory are making great exertions to break up the confederacy, and numerous arrests have taken place. In Donegal one day last week twenty-one persons were marched into Lifford by the constabulary, and committed for trial at the Assizes.

BELGIUM.—The editor of the Brussells paper, La Nation, has been fined and imprisoned for an editorial alleged to be libelous, of the Duchess of Brabant.

ITALY.—Two or three changes have taken place in the Sardinian Ministry—the chief one being the appointment of General La Marmora to the War Department.

Baron Wener, Austrian Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, has gone to Rome. It is rumored his object is to convince, if possible, Cardinal Antonelli and his colleagues of making necessary reforms.

Ship Horizon.

BOSTON June 28, 1856.

PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR—Dear Brother: We have the pleasure of informing you that we arrived safely in this port this evening. We left Liverpool May 25, at 9 A. M., making a passage of 34 days 9 hours, with a company of Saints, numbering 856, the largest and we believe the best that has crossed the Atlantic in one vessel. The company included two High Priests, three Seventies, one-hundred and six Elders, twenty-seven Priests, fourteen Teachers, and nineteen Deacons; total of officers, one hundred and seventeen. Of these, two had held the position of President of mission; one, Pastor of Conference, seven, President of Conference, and eight, Traveling Elders.

As early as possible the company was divided into Nine Wards, Elders John Ennion, presiding over the first, Thomas B. Broderick, the second, Robert Holt, the third, H. A. Squires, the fourth, Thomas Ord, the fifth, James Stoves, the sixth, John Jaques, the seventh, Peter Mayot the eighth, and Robert Evans, the ninth. Elders John Toone was clerk, Thomas Franklin had charge of the cooking galley, Thomas Dodd served out the water, John Thompson was steward, F. C. Robinson Captain of the guard, and John Jaques historian. Five o'clock, A. M. for rising and prayers, and ten P. M. for clearing the deck of passengers, and for prayers and bed, were the hours originally established, but it was afterwards deemed advisable to change them to six and nine.

The following is a list of the marriages, births, and deaths that have occurred on board, in the order of date.

May 25. F. C. Robinson, from Bradford Conference, and Elizabeth Gamble, from Sheffield, were united in marriage by Elder J. A. Young. Thomas Smith and Mary Jackson, from Pillay, Yorkshire, were united in marriage by Elder W. G. Young.

27. Elizabeth, wife of James Wilson, from Preston, gave birth to a daughter, which was named Nancy Horrizon.

28. Joseph Acres and Ann Pugh, from Shrewsbury, were united in marriage by Elder Edward Martin.

29. William Severn and Mary Astle, from Hucknall, Forkard, Nottinghamshire, were united in marriage by Elder Jesse Haven.

31. Sarah Allcock, from Manchester Branch, died of the flux, aged 66 years.

June 1. George Baker, from Brigton, Sussex, died of consumption.

12. Ann, wife of William Panman, from London Conference, gave birth to a son, which was named William Horrizon.

19. Nancy Horrizon Wilson, before named, died aged 23 days.

27. Ann Allen, from Radcliffe Bridge, Lancashire, died of a paralytic stroke, received on the 16th. Ann E. H., wife of Charles Twelves, from Sheffield Conference, gave birth to a female child.

It was a beautiful and calm day when we left the Mersey. Presidents F. D. Richards and C. H. Wheelock, and several Elders accompanied us out to sea about 20 miles, returning with the tug. The brethren and sisters congregated on deck, and made the welkin ring with their songs of joy and praise. That night and the next day we had a strong breeze, and sea-sickness prevailed, but in a few days most of the company overcame it.

During the greater part of our voyage we have had head winds, and a heavy sea swell against us. Scarcely once have we had a decidedly fair strong breeze. Under such circumstances we consider that our good ship has made a speedy passage. She is certainly a prime sailor. Not a single sailing craft that has appeared on our course could touch us. Our noble vessel has fairly and readily outstripped them all. We have had considerable foggy, cold weather, which made the few clear running days we have enjoyed towards the end of our voyage doubly welcome.

Captain Reed has shown himself a gentleman. He has granted the company every convenience and comfort they could reasonably have desired. His affability and kindness, and his continual carefulness of the welfare of the company, specially of the sick, to whom he has given many comforts from his own stores, have won our respect and esteem, and we say, God bless him.

The Presidents of the various wards, and the other officers, have been as the heart of one man in carrying out the instructions of their Presidents, and the rules and regulations established to maintain cleanliness, health, and good order among the whole, and to promote the general convenience, comfort, and happiness. We are grateful to the Saints for their willing promptness in raising up and doing whatever they have been called upon to do, and for their readiness to carry out, to the best of their knowledge and ability the instructions that have been given to them by those presiding over them. If any like company, of equal number, come across the ocean with less discord and with better order than this company have shown, they will deserve the prize indeed. We sincerely believe that no unvirtuous act has been committed between Liverpool and Boston by any of the company.

The first Sunday after the one on which we set sail, we had a general meeting in the morning and another in the afternoon on the main deck. Every Sunday since, we have had a general meeting in the morning in the same place, and in the afternoon sacrament or other meetings in the various wards. Each ward has also held its respective evening meeting or meetings in the week. These, with the teachings and exhortations of the brethren at their morning and evening prayer-meetings, have tended to comfort, encourage, and cheer the Saints, build them up in their most holy faith, and establish them in the principles of eternal life.

After the sea-sickness and the consequent lassitude had pretty nigh passed away, many of the sisters and some of the brethren earnestly engaged in tent-making, and in a short time forty-five tents and eight wagon-covers were made and packed up.

29th. On our meeting on the main deck this afternoon we gave three cheers for the captain! who, in responding in a short and pithy speech, congratulated the company on their good behavior during the voyage, and said that as the Saints sing, "We'll marry none but 'Mormons,'" he would say that he would carry none but Mormons.

THE MORMON.

Correspondence of a Missionary.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR:—Passing through your city "en route" for Europe I drop you a few lines which if you deem worthy of publishing in your paper, you are at liberty to do so. My object is not to call attention to myself as an individual but I deem it right and proper to bear my humble testimony to the truth upon all suitable occasions, suffice it for me to state therefore a few facts and incidents in the history of my somewhat eventful life for the last twenty years. I was what might be termed religiously inclined from my early youth and commenced at an early period of my life to seek after "truth" trusting to find, if possible, some system of religion whose doctrines if carried out practically would secure eternal happiness. This I have made the main object of my existence for the last twenty years, considering that if man did possess an immortal spirit or soul that would exist beyond the grave either in a state of happiness or misery, it was of more importance to me to secure that eternal happiness than it would be to gain the honors, acquire the wealth or enjoy the pleasures of this transitory life.

At the age of twenty, I first heard the doctrine of Baptism preached, as taught in the New Testament. I embraced the doctrine, obeyed the commandment and was baptised with the promise that I should receive the "gift of the Holy Spirit." In this last, however, I was disappointed; from the fact that he who administered the ordinance of baptism had no authority to do so, neither had he authority for the laying on of hands to confer the Holy Ghost, in fact he did not attempt to practice that ordinance—probably being as ignorant as myself upon the subject. I soon became dissatisfied amongst the Campbellites and sought for further light (if indeed I had any light at all) amongst the Methodists. In that connection I believe that I received a portion of the Spirit of the Lord and was zealous in the cause of Methodism for several years. I at length became dissatisfied for want of light amongst them and I joined the Baptists, but remained with them only a short time believing that I had jumped out of the frying pan into the fire, I therefore returned to the Methodist Church and became a traveling preacher. I preached the doctrines (and practised them too,) of the M. E. Church until I lost all faith in their creed and gave it up as a bad job, so far as Methodism was concerned. I ought here, however, to bear testimony that there is much sincerity among the Methodists, and many, very many of them live up to all the light they have, and when I consider my own case that I was an earnest seeker after truth for twenty years and although the light of the Gospel of the Son of God had been beaming all around me, I was not able to discover that light until very recently. I am inclined, therefore, to think that some of the Latter Day Saints do not at all times exercise that degree of charity towards the sectarian denominations of the day that would be pleasing in the sight of our Heavenly Father. I united with the Presbyterians and there I found their "decrees" of the Almighty too hard for me, I soon abandoned them to their own blindness in which they glory. I next joined the Church of the New Jerusalem, the believers and followers of Emmanuel Swedenborg, who is believed by his disciples to have been a Seer. Connected with that denomination are some very talented men, much union and friendship prevail amongst them, they also teach many truths which are unknown to most of the sects of the day. I soon left them, however, to investigate "Spiritualism" as it is called, and in this investigation I very soon became satisfied that all their "divine manifestations," or as I would call them superhuman manifestations, were produced by the power of Satan—such is my sincere conviction, formed on what I have witnessed amongst them.

After twenty years unremitting toil and study I was left without anything to fix my faith or hopes upon except a vague, indefinite idea of a Supreme Being that I could not comprehend, with whom I could hold no intelligible intercourse, and I felt that my mind was a complete shipwreck, that my life had been spent in vain, I therefore resolved to make the best of the balance of my life, so far as I might have power, to procure some of this world's goods as all hope of the future was blasted, and the Straight and narrow way, spoken of in Scriptures, was fenced up, I accordingly started for California in the spring of 1853. I had occasionally heard of the Latter Day Saints or Mormons, as they are often called and I determined to take Salt Lake in my route for California and examine for myself the doctrines taught by them. I had no doubt that their leaders were imposters, that their religion was a humbug, but the mystery with me was how it was possible so many could be deceived by them.

I had some acquaintance with Joseph Smith several years ago, and although I did not at the time believe him to be a prophet, yet I found him to be a very courteous gentleman and I esteemed him highly as one of the most affable and interesting men with whom I was ever acquainted.

After overcoming many obstacles that seemed to be thrown in my way I arrived at Great Salt Lake City, Utah Territory, in the month of July, 1855. I did not intend to remain long, but I was determined to investigate Mormonism before I went on to California. The first teaching I received was from President Brigham Young the next Sabbath after my arrival in Great Salt Lake City. I at once discovered that I was caught in the "Gospel net" and I testify that Brigham Young spoke and taught as I had never heard man speak and teach before. It was the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, in its fulness and it was accompanied by the Spirit and power of God to my heart, and I sat like a child and received instruction from Brigham Young as Mary sat at the feet of Jesus. I embraced the Gospel and was baptised for the remission of my sins, had hands laid upon me for the Gift of the Holy Spirit and was made to rejoice with joy unspeakable. I do not wish to appear egotistical or boast of my honesty, but I do most sincerely declare that I had been a sincere, earnest and honest searcher after truth for twenty years, and when I found it amongst the Latter Day Saints I was honest enough to embrace it. I am still trying to gain further light as fast as I can comprehend the same, and am now on a mission to Europe, to preach the everlasting gospel to the nations of the earth, and I rejoice that I am called to this work in these the last days, and I testify to the truth of "Mormonism." Joseph Smith was a prophet of the most High God, and Brigham Young is his successor. The doctrines taught by the Latter Day Saints are true, and I testify of these things. God has spoken from the heavens in these latter times and as an ambassador of Jesus Christ I call upon all who shall read this testimony to give heed unto these things for they are verily true and I testify unto them in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Yours truly, ALMERIN GROW.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, June 26, 1856.

The Senate took up Mr. Adams' resolution providing for the adjournment of Congress on the 28th of July.

Mr. Seward, of New York, opposed the resolution. He thought the business of Congress was in no condition to allow the fixing of a day for adjournment, and especially at a time so early as had been designated. The great question of the day, Kansas, had not been taken up in the House, and even here it had only reached an intermediate stage. Mr. S. could not consent to have the day of adjournment fixed until it is decided what plan shall be adopted for restoring peace in Kansas. There are other important subjects, also, which ought to be disposed of, such as the Naval Board question, California wagon road bill, and Pacific Railroad bill. He was anxious to close the session before the heat of summer became intolerable, but thought it better to wait until one or two at least of the most important subjects had been disposed of before fixing a day.

Mr. Brodhead, of Pa., favored the resolution. He did not believe Congress would adjourn until October, unless the time was fixed soon.

Mr. Douglas, of Ill., remarked that all the questions alluded to by Mr. Seward had been thoroughly discussed, and there was no reason why a vote should not be had on each at an early day. No new light could be thrown upon them by further discussion. He should feel it his duty to ask the Senate, early next week, to take up the Kansas question, and sit it out until disposed of. As to the Naval bill, the Senate was tired of the discussion on that. No member could command the attention of six Senators on that subject. One day for each of these measures was enough, and these bills could just as well be disposed of in two weeks as three months. To go on in the present way, with an oration one day only to adjourn for another oration on the next day, the discussion might continue till doomsday, without coming to a vote.

Mr. Hale, of N. H., quoted a remark made several years ago by Hon. Cave Johnson, namely, "The business of a session would always be done in the last two weeks no matter whether an earlier or later day be fixed for the adjournment." Senators say there is disorder in Kansas, and it is very probable the people of Kansas may say there is disorder in Congress. He thought there would be less danger of disorder in Kansas if Congress should adjourn. He would, therefore vote even for an earlier day than indicated by the resolution. He had no hope that any good would be accomplished by this Congress. His trust was in the people. He wanted to adjourn and go before them with the great issues now dividing the public mind.

On motion of Mr. Crittenden, of Ky., a resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Judiciary to examine the laws regulating the succession to the Presidency in case of death of both Presdent and Vice President, and in case they deem further legislation on the subject necessary to report by bill or otherwise.

The rules were amended so as to make it the duty of the presiding officer to call Senators to order whenever they value Parliamentary decorum.

A bill was passed for the construction of a military road from Missouri via Great Salt Lake City to Carson Valley settlement, on the frontier of California and for the establishment of military posts and the sinking of wells thereon. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The bill to admit Kansas into the Union with the Topeka constitution was taken up.

Mr. Dunn, of Ind., said his object in moving yesterday to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole was not to embarrass action, but to insure action, and produce satisfaction; but, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Grow) thought such reference would kill the bill, he (Dunn) now proposed to let it remain for consideration before the House, with the understanding that a general debate shall continue until terminated by the previous question; then members to be allowed to offer amendments and make five minute speeches in explanation, as provided by the rules. By this means the bill may be perfected.

Mr. Washburn, of Me., asked Mr. Dunn whether he proposed any termination to the five minute debate.

Mr. Dunn, let the understanding be three days. Surely, on a matter so grave, this time is brief enough.

Mr. Stephens, of Ga., thought this would not accomplish the object. The three days might be taken up in calling yeas and nays. The bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, said to send the bill there would be to commit it to the "tomb of the Capulets." He recollected, a little more than two years ago, when Mr. Cutting moved to refer the Kansas Nebraska bill, which has brought so many troubles on the country, to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, Mr. Richardson appealed to gentlemen not to permit it to go there, as that would be equivolent to its defeat, and this position was likewise taken by the gentleman from Georgia (Stephens).

Mr. Campbell said the tree is known by its fruits.

Mr. Stephens rejoined. Evil is not the fruit of that tree. He should speak of it hereafter.

Mr. Campbell—So shall I.

Mr. Stephens—Send the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, and the majority can bring it before the House when they choose.

Mr. Campbell reminded the House of the fact that when Mr. Cutting moved thus to refer the Kansas-Nebraska bill, Mr. Breckenridge, the candidate for the Vice-Presidency, said Mr. Cutting sought by this side blow to kill the bill, and accused him of treachery, which difficulty came near being settled on the field of conflict.

After several speeches for and against the bill, Mr. Grow of Pa. gave notice that he would on Saturday move the previous question.

Mr. Morrill of Vt. reported a bill to punish and prevent the practice of polygamy in the Territories of the United States, providing a penalty of five hundred dollars and imprisonment for not less than two nor more than five years. He said there was not one dissenting vote in the committee, and the only difficulty was as to the power to legislate on the subject.

Referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

Territorial business occupied the remainder of the session. Adjourned.

SENATE June 27.

The Senate considered and passed the House bill authorizing the President to cause the Southern boundary of Kansas to be run and marked. Also the bill respecting the harboring of deserters and to protect the public interest in regard to the enlistment and discharge of minors.

The House bill establishing two-additional land districts in Minnesota is passed.

A message was received from the House announcing the death of the Hon. Mr. Bayly of Virginia.

Mr. Mason spoke in exalted terms of the deceased and offered resolutions of respect and condolence.

Mr. Cass paid a fitting tribute of respect.

Mr. Seward—In 1840, before I had personally met Thomas S. Bayly, and while he was yet young, I encountered him in a controversy conducted by him in the Legislature of Virginia, and by myself as the Executive Magistrate of New York, and I felt his ability and power, while I was also compelled to acknowledge his manliness and dignified bearing. In 1850, we met here prepared, I think, by mutual respect, to be courteous adversaries. We remained in that relation toward each other until last December, when he departing with a forlorn hope to Cuba, but deeply impressed that his disease had already become incurable, took his thoughts off from earth and its ambitions, and fixed them upon a higher sphere, its mysteries and it promises, I then became his friend.

I would not intrude on the solemn offices now performed have with so much propriety and justice by his immediate associates, further than to add the testimony of one whom the world regards as a stranger—and may possibly have considered an enemy— to the deceased, to the truth of the highest praises which have been bestowed upon this eminent Virginia statesman. He was a man of practical ability, of genius and of magnanimity. Let no one censure me for throwing a simple wild flower among the wreaths that gather upon the bier that is passing before us and opening our own way toward that scene where we all—whether we shall have parted here as friends or enemies—shall meet again in presence of the common father and judge of all men.

Mr. Mason's resolution was adopted.

Adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Millson (Va.) announced the death of his colleague, Mr. Bayly, pronouncing a high eulogium upon his public and private character, and offering the customary resolutions of respect.

Mr. Goode of Virginia, Mr. Cobb of Georgia and Mr. Campbell of Ohio, spoke in similar terms of their deceased friend.

The resolutions were adopted and the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

June 28.

Messrs. Howard and Sherman, of the Kansas Investigating Committee have arrived.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill providing for the admission of Kansas into the Union.

Mr. Stephens of Ga., having the floor, intimated his design of offering a substitute.

Mr. Campbell of Ohio asked him to accept as an amendment thereto, in effect to repeal so much of the Kansas act as declares void the Missouri Compromise.

Mr. Stephens—I do not accept it.

Mr. Campbell—I suppose not.

Mr. Washburne of Me., said Mr. Stephens's proposition was a side-blow to kill the Kansas bill.

Mr. Stephens denied this, expressing his desire that the latter should be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union. He vindicated the Kansas-Nebraska act and condemned the movements of the Northern people to thwart the policy of that measure. He said the pending bill admitted on its face that the Topeka Constitution was formed against law and order. He was inclined to think the real object of this movement was not so much to get Kansas into the Union as a free State as to kindle the fires of civil war in the country.

Mr. Campbell, in the course of his reply to Mr. Stephens, said he could produce the original manuscript of a letter written by Jefferson a few years before death, in which he not only approved of the Missouri Compromise, but in express terms admitted the power of Congress to exclude slavery. This letter he intended to have lithographed to accompany his speech. He denied that the Kansas-Nebraska bill carried out the provisions of the Compromise measures of 1850, arguing the constitutionality and expediency of excluding slavery from the Territories.

Messrs. Campbell and Stephens repeatedly interrupted each other for explanations regarding the controverted points on slavery.

Mr. Evans of Texas was in favor of admitting Kansas as soon as practicable, without regard to the number of inhabitants, provided a fair election could be had. He would send thither Gen. Scott to secure such a result. He contended that popular sovereignty was an egregious error, because no people could exercise sovereign power till they had acquired complete jurisdiction over the soil.

Mr. Morrell of Vermont contended that the Administration must be held responsible for present agitation, and argued against the extension of slavery into the Territories.

Mr. Dunn of Indiana, expressing a wish to strike down what has led to the present disturbances, and restore things to where they were previous to the Kansas Nebraska act offered an amendment substantially to restore the Missouri Compromise.

Mr. Grow of Pennsylvania moved the previous question.

Mr. Walker of Alabama made an unsuccessful motion to adjourn, and then moved to lay the bill on the table, which was negatived by 70 against 101.

The demand for the previous question was sustained by 88 against 63.

The main question was then ordered that the bill be the first business in order on Monday. Adjourned.

SENATE. June 30.

The bill authorizing the issue of an additional number of arms for the use of California passed.

Mr. Douglas, from the Committee on Territories, to which was referred the various bills relative to affairs in Kansas, made a voluminous report on the subject. It contains an elaborate argument in favor of the new bill accompanying the report, which provides for the appointment of five Commissioners to be selected [by the President] from different sections of the Union, to represent fairly all political parties. They shall take a census of all the legal voters in the Territory, and make a fair apportionment of delegates to be elected by each county to form a constitution and institue a State government. When the apportionment shall be made the Commissioners are to remain in session every day, except Sunday, at the place most convenient for the inhabitants of said Territory, to hear all complaints examine witnesses, and correct all errors in said voters, which list shall be previously printed and generally circulated through the Territory, and posted in at least three of the most public places of each election district; and so soon as all the errors have been thus corrected in said lists, the commissioners are requested to cause a corrected list of the legal voters to be printed, and copies furnished to each Judge of Election, to be put up at the places of voting and, circulated in every county in the Territory before the day of election—no person to be allowed to vote whose name does not appear on the list as a legal voter; the election for delegates to take place on the day of the Presidential election, and the convention to assemble on the first Monday in December to decide, first, whether it be expedient for Kansas to come into the Union at that time, and if so decided, to proceed to form a Constitution and State government, which shall be of republican form. Kansas then to be admitted under such constitution on an equal footing with the original States. The bill provides further, that no law shall be enforced in the Territory infringing the liberty of speech, or of the Press, or the right of the people to bear arms, &c. It also provides punishment for illegal voting, or fraud and violence at elections, and authorizes the use of the military for that purpose. The main point is, that the persons designated by the census as the present inhabitants of the Territory shall decide all points in dispute at a fair election, without fraud or violence, or any other improper influence. All the white male inhabitants over 21 years of age are to be allowed to vote, if they have resided in the Territory three months previous to the day of election, and no other test shall be required; no oath to support the Fugitive Slave law or any other law, nor any other condition whatever.

Mr. Douglas gave notice that he would ask for a vote on the bill on Wednesday.

Several private bills were passed, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Grow, of Pa., made the closing speech in favor of the bill for the immediate admission of Kansas into the Union, and in opposition to all substitutes for the measure under consideration.

Mr. Stephens, of Ga., moved to re-commit the bill to the Committee on Territories, with instructions to report instead thereof the substitute which he had offered, providing for the appointment of five persons by the President to make an enumeration of the inhabitants of the Territory and an apportionment of districts, with the view of electing a convention for the formation of a State constitution, &c.

Mr. Dunn, of Ind., moved, as an amendment, that the committee be required to report a bill restoring the Missouri compromise.

The amendment was adopted by seven majority, as the motion to recommit, with instructions, as amended, was then voted down, only two voting in the affirmative—Dunn and Harrison.

A motion to recommit without instructions was also rejected, by 101 ayes against 100 nays.

Mr. Jones, of Tenn., moved to lay the bill on the table. Negatived by one majority. The main question was then taken, and the bill rejected by one majority.

The result was greeted by clapping of hands and vociferations of joy by the opponents of the bill, while its friends exhibited signs of disappointment.

Amid the confusion the House adjourned.

SENATE. July 1.

Mr. Cass, of Mich., said—A very grave transaction has occurred on the Pacific coast according to accounts just received, into which an examination ought to be made. Governor Stevens, of Washington Territory has proclaimed martial law there, and has arrested a Judge of the District Court and sent him away some distance, thus closing the Court. Mr. Cass did not desire to prejudge the case, but it certainly seemed a great assumption of power. He submitted a resolution calling on the President for the facts in relation to the matter.

Adopted.

Mr. Collamer, of Vermont, submitted a minority report from the Committee on Territories, on the Kansas question. The report was read and ordered to be printed.

The Kansas bill was then taken up.

Mr. Thompson, of Kentucky, was to some extent favorable to the measure reported yesterday, by the Committee on Territories but would prefer to have the Government take strict measures with the Territories, and treat them as a certain father did his bad boys, giving them a flogging every morning because he knew they would do something wrong before night to deserve it. (Laughter.)

Mr. Bigler. of Cal. advocated the bill reported yesterday by the Committee on Territories, as being the best remedy for the existing troubles in Kansas.

Mr. Halk, of N. H., liked the bill very well and thought it was a much fairer proposition than could have been expected, considering the source from whence it emanated; but the difficulty was likely to be that this administration, in carrying it out, would not do so in a fair and impartial manner. He pointed out other objections to the bill also.

Mr. Adams, of Miss., moved to amend the bill by striking out that part which gives the right of suffrage to all persons who shall have filled their declaration of intention to become citizens of the United States in compliance with the naturalization laws.

Mr. Crittenden of Ky., hoped the amendment would be adopted. He thought these foreigners who had declared their intention to become citizens had no more right to vote than those who made no such declaration.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Barclay, of Pa., moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the House rejected the bill for the admission of Kansas into the Union. He expressed the belief that the people of any Territory have a legal and constitutional right to meet and form a State constitution without the authority of anybody in the world, and that the formation of a Territorial government was an assumption unwarranted by the constitution of the United States.

Mr. Houston was surprised at Mr. Barclay's proposition, after having voted the preceeding day against the bill. Considerable talk and excitement followed during which the majority of the Kansas Investigating Committee presented their report. See elsewhere.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Man-Made Religion.

BY ELDER LYON, UTAH.

'Tis strange to see how multiform dissents
Distract the social feelings, and prevent
The universal good of all mankind,
Where no real Truth inspires the human mind.
Why should religion, if 'twere Truth, divert
From love and friendship to debate and strife,
And chain the mind, and petrify the heart,
And be a curse, instead the bliss of life?
Why is it fraught with sighs, and sobs, and tears,
Distrust, hypocrisy, and selfish greed,
A life of doubt, a world of future fears,
A thing not of the heart, but of the head?
The reason's obvious, when its fault we scan—
What God ne'er gave, must be the craft of man.

Millard Fillmore en route Home.

HIS SPEECH AT ALBANY—WHAT THE EX-PRESIDENT THINKS OF THE REPUBLICANS, ETC.

All along the route to Albany Mr. Fillmore was very handsomely received. At Albany his speech was more interesting than those delivered at the other places en route, and will attract some attention:

Mr. Mayor and Fellow Citizens—This overwhelming demonstration of congratulation and welcome almost deprives me of the power of speech. Here nearly thirty years ago I commenced my political career. In this building I first saw a legislative body in session—(cheers)—but at that time it never entered into the aspirations of my heart that I should ever receive such a welcome as this in the capital of my native State. (Cheers.) You have been pleased, sir, to allude to my former services and my probable course if I should be again called to the position of Chief Magistrate of the nation. (Applause.) It is not pleasant to speak of one's self, yet I trust that the occasion will justify me in briefly alluding to one or two events connected with my last adminstration. (Cheers.) You all know that when I was called to the executive chair, by a bereavement which overwhelmed the nation with grief, that the country was unfortunately agitated from one end to the other upon the all exciting subject of slavery. It was then, sir, that I felt it my duty to rise above every sectional prejudice and look to the welfare of the whole nation. (Applause.) I was compelled to a certain extent to overcome long cherished prejudices, and disregard party claims. (Great and prolonged applause.) But in doing this, sir, I did no more than was done by many abler and better men than myself. I was by no means the sole instrument, under Providence, in harmonizing these difficulties. (Applause.) There were at that time noble, independent, high souled men in both houses of Congress, belonging to both the great political parties of the country—whigs and democrats—who spurned the character of selfish party leaders, (cheers), and rallied around my administration in support of the great measures which restored peace to an agitated and distracted country. [Cheers.] By the blessings of Divine Providence, our efforts were crowned with signal success [cheers], and when I left the Presidential chair the whole nation was prosperous and contented, and our relations with all foreign nations were of the most amicable kind. [Cheers.] The cloud that hung upon the horizon was dissipated; but where are we now? Alas! threatened at home with civil war, and from abroad with a rupture of our peaceful relations. I shall not seek to trace the causes of this change. These are the facts, and it is for you to ponder upon them. Of the present administration I have nothing to say, and can appreciate the difficulties of administering this government, and if the present executive and his supporters have with good intention and honest hearts, made a mistake, I hope God may forgive them as I do. [Loud and prolonged applause.] But if there be those who have brought these calamities upon the country for selfish or ambitious objects, it is your duty, fellow citizens, to hold them to a strict responsibility. [Cheers.] The agitation which disturbed the peace of the country in 1850 was unavoidable. It was brought upon us by the acquisition of new territory, for the government of which it was necessary to provide Territorial administrations. But it is for you to say whether the present agitation which distracts the country and threatens us with civil war has not been recklessly and wantonly produced by the adoption of a measure to aid in personal advancement, rather than in any public good. [Cheers.] Sir, you have been pleased to say that I have the union of these States at heart. This, sir, is most true, for if there be one object dearer to me than any other, it is the unity, prosperity and glory of this great republic, and I confess frankly, sir, that I fear it is in danger. I say nothing of any particular section, much less of the several candidates before the people. I presume they are all honorable men. But, sir, what do we see? An exasperated feeling between the North and the South, on the most exciting of all topics, resulting in bloodshed and organized military array. But this is not all, sir. We see a political party presenting candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency, selected for the first time from the free States alone, with the avowed purpose of electing these candidates by suffrages of one part of the Union only, to rule over the whole United States. Can it be possible that those who are engaged in such a measure can have seriously reflected upon the consequences which must inevitably follow in case of success? (Cheers.) Can they have the madness or the folly to believe that our Southern brethren would submit to be governed by such a Chief Magistrate! (Cheers.) Would he be required to follow the same rule prescribed by those who elected him in making his appointments? If a man living south of Mason and Dixon's line be not worthy to be President or Vice President, would it be proper to select one from the same quarter, as one of his Cabinet Council, or to represent the nation in a foreign country? Or, indeed, to collect the revenue, or administer the laws of the United States? If not, what new rule is the President to adopt in selecting him? These are serious, but practical questions, and in order to appreciate them fully, it is only necessary to turn the tables upon ourselves. Suppose that the South having a majority of the electorial votes, should declare that they would only have slaveholders for President and Vice President, and should elect such by their exclusive suffrages to rule over us at the North. Do you think we would submit to it? No, not for a moment. (Applause.) And do you believe that your Southern brethren are less sensitive on this subject than you are, or less jealous of their rights? (Tremendous cheering.) If you do, let me tell you that you are mistaken. And, therefore, you must see that if this sectional party succeeds it leads inevitably to the destruction of this beautiful fabric reared by our forefathers, cemented by their blood, and bequeathed to us as a priceless inheritance. I tell you, my friends, that I speak warmly, on this subject for I feel that we are in danger. I am determined to make a clean breast of it. I will wash my hands of the consequences, whatever they may be; and I tell you that we are treading upon the brink of a volcano, that is liable at any mament so burst forth and overwhelm the nation. I might, by soft words, hold out delusive hope and thereby win votes. But I can never consent to be one thing to the North and another to the South. I should despise myself if I could be guilty of such evasion. (Tumultuous applause.) For my conscience would still ask, with the dramatic poet—

Is there not some secret curse—
Some hidden thender, red with immortal wrath—
To blast the wretch who owes his greatness
To his country's ruin?

In the language of the lamented, immortal Clay—"I had rather be right than be President." (Enthusiastic and prolonged cheers.) It seems to me impossible that those engaged in this, can have contemplated the awful consequences of success. If it breaks asunder the bonds of our Union, and spreads anarchy and civil war through the land, what is it less than moral treason? Law and common sense hold a man responsible for the natural consequences of his acts, and must not those whose acts tend to the destruction of the government, be equally held responsible? (Applause) And let me also add, that when this Union is dissolved, it will not be divided into two republics or two monarchies, but broken into fragments and at war with each other. But, fellow citizens, I have perhaps said all that was necessary on this subject, and I turn with pleasure to a less important, but more agreeable topic. [Cheers.] It has been my fortune during my travels in Europe to witness, once or twice, the reception of royalty, in all the pomp and splendor of military array, where the music was given to order and the cheers at word of command. But, for myself, I prize the honest spontaneous throb of affection with which you have welcomed me back to my native State above all the pageants which royalty can display. [Cheers.] Therefore with a heart overflowing with grateful emotions, I return you a thousand thanks, and bid you adieu. [Prolonged applause.]

Letter from James Buchanan, Esq.

This gentleman in his letter of reply to the invitation to attend at Tammany Hall on the 4th inst., says something worthy of being read; we therefore publish it entire:

Baltimore, June 30, 1856.

Sir: I have waited in the hope that I might be able to accept the invitation of the Society of Tammany or Columbian Order, to attend at Tammany Hall on the 4th day of July next, and am extremely sorry now to find that it will not be in my power to do so. Were it otherwise, there is, I assure you, no quarter of the country in which I would find more sincere pleasure in spending that glorious day than within the walls of old and time-honored Tammany Hall. It is true (and to the honor of the Society of Tammany be it remembered) that since the year eighty-nine, it has on no occasion failed to commemorate with suitable festivities the adoption and promulgation of that immortal instrument which burst the bonds of thraldom and proclaimed a nation free.

And it is equally true that at no time since the adoption of that sacred Declaration has it been of more importance than at this very day, that we should all of us continue to commemorate it, to revere its precepts and to vindicate its principles. That we are on the eve of dangerous times, no one who thinks can doubt. Sectional divisions are springing up among us and are becoming, day by day, more and more marked, and day by day more and more difficult to be reconciled.

A false philanthrophy, and a disregard of Constitutional obligations impels a portion of the people of the North to interfere with an important institution of the South. The South justly indignant at a wrong so great, protests against it and avows her fixed determination at every hazard to maintain her rights. The North, at this, in holy horror uplifts its hands and cries out, "Southern Bullyism!" "No truce with slavery!" "Let the Negro Drivers starve"—and thus the breach between us widens.

Man shall no longer be allowed to worship God as God directs! is the unholy doctrine of a class of modern Pharisees. What says the law?—the law of conscience, the law of God to man?—"And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are, for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the cornors of the streets, that they may be seen of men; verily I say unto you they have their reward. But thou, when thou prayest enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." This is the law of conscience. And yet man would dare, for worldly gain, to curb this sacred right!

The Constitution of the country knows no religious test, yet man would strike the Constitution down, and profess to do it "for the love of souls!"

The foreign born must be prescribed, yet they are citizens by all the forms of laws, and many of them patriots at any cost of blood. These are the doctrines which lead to strife, to sectional divisions, and mayhap, to civil war. Pray God avert it.

There can be no wiser course of safety in these dangerous times than that pursued by your renowned Society. To hold up to the public view, and to commend to the public mind, the sacred principles of that immortal instrument The Declaration of American Independence.

It is a matter of sincere gratification to learn from your note of invitation that there is an entire oblivion of all past differences of opinion which may have existed between those who are ever ready to render cheerful aid in defence of the Constitution and the Union. This is as it should be. Brethren of the same faith should ever act in harmony together.

With great respect,
JAMES BUCHANAN.

Military Despotism in Italy.

Nothing can be more painful than the accounts which we daily receive of the social condition of the Italian Peninsula. From the gorges of the Tyrol to the southern extremity of the Neapolitan dominions, that beautiful country is given up to brigandage and misery. A stern military despotism aggravates, but does not repress, the general license. We are not about to enter upon the political or diplomatic aspect of the question, save in so far as a simple statement of facts must necessarily be regarded as ground for interference. England can have no selfish objects in view in the Italian Peninsula. We would not accept territory there, were it offered us; we do not desire even influence, if the wretched inhabitants were once relieved from the tyranny under which they are suffering. The best result for which we can wish is a strong and united Italy—in other words, the readmission of Italy into the fellowship of nations as a distinct and powerful member of the European confederacy. In past times we have been severely blamed by hot-headed enthusiasts and by men still more energetic in action, though not so honest in intention, because we refused to throw the weight of British influence into their scale. This is a policy in which it is to be hoped the statesmen who guide the destinies of our country will still persevere. England can take no part in petty risings and midnight conspiracies. Whatever we do must be done in the broad light of day. Our intervention, whenever it may take place, must be well meditated beforehand, effectual, and decisive. With all this we had rather avoid the necessity of action. We had rather that the petty potentates who, under the protection of Austrian arms, at present afflict the Italian Peninsula, should of their own accord pursue wiser councils. Humanity, however, cannot much longer tolerate the fact that one of the fairest portions of the earth's surface should be given up to desolation and sorrow without a result. The present political system of Italy has no future. It is not a system of which we can say that after a certain period of misery it may produce better things. Forty years have elapsed since the Italian States were handed over by the Viennese negotiators to the fostering care of their native Princes and to the paternal corrections of Austria, and what has been the result? From 1815 to 1856 one long accursing wail has ascended from Italy. Even now while we write, from one end of Italy to the other, with the single exception of the Sardinian dominions, we find nothing but military prisons, military arrests, military executions; the country gorged with police spies; fear and suspicion everywhere; universal lamentation for the past, sorrow for the present, despair for the future. In Lombardy, in Parma, in the Pontifical States, in Naples, society is thoroughly disorganized. The strong hand of Austrian power, indeed, makes itself everywhere felt, and naturally in Lombardy to a greater extent than elsewhere. But even in that province the agents of Austria have taken the alarm, and are multiplying their own precautions and the misery of the inhabitants. The conscription is now enforced with even more than Austrian rigor. Married men are carried away from their homes; only sons, who were never called out, save when war was raging, are compelled to enter the Austrian barracks. M. Burger and his agents see warning spectres around them everywhere, and every warm breeze from the Mediterranean whispers in their ears the accursed name of Piedmont. Nine-tenths, however, of the affliction which weighs upon the rich plains of Lombardy never can be known, save by a chance revelation such as that which reached us the other day when Felice Orsini escaped from that dreary stronghold of Mantua which has witnessed so much of human suffering. From Parma there is nothing new, and this is the worst possible intelligence. The same system of stern despotism under the auspices of an Austrian General prevails as heretofore. Military law continues in full rigor. There is no trade, for there is no security to property or life. There is no amusement, for who can divert his thoughts from his own miseries and the miseries of all around? In Tuscany the Grand Duke, who has just returned to his beautiful capital, is employing the first moments of his return to make a Concordant with the See of Rome, on the model of the Concordant which has been passed between Rome and Austria. The effects of this unwise measure have already so clearly appeared in the latter country that even Austrian statesmen have been compelled to make application to Rome for relief from the spiritual tyranny of their ecclesiastical guides. M. de la Tour du Pin, the French Representative at Florence, has been instructed to assure the Tuscan Government that it may reckon upon the support of France, if it can summon up strength at the eleventh hour to resist the attacks of the Pontifical meneurs; but we have little hope from the imbecility and bigotry of the petty potentate who at present reigns over Tuscany under the shadow of the Austrian flag. Let us cross the Tuscan frontier and enter the Papal dominions. Everywhere we meet with foreign soldiers, Austrians and reluctant Frenchmen, whose bayonets protect the successor of St. Peter and his ecclesiastical advisers from violence and armed attack even at the seat of their power. The land is going out of cultivation. No attempt is made to educe the many virtues of that fertile soil. A spell is laid over the moral as well as the physical developement of the country. In the Sacred City men dare scarcely whisper their apprehensions into the ears of their closest friends. Turn where a Roman will, the trail of a police agent taints the air. Brigandage has arrived at such a pitch that it is dangerous throughout Romagna to go even two or three miles from a town at midday. In Ancona political arrests are the order of the day. This is the way in which the peace of Italy is preserved. This is a buono stato for the preservation of which it is worth while to contend. It is entirely maintained by the bayonets of Austria and of France. The Pontifical army consists, as it is said, on paper, of 18,000 men, but not half of this number is forthcoming. Of the two Swiss regiments one is a mere skeleton. Let the Austrian and French troops be withdrawn tomorrow, and, according to all human probility, the next day the Pope would again be an exile from his own dominions. The only notice we have received of any attempt at improvement amounts to this—that Cardinal Antonelli is preparing a reply to the memorandum of Count Cavour and the speech of Lord Palmerston. To give this important State document the greater publicity the Pope has actually caused it to be inserted in the Giornale di Roma. The whole will be forwarded to Paris by the pious hands of Cardinal Patrizi for the instruction of the northern world. It is to Cardinal Antonelli that the maintenance of the present severe policy is attributed. The Pope it is said, rightly or wrongly, shudders at the misery and desolation by which he is surrounded, and would gladly undo Antonelli's work. Cannot some means be devised to liberate the Pontiff from the thraldom in which he is held? It is always with reluctance that we fix attention even for a moment upon the state of Naples. The interference of Austria, if indeed, any of an effective nature ever took place, has not been attended with much effect. The King has retired in sullen disgust at his own unpopularity, or in apprehension of worse consequences, to Gaeta. To the Palace at this spot, so distant from the capital of his dominions, the Ministers who wish to communicate with their Sovereign on affairs of state are compelled to travel. Even when they arrive at their destination they are with difficulty admitted into the presence of the King. He cannot bear to hear of the effects of his own misrule. The picture of this modern despot, who in all but energy resembles the miscreant whom Tacitus has described to us, is striking enough. So much misery and so much crime, why should these ever be the portion of that beautiful land? From the advices we receive we fear the arrests continue almost as freely as ever. To give an idea of the condition of those unfortunate persons who are at present in the power of the Neapolitan police we here re-copy an extract from our Italian correspondence. The state of things described in it existed at the end of last month, and we have no reason to suppose it has been at all modified in the course of the last fortnight:—"I must again call your attention to the condition of the prisoners in Monte Sorchio. Of Baron Poerio I have spoken fully, but not of others, who are laboring under different forms of disease, as Settimone, who has lost the use of one eye and nearly that of the other; Dono, who has been in the place set aside as the hospital for five months; Pironti, laboring under paralysis, unable to move, and in chains; and, not to mention more, a young man of 34 years, called Alfonso Zeuli, who is dying of consumption from the dampness of his prison, reduced to a skeleton, scarcely able to breathe or speak; he has had the last sacrament administered to him, and yet he is in chains! Closer than a brother his fetters cling to his withered limbs, and no civilized age or country will have witnessed such a proof of the tenacity of cruelty and vindictiveness. I tell you a fact that cannot be disputed, and, though a thousand other facts equally deplorable are continually occurring, to the ruin of this country, statesmen will wonder at and regret the 'extreme opinions' of the Italians, talk grandiloquently about the 'sacred principle of non-intervention,' and advocate the right of a Sovereign to call in assistance to goad and pen up his cattle. 'O Lord! how long!' well may every Italian exclaim." Poor Poerio's condition has been so fully laid before our readers upon a former and recent occasion that we need not dwell upon it here. Of Naples it is sufficient to say, in a word, that things remain unchanged. What was true of Naples three and six months ago is substantially true at the present moment. Now, whether are those statesmen Revolutionists who wish to arrive at such moderate reforms throughout the Italian Peninsula as may carry comfort and hope to the hearts of the afflicted people, or those who meet the last efforts of their grim despair with the extremity of military law? One way or another action must ere long take place in Italy. Let us hope that it may be such as will insure the reign of peace, not such as will lead to continuous terror and bloodshed.—[Times.

Floating Battery.

The Washington Correspondent of the N. Y. Herald furnishes the following description of this engine of war:

"I suppose you are aware that a large iron floating battery has been building in New York for some years past. This fact, however, is not generally known. Several months ago, I believe, the Secretary of the Navy sent an intelligent naval officer to inspect this battery, and report progress. This report is now on file at the Navy Department. It is an interesting document at this time, when gun-boats and all sorts of defensive and offensive modes of warfare are being developed.

"This iron vessel, so mysteriously decked and hid from public view, has already been fourteen years under way, and of course considerable progress has been made in her construction; and she could be finished, if necessary, in one year. She is four hundred feet long, and thirty or forty feet in breadth. She is built entirely of wrought iron plates, and each plate seven inches in thickness; these are attached to her iron frame work. She will have eight steam engines, and is to be propelled by two screw paddles, one on each side of her stern post. In smooth water she will run, it is expected, from twenty to twenty-five miles per hour; and as she is intended solely for harbor defences, she will have smooth water to run in at all times. She can, by her double propulsion power, by reversing one of the screws, turn in her own axis, or in a space of four hundred feet. She is to be mounted with twenty guns of the heaviest calibre and longest range.

"The dock where this wonderful floating battery is now lying is very mysteriously guarded. Owing to the extreme length of the vessel, rocks have been excavated, and one of the streets of Hoboken has been tunnelled to admit one end of the monster. When Mr. Robert L. Stevens died he left models to enable Mr. Walker, the Superintendent of her construction, to complete the vessel in accordance with his original conception. She has cost the government, thus far, over half a million of dollars, all of which has been expended, and lately the work has been carried on out of the private funds of Mr. Stevens.

"This vessel, or two or three like her, will guard New York from any force that may be brought against the place. She is perfectly impervious to shot or shell, from Lancaster, Paixhan or Columbiad. The iron plates of which she is constructed are each thoroughly tested by cannon shot before being fastened to the frame of the vessel. Her machinery is all below the water line and out of harm's way. Her speed will make her equal to twenty or thirty gun boats of the modern style. With two or three such vessels New York would indeed be impregnable."

A Trilling Scene.

A submarine diver from Buffalo has at last succeeded in raising the safe of the American Express Company, which was lost when the steamer Atlantic was sunk off Long Point in 1852. It will be recollected that this steamer was instantly sunk by colliding with a propeller, and that a large number of passengers were lost. The diver was protected by copper armor, and was under water forty minutes, during which time he had some strange adventures. The upper deck of the steamer lies one hundred and sixty feet under water, and far below where there is any current or motion. Everything, therefore, is exactly as it first went down.

When the diver alighted upon the deck, he was saluted by a beautiful lady, whose clothing was well arranged, and her hair elegantly dressed. As he approached her, the motion of the water caused an oscillation of the head, as if gracefully bowing to him. She was standing erect, with one hand grasping the rigging. Around lay the bodies of several others as if sleeping. Children holding their friends by their hands, and mothers with their babies in their arms were there. In the cabin, the furniture was still untouched by decay, and to all appearance had just been arranged by some careful and tasteful hand.

In the office he found the safe, and was enabled to move it with ease, and took it upon deck, where the grappling-irons were fastened on, and the prize brought safely to the light. Upon opening the safe it displayed its contents in a perfect state of perservation. There was in the safe $5,000 in gold, $3,500 in bills of the Government Stock Bank, and a large amount of bills on other banks, amounting in all to about $36,000. The papers were uninjured, except that they smelled very strongly of decayed human bodies, as if it had laid for so many years in a coffin with their owner. Of course all this money goes to the persons interested in this wonderful adventure.

Twice Blessed.

It was a cold day in Lapland; the air was crisp and piercing, and the ground tinkled like iron, when two travelers, enwrapped in furs, were driving rapidly along in their sledge. Although hardly any part of their faces was exposed to the air, their eye-brows were white with the frost. It was too cold to talk, and each, plunging his head as far down into his furs as he could, sat nose and knees together, in the corner of the sledge. As they passed along, they saw a poor man, who had sunk down benumbed and frosen in the snow. "We must stop and help him," said one of the travelers. "Stop and help him!" said his friend: "you will never think of stopping on such a day as this! We are half frozen ourselves, and ought to get to our journey's end as soon as possible." "I cannot leave him perishing here," rejoined the other, and that moment he hurried from the sledge, asking as he went along the aid of his comrade in rousing the sinking man. 'Not I,' said the other, 'I have too much regard for my own life to expose myself to this air more than I am obliged. I shall sit here myself warm, until you come back."

His friend left him, and hastened to the perishing man. He began to rub him as hard as he could to warm him, and in so doing he warmed himself. Soon the man opened his eyes, and was able to proceed on his journey. And the kind traveler, who was glowing from head to foot from the exercise, went back and joined his comrade, whom he found ready to freeze, as he himself had been a little while before, and enjoyed the rest of his journey with a warm heart and a warm body too.

My children, we tell you of many perishing travelers on the road of life. Will you help them? It will do yourselves no harm. It never impoverishes ourselves to help others. Many "is twice blessed; it blesseth him that gives, and him that takes." When you want to be truly happy, go and show mercy.

Admission of States.

In a republican form of government the power is admitted to emanate from the people, hence every citizen of our Republic should have the privilege of choice in the election of the officers entrusted with the management of governmental affairs.

Is this the case? No, for most inconsistently the inhabitants of Territories are held in a state of tutelage, or rather vassalage, closely allied to the condition of monarchical colonies.

By what principle of right, or by what direct or legimately implied power derived from the Constitution, does a citizen of the United States become measurably disfranchised by merely moving from a State into a Territory? There is obviously no such principle or power, either direct or implied, but tradition and the force of circumstances have alone produced the congressional line of conduct towards Territories.

The portion due to tradition has sprung from the colonial usage of European governments, should never have been indulged in for a moment, and ought at once to be discarded as entirely irrelevant to free institutions. That portion appearing to arise so naturally from the force of circumstances is all that is at present deemed worthy of consideration.

Even a single citizen settler upon the public domain should be entitled to build, plant, and go forth thereon, in all his privileges every inch a freeman, so long as he comported himself in accordance with the Constitution of the United States and the applicable laws thereof, a duty equally binding upon citizens in States. And when the one citizen is added to with a number sufficiently large to require a separate organization, it is the duty of Congress upon application to at once examine the new constitution and the evidence of republicanism therein contained, and if thus far correct it simply remains to define the boundaries and grant the right of self-government, Territorial or State at the option of the applicants, and to extend them such aid, from time to time, in lands, moneys, &c., as may be agreeable with usage, rights, and circumstances. Is there consistency in any other course? There is not, neither can there be.

It may be urged that new settlements have neither the power nor wisdom requisite for governmental operations. As to power, it is obligatory upon the parent to protect her offspring, whether they be strong or weak, young or old, States or Territories, from foreign invasion and the hostilities of her red children. As to wisdom, there is no room for questioning that, beyond the body of the proffered constitution and the previously exhibited intelligence of the petitioners.

What is the brief governmental history of Utah? In 1847, a number of citizens from the United States formed a settlement where now stands G. S. L. City, subsequently elected their own officers, passed their own laws, punished criminals, fought Indians, married, increased, opened fields, erected mills and dwellings, and, in short, successfully performed all duties obligatory upon good citizens in a new country, and flourished in peace and loyalty upon the tops of the mountains.

How happened all this? Through the mere exercise of that intelligence and energy which characterize those American citizens who go forth to make the waste places fruitful and to loyally extend the area of freedom. Entirely unaided by Congress in reclaiming the most uninviting of all the public domain, was there any lack in the department of self-government? No.

Years after, when the brunt of the experiment was most successfully overcome, when Deseretians in the eyes of all the world had most amply proven their capacity for conducting their own affairs, in 1850, Congress defined the boundaries of Utah and gave her inhabitants a Territorial organization, and exercised the power, with the President, of appointing certain officers, such as are not so appointed for States, over a portion of citizens of the United States who had demonstrated their possession of every requisite qualification for self-government. And all this without considering the feelings of the main party concerned, except in the kind of government, (as it was deemed useless at that date to petition fogyism for a State Government) a portion of the boundary and the Governor.

Doubtless small favors should be thankfully received, and equally true should larger ones be smiled upon in proportion. But it is rights and not favors that are under consideration. Then why, in the name of all that is reasonable and consistent, not let those citizens who prefer remaining in a Territory, as do those of Oregon up to our lastest date, elect their officers to the full extent accorded to citizens in the States? Or if that is too progressive, why not at least appoint in accordance with the known wishes of the ruled? And further still, why not at once, under the conditions before mentioned, give American citizens a State Government, even though their number be but 500, or less, upon their application therefore after a reasonable exhibition of their loyalty, power and capability?

In these remarks, for brevity's sake, we have waived quotations from the Constitution of the United States, presuming all to be familiar therewith or able to refer to it. We have also omitted to quote from the partizan and other observations upon the same subject by men noted for statesmanship, simply because the whole question is sufficiently plain to any person capable of tracing the legitimate conclusions flowing from the Federal compact.

It is most sincerely to be desired that the time will hasten when the halls of Congress, the pulpits of priests, the stumps of demagogues and the forms of printing presses may be relieved from the senseless jargon, strife and twaddle concerning the right of interference in matters of popular sovereignty and domestic institutions, whether by the parent government with those of a State or Territory, by a State with those of another State or Territory, or by a Territory with those of another Territory. The whole machinery is based upon the principle of governments within a government, and so long as the wheels are kept unclogged by partizan strife and corruption, each left to run upon its own axle well lubricated with the oil of truth and integrity, with its pinions free to rightly mash with their fellows, just so long will our republican system be the best form of human enacted government within our knowledge.

In view of all facts and considerations pertinent to the case, what sound reason is there why Utah should not be admitted into the Union as a free and independent State, upon the presentation of her constitution, memorial and accompanying documents, and that too without a word of debate? Not one.

From The Deseret News, May 14, 1856.

THE EASTERN MAIL arrived on the 10th inst., bringing 30 brass-lock sacks containing papers and letters belonging to each mail from Nov. 1 to April 1 inclusive. That the public and the Post Office Department at Washington may know how the contractor on the route between Independence and this city fulfills his obligations, we publish the following official monthly schedule of the departure of the mail from Independence during six months:

Nov. 1, 1855, left	with	12	brass-lock sacks.
Dec. 1, "	"	14	" "
Jan. 1, 1856,	"	5	" "
Feb. 1, "	"	4	" "
March 2, "	"	6 and 9 sacks	of books.
April 1, "	"	4
Total - -		45	besides the books.
Arrived, May 10,		30	brass-lock sacks, thus leavingon the road 15 through sacks and 9 sacks containing public documents.

The above account does not include the iron-lock way and drop-letter sacks, for it often happens that they do not contain much, if any, for points this side of Laramie.

Is not the above a rich exhibit of the postal facilities of a great nation? After delaying over six months, nearly one-half of the through matter is still left somewhere on the route, in what condition and at how many and what points are to us entirely unknown. And that is not all, for we are informed that the contractor's agent at Independence told the conductor, Mr. Maxwell, not to bring through any but the letter sacks!!!—and that too at a time when he knew that there were neither hostile Indians, deep snow, or high waters to prevent travelling.

What have the contractor and the Postmaster General to say to all this, in addition to the previous unendurable abuses of a like description?

Deseretians have carried the eastern mail regularly through Springs, Summers, and Falls, and nearly so through the severity of Winters, and they can do it again; and they have been, and probably are, the only ones who have done or will do so. This fact is well known in Washington, but could Utah get any of her reasonable and responsible contract bids taken? No, for reasons tolerably well understood even here, but which we forbear mentioning for the present.

Mr. Maxwell, the conductor, has richly earned the thanks of the inhabitants of Utah, by disobeying the agent's orders and bringing through all that his animals and wagons would admit, and we most heartily commend his conduct in so doing.

The latest dated papers from New York, Albany and Philadelphia are March 29; from Memphis, Tenn., March 14; and from Independence, March 29.

It would please us could we now dismiss the subject, but we fear that Laramie is at even worse than its old tricks, for on the 1st of Dec. TWO BRASS-LOCK SACKS were sent from the office in this city, but, mark, the matter of that mail arrived in Independence, Feb. 23d, in ONE HORSE-MAIL sack! Will the official at Laramie inform the Postmaster at this city, or P. McClanhan Esq., P. M. at Independence, or the Postmaster General, how he managed to transfer the THROUGH matter from TWO BRASS-LOCK SACKS into ONE HORSE-MAIL sack?

The department at Washington, after our mails had been repeatedly plundered, very wisely furnished brass locks for all sacks containing THROUGH matter, and it was well known by all on the route that such was the case, with a view to prevent that wholesale plundering which Utah had been so long subjected to. But it would seem that even Government BRASS LOCKS are no bar to some itching fingers still lurking at Laramie. Can any one give information as to how the above named THROUGH, to use no harsher term, was made, in defiance of law and of rights supposed to be secure under brass locks?

Independence of the United States.

THE Fourth seems to have been duly honored throughout the country. The din and bustle of business gave place to cannon, pistol and cracker. In the morning, a splendid equestrian statue of Washington was inaugurated in Union Square of this city. When the statue was uncovered to the gaze of the multitudes that had gathered to witness the ceremony, in spite of the pouring rain, the air was rent with enthusiastic cheering, the bands played 'Hail Columbia,' gentlemen uncovered, the ladies waved their handkerchiefs, the military presented arms and the cannons roared vociferously. Dr. Bethune delivered an address suited to the occasion, eulogised the immortal Washington and introduced to the multitude Mr. Henry K. Brown, the artist who had so faithfully represented the deliverer of his country.

Great crowds were drawn from home in the evening to witness pyrotechnic exhibitions in the public squares. Political clubs had their reunions and speechifying. The day passed off with few accidents to mar the happiness of the occasion.

Pennsylvania.

ELDER ANGUS M. CANNON writes us from Pittston Ferry, Luzerne Co., Pa., July 4, that the Saints in that region of country were all well and renewing their covenants. He says: "I held two meetings with the Saints on Sunday, likewise a council meeting, at which I organized a Branch and appointed Brother Rees from Wales to preside. While with them I gave the necessary instructions for the rolling on of the work of the Lord and rebaptized about twenty persons. The remainder will follow their example, as the whole, nearly seventy, manifested a desire to renew their covenants with their heavenly Father."

Fruit Seeds.

As we have already entered upon that season of the year in which fruit is generally fine and abundant, we think it not inoportune to remind the Saints throughout the States of their duty to preserve the most choice of fruit seeds, and we may add flower seeds, for the benefit and adornment of the coming State of Deseret. Fine fruit dainties for the table are only enjoyed by the few in the Valleys of Utah, while the many might participate were a little attention and care bestowed on that which is thrown away by their friends in older inhabited countries. If the nobler incentive to action—love for another, is not sufficiently powerful—love for self should induce all who contemplate making Deseret their future residence to bestow some labor now towards rendering it a "happy home." The emigration from the States being nigh closed, but little can be done now by those who have neglected the opportunity of sending by their friends this season. We trust, however, that our friends in every country where the gospel has been preached will be well prepared another season to take with them or send by others the most choice and precious of everything within their reach that is good and agreeable.

The Deseret News of the 21st May, gives the following under the heading of Fruit Seeds:

FRUIT SEEDS.—Bro. Angus M. Cannon has conferred a highly prized favor upon the recipients of a parcel, by mail, of choice fruit seeds of various kinds, viz: apple, quince, plum, cherry, &c., &c., for which he is at present tendered thanks, and in the future an invitation to partake of the first fruits from said seeds.

How happens it that no more of the elders throughout the States have taken a little pains to forward cuttings and seeds of valuable kinds of fruit? A small amount of care and attention would soon fill our settlements with every desirable variety. The last eastern mail brought a tightly sodered tin can full of apple cuttings, which were as fresh on arrival as those kept here in cellars for the same length of time, and the presumption is strong that most of them will grow, for several have started already. This single operation, with a little trouble to the one who sent the scions, has enriched Utah with six new kinds of choice apple grafts. Elders and friends in the States can easily save and forward by mail, in small parcels, and in the season thereof, to their friends here, a great variety of useful seeds and cuttings. Will they do so, and thus benefit themselves and others, and be able on their arrival in our midst to fairly claim a share in the rich fruits of the earth?

Dr. Bernhisel is likewise cordially thanked by the News, for his mindfulness of the Territory, many others we know have sent out to Utah, but we hope the number of well doers will be greatly augmented.

Best Attention.

Hon. John Taylor.

WE are happy to inform our friends that our beloved President, returned to this city on Wednesday morning in a state of convalescence. His appearance indicates that he has suffered much, and that there is still considerable room for improvement in his health. He left in the afternoon, accompanied by President Erastus Snow, for Washington.

The Mail from Utah.

ON Monday morning we received letters and papers from Utah up to the last of May. In the Historian's letter in another column, there are some well-merited cutting remarks on the bungling old womaniah style of mail business between Utah and the States. The lady of Elder Felt writes that she received by one mail, May 10th, letters bearing the following dates: Oct. 16, Nov. 15, Dec. 19, 1855. Jan. 5 & 21, March 4 & 19, 1856. "Hope points before and shows the bright to-morrow," the present mail contract ceases in November.

Utah.

THE crops in the valleys are promising a rich reward to the agriculturist for his labors on the soil. The News of the 14th of May says:—"Fields and gardens, have never looked more promising at this season of the year than they do now." The almost famine of the past winter will soon be forgot, leaving only rich experience, in industry and frugality.

Brook's and Sumner.

The case of Preston S. Brooks for his assault on Senator Sumner was up before the judge of the Central Criminal Court of Washington on Tuesday. There was a large attendance of members of Congress. After the examination of witnesses, judge Crawford is reported to have said: "As the matter might perhaps at that moment be subject to investigation, he would not weary the members of the House of Representatives. He would forbear to comment on the testimony, and pronounce as the judgment of the Court that Mr. Brooks pay a fine of three hundred dollars.

The Free State papers are down upon the judge charging him and court with being under southern influence and pronouncing the trial something like fudge.

Mother Lucy Smith.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 5, 1856.

ED. MORMON:—In the 19th number of your paper I read a notice of the death of Mrs. Lucy Smith, mother of Joseph Smith, the Prophet; and who has been for the last twenty-six years familiarly known to all the saints as "Mother Smith."

She was born in Gilsum, Cheshire County, New Hampshire, July 8, 1776. She was the daughter of Solomon Mack, who was born in Lyme, New London Co., Conn., September 26, 1735. He served in the war against France, and took part in many severe contests—and retired from them suffering great personal injuries, and was discharged in 1759; subsequently married Lydia Gates, daughter of Nathan Gates, of East Haddame, Ct.

He commenced a new settlement in the Wilderness, forty miles from inhabitants. His wife adding to the duties of mother those of instructress, as there were no schools in the wilderness. On the commencement of the war of Independence he enlisted into the service of his country; was for a considerable length of time in the Land forces—and afterwards—accompanied by two of his sons, Jason and Stephen—entered the Naval service of the Colonies, and continued to encounter many of the stirring and thrilling incidents, to which our young marine was constantly exposed until the close of the war. Mother Smith was therefore born in troublesome times. The first seven years of her life being spent in the care of her pious and intelligent mother, while her father, and brothers were battling for the Independence of their country. They were exposed to every vicissitude which was incident to the distracted state of the Colonies, and the absence of the protectors of the family.

In youth, Lucy was somewhat remarkable for a pensive character, her mind being awakened by the death of her sister Lovina, she determined to obtain that which she heard spoken of so much in the pulpit, "a change of Heart." Of this circumstance she says in the History of her life—"To accomplish this I spent much time in reading the Bible and praying, in my great anxiety to experience a change of Heart." She went to live with her brother Stephen, in Tunbridge, Vermont, and on the 24th of January, 1776, was married to Joseph Smith, by whom she had ten children. Alvin, born Feb. 11, 1779—who died Nov. 19, 1824; Hyrum, born Feb. 9, 1800; Sophronia, born May 18, 1803, at Tunbridge, Vermont; Joseph, Jr., born Dec. 23, 1805, at Shanon, Windsor County, Vermont; Samuel Harrison, born March 13, 1808, and died July 40, 1844; Ephriam, March 13, 1810, died March 24, 1810; William, born March 13, 1811, at Royalton, Vt.; Catharine, born July 8, 1812, at Lebanon, New York; Don Carlos, born March 25, 1816, at Palmyra, Wayne Co., New York; Lucy, born July 18, 1821, at Palmyra, Wayne Co., New York. The care of rearing such a family, the labor of opening new farms in a wilderness country, (as western New York then was,) which must have necessarily surrounded a mother, where a family enduring much sickness and distress from accident were her lot. She became a member of the Presbyterian Church, and three of her children, Hyrum, Samuel Harrison, and Sophronia followed her example; and while Joseph was seeking the Lord with all his heart, to know what Church he should join, the visions of Heaven were opened unto him, and he was entrusted with the Plates of the Book of Mormon, inspired by Revelation to translate them, received the authority of the Priesthood, and laid the foundation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which is now so widely spread throughout the world.

During the infancy of the Church, and while the work preparatory to its organization was going on; Mother Smith and her family had severe struggles to encounter by the opposition of the world around, persecution, poverty, and sickness, her faith and works were sufficient to bear her up against every oppression which men heaped upon her devoted family. Immediately upon the organization of the Church, on April 6th, 1830, she received Baptism for the remission of sins, and the Gift of the Holy Ghost, which buoyed her up against all opposition, and prepared her to rejoice amid the most dreadful persecutions and sacrifices that mortal was ever called upon to endure. In 1831 her husband and family moved to Kirtland, Ohio, where they resided until '37; but the hand of persecution was not arrested by this movement. Her son, Joseph, was followed by a multiplied succession of Vexatious Law Suits, which were invariably unsuccessful but being attended with heavy expense served to impoverish the family. On the 25th of March, 1832, Joseph, Jr., was dragged from his bed at midnight, daubed with tar and feathers, and otherwise severely injured. Aquefortes was poured into his mouth, he was choked by the throat, and left for dead. His infant child sick with the measles in bed with him, at the time of the outrage, was thereby exposed to night air, and died immediately, (she may be called the first martyr of this dispensation).

In 1837 the persecution in that county became so dreadful that her husband was made a prisoner, and the family were under the necessity of fleeing from Kirtland, and afterwards located in Far West Mission—but it appears only to encounter a more terrible storm. The fatigues of this journey of a thousand miles land travel, and—performed under indigent circumstances—were enough to wear out persons of their age, yet were endured much better than could have been expected; but this labor was hardly dispelled by rest when a renewed persecution burst around the Saints with unabated fury.

The cruelty of this mob exceeding all possibility of description, was legalized by the exterminating order of Kilburn W. Boggs, Governor of Missouri, and rigidly enforced by Major-General Clark, who marched thirteen thousand men to Far West, and executed the cruel decree. Joseph and Hyrum, her beloved sons, were betrayed into their hands under positive pledges of protection.

They were then permitted to bid adieu to their mother and families, and were told that "to-morrow they die at 9 o'clock," from which fate they were providentially saved through the interference of the gallant General Doniphan, who declared to Major-General Lucas, "it is cool-blooded murder, and if you execute them I will hold you responsible before an earthly tribunal. So HELP ME GOD!" an imprisonment of six months followed, during which time they were asked how they liked "Mormon beef," having reference to human flesh, on which they had been fed; all the members of the Church of Latter Day Saints were expelled from the State during the winter and spring, or perished by the violence of their enemies. An aged father and mother arrived in Quincy, Ill., penniless and friendless, surrounded by the wives and children of those imprisoned, and who had perished from murder, exposure, or otherwise. Soon after the family settled at Nauvoo, Ill., the toil and suffering of this persecution was too much to be borne by a man of his age, and Joseph Smith, sen., died at Nauvoo, Sept. 14, 1840. He had faithfully performed the duties of Patriarch over the whole Church, and blessed the Fatherless for six years. He was the first to receive the testimony of Joseph, and had borne the heat and burden of sustaining the Word of the Lord all the day long, and at last laid down to rest, full of faith, integrity, charity, and good works, aged seventy-nine years, one month, and two days.

Mother Smith was thus left a widow, worn out with toil and sorrow—her house having been filled with sick like a Hospital, from the time of their expulsion from Missouri, many of whom owed the preservation of their lives to her motherly care, attention, and skill, in nursing them, which she did without any pecuniary consideration, and the extent of which cannot be appreciated but by those only who are personally acquainted with the dreadful scenes of sickness and distress, which followed, in consequence of the Mission expulsion. From this time until the day of his death, she lived with her son Joseph, she was visited, congratulated, and comforted by thousands who had partaken of their bounty, or listened to her testimony, and those who were desirous of making her acquaintance. Her spirit was like a fountain of light, that dispelled error and disseminated truth, wherever its influence was felt. From the time of the commencement of the work, until the death of her husband, their house was open to all, and tens of thousands of persons listened with delight to her teachings.

On the 7th day of August, 1844, she was called upon to part with her youngest son, Don Carlos, who was suddenly snatched away from this vale of tears, occupying at the time of his death the position of Brigadier General of Illinois militia, and editor of the Times and Seasons, leaving a widow and ten children. He was universally respected, and his loss deeply felt and deplored by the community. The assassination of Joseph and Hyrum, under the protection of the Governor of Illinois, so shocked and benumbed her sensibilities and her aged frame, that she never fully recovered. This awful scene, the bringing home of the mutilated bodies, the violation of all legal protection, the moaning cries of widows and fatherless children, brothers and sisters, besides tens of thousands of weeping friends, combined to form a scene that no mother upon the face of the earth was ever before called upon to encounter. As if the blow had not been sufficient to crush a mother's heart, Samuel Harrison Smith, in escaping from the murderers of his brothers, overheated himself, which brought on a fever, that terminated fatally July 30, 1844.

But recovering somewhat from the effect of her afflictions, she composed a history of her life, which contains many thrilling incidents of herself as well as that of her family, which are given in her own style, yet mingled somewhat with evidence of difficulty of her remembering dates. When the Saints resolved to leave Nauvoo for the Rocky Mountains, she addressed a general conference, bearing testimony of the truth of her desire to lay her bones in Nauvoo beside her husband and sons. From that time until the day of her death, she mostly resided in Nauvoo, with her youngest daughter, Lucy Milliken, excepting the two last years she resided with her daughter-in-law, widow of her son Joseph. She enjoyed the gifts and influence of the holy spirit much, and the following hymn was given her in 1833, which she sang in the Nephite tongue, which caused great sensation and tears to flow in the congregation, and the gift of interpretation followed. The hymn has reference to the last great battle of the Nephites against the Lamanites, around the Hill Cumorah, in the State of New York, when the plates were found from which the Book of Mormon was translated. It is called 'Moroni's Lamentation:'

I have no home, where shall I go?
My heart is pain'd, my friends are gone,
And here I'm left on earth to mourn.

I see my people lying round,
All lifeless here upon the ground,
Young men and maidens in their gore,
Which does increase my sorrows more.

My Father look'd upon the scene,
And in his writings has made plain
How every Nephite's heart did fear,
When he beheld his foe draw near.

With axe and bow they fell upon
Our men and women, sparing none,
And left them prostrate on the ground;
Lo! here they now are bleeding round!

Ten thousands that were led by me,
Lie round this Hill call'd Cumorah!
Their spirits from their bodies fled,
And they are numbered with the dead.

Well might my Father in despair
Cry, Oh! ye fair ones, once how fair!
How is it that you're fallen? oh!
My soul is filled with pain for you!

My life is sought, where shall I flee?
Lord take me home to dwell with thee,
Where all my sorrows will be o'er,
And I shall sigh and weep no more.

Thus sang the Son of Mormon, when
He gazed upon the Nephite men,
And women too, which had been slain,
And left to moulder on the plain.

Blessed woman! her name and memory is engraven upon the tablets of the heart of tens of thousands, and will be handed down to millions yet unborn, that will speak her praise and talk of her virtues and goodness, of her motherly kindness, her watchful care and administration to the sick and afflicted, the kind and affectionate mother, the beloved wife, the partner of her aged and venerable husband, for her deeds of love, her virtue, faith, hope and confidence in her God, the trials and persecutions she bore for the gospel of truth, her unvarying steadfastness to truth through all circumstances, and filled with charity to all, her God blessed her, and nerved her up to bear the persecutions and trials she was called upon to undergo, and gave her strength and grace sufficient for her day, and in copious profusion poured out his Holy Spirit upon her.

Few indeed are the women that have ever lived or graced this lower world, that occupied the position she did. The chosen of the Lord, to bear and bring into the world one of the greatest prophets the world ever produced: one chosen and ordained of God to bring about His glorious purposes in the dispensation of the fulness of times that all holy prophets have spoken concerning ever since the world began, together with his brother Hyrum, clothed with the holy priesthood of God, holding the keys of salvation, immortality and eternal life to a ruined and fallen world—conversed with God and his Redeemer, and with holy angels from the courts of the eternal world—gazed upon the order and glory of the same, and understood the law that appertains to eternal life. Not only so, but the wife, the partner of the earthly father of such sons and prophets; her husband a patriarch of the Most High over all the church of God, pouring out his blessing in the name of his Redeemer upon the heads of thousands, by virtue of his priesthood and office, and causing their hearts to beat with joy; also many others of her sons—valiant in the cause of truth—clothed with power and eternal life—priests of the most high God. But her labors are closed, and like a shock of corn fully ripe, she has gone down to her grave in peace, full of honor and goodness, there to await the morning of the first resurrection, after having lived to commit to the silent tomb her husband, Joseph, Hyrum, Don Carlos, Samuel, &c.; but she has gone to meet them kings and priests of the Most High. Noble mother in soul! blessed among women and queen among the mighty ones; thy calling and election has been made sure, and in the morning of the resurrection, with thy husband, sons and daughters wilt thou come forth and take thy place, and stand in thy lot with thy husband and offspring—no more to be separated, no more to endure persecution, trials, tears, pains and sorrows, but bask in the smiles, fruition and blessings of a celestial world, under the smiles of thy God and Redeemer while eternity goes and eternity comes. Peace to her ashes. Amen.

HISTORIAN'S OFFICE, G. S. L. CITY, May 29th, 1856.

PRES. JOHN TAYLOR: I presume you will have no objection to receiving a monthly letter from me now that I have entered upon my duties as Historian, and therefore commence by saying I am just recovered from a four weeks' sickness caused by the poisonous virus inoculating my arm when skinning an ox which had died very suddenly; it came very near carrying me into another state of existence; but by kind attention, frequent administrations and the continued prayers of the Saints, my life is spared to continue my labors on this earth.

On the 10th of this month our eyes were astonished to see a United States mail come into the valley from the east loaded with about one-half of the letters and papers that had left Independence since last October; the remainder, Mr. McGraw (the contractor) or his agent had very considerately cached by the way or perhaps left at Fort Laramie for worn-out, tired-out soldiers to read through the long winter nights, when tired of talking about their victory over a few semi-savages and half-starved ignorant remnants of Indian tribes, and they would also naturally be anxious to read the correspondence of a people who believe in polygamy.

Although I write under this date, it is impossible to prophesy when you will receive it, as I learn from a reliable source that Mr. McGraw told his agent that when he came with the mail from Salt Lake, if he came to any stream that was deep not to attempt to cross it, but return to Salt Lake again and stay till the waters are down, for it would be all right, as the government had reimbursed Mr. McGraw $17,000 this trip and $35,000 for the last contract. I do not vouch for this, but give it you as I received it, and it is currently believed here. When the Mormon boys, Decker, Young, Hanks, Little and Co. carried the mail to Laramie, we got the bags, but they have not got their pay for it. Oh, consistency! hast thou entirely fled from the United States? if so, when wilt thou return? The difficulties of crossing the rivers are really awful, for a very respectable lady over seventy years of age has started with oxen to go to the Missouri river; and I think Mr. McGraw is sadly to blame in not engaging her to carry the mail and then pay her for the odd trip. Bro. Taylor, can you inform me how it is that your letters via South Pass and your duplicates by way of California all come in the same letter bag? Your letters are not the only ones that so strangely come together.

Your letter to Bishop Hunter was read in the Council last Sunday; all were glad to hear from you and suppose ere this you have learned your destiny—that you have to stay at Washington a little longer; we all pray that you and your colleagues may be prospered in your exertions on behalf of the fair vales of Deseret, and that you may win laurels for yourself and co-workers with you.

I am happy to inform you that all your family are well; sister Taylor visited me the other day in health and spirits.

The Presidency and Twelve are well, also their families, with the exception of sister Mary Ann Young, who is now prostrated through her continued exertions in administering to the necessities of so many who were destitute the past season; she is a little easier to-day.

We learn by madam rumor that General Harney has been ordered by the Government to march his troops to the scene of the Indian wars in Oregon, and that he expects to replenish his supplies when passing through the northern part of this Territory. If this is true, he is bound to be disappointed, for the severe winter has killed four out of every five head of cattle in the northern counties; the desolation is deplorable—many persons are nearly ruined. The Church had last October over 2600 head in Weber and Cache counties; now they can count nearly 500. Gilbert and Gerrish had 700 head when they started from the Missouri river; now they have 95. Messrs. Kerr lost their entire herds, valued at $60,000, and all the citizens in proportion. Hundreds of persons have lived on dead cattle when they could be got at for snow, and now it has disappeared they are living on roots, weeds and greens.

Although we have had the grasshopper plague and the excessive drouth of last summer and the unparalleled severe winter, now they have disappeared, every face is beaming with gladness, because the hand of the Lord has been seen in his mercifully sending the rain once a week this spring, which causes the wheat to rise from the ground as a harbinger of "the good time coming." Many are anxiously expecting to cut wheat by the 20th of June, and then we shall have a grand jubilee.

The potatoes, corn, squash, peas and other vegetables look well, and we expect to reap a bountiful harvest to feed those who are here and those who are wheeling the barrows over the plains, so be of good cheer—all is well in Zion.

I am happy to learn that your agents have obtained subscribers for 780 out of the 800 copies of THE MORMON sent here; it is a truly valuable paper and merits an extensive circulation. It is highly approved here, and if the people could be assured of the mail bringing what is sent to Utah, you would have a more extended patronage. We wish you to preserve a good file for the Historian's office, and bring it with you, or send by some trusty Elder when he emigrates to the valley of peace, having previously got it well bound.

Yours truly, W. WOODRUFF.

NEW YORK, July 2d, 1856.

PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR:—

Dear Sir,—In passing through this City on my mission to Europe, I deem it not amiss to give you a few items of information relative to the present and future prospects of the Deseret Iron Works, of Cedar City, Iron County, Utah, where I labored in connection with my Brethren on the Works since the year 1852.

When I left, March 22d, there was in operation a Blast Furnace, diameter twenty-one feet square, height thirty-three feet, inside measurement six feet six inches. It has two splendid blowing cylenders, forty-one and a half inches diameter, and forty-three inches stroke, working at right angles with each other. This is driven by a master-driving wheel attached to an overshot water wheel. The Furnace can be blown by hot or cold blast, as the manager may desire; there is an inclined plane and car conveying the ore and fuel from the mine to the tunnel head of the Furnace. This car is drawn up by gearing attached to the water wheel, and has a self-acting motion. The ore that the iron is produced from is very rich, yielding about 75 per cent. from the blast, and is easily procured, being found in large masses on the surface of the earth. Coal is also found in the side of the Mountain, which saves the labor of mining and the health of men; the coal is strong, and suitable for all kinds of smith work. It makes a strong coke which carries a heavy burthen on the Blast Furnace, and is likewise suitable for the Cubalo for the melting of Pig-Iron. From this it will be seen that the facility for procuring the materials are equal to any other place in the world. Many tons of iron have been manufactured into machinery, such as heavy Lathes, Cranks, Wheels, Gudgeons, Pedestals, &c., for the use of the Company's Works, to replace the old wooden machinery. There is an extensive range of buildings for workshops where a great number of mechanics are employed, in almost every branch of the iron trade. Other mechanics will shortly be wanted, to assist in carrying on the works; the Company are fast preparing to supply the rising State of Deseret with everything in the iron trade that she will require, from a nail to a steam engine.

Brethren who feel an interest in this great work, will do well to arise and assist in rolling on the same, that Deseret may be independent of the nations for the most valuable of all metals—Iron.

"The Bees of the Hive of Deseret" are at work. THOMAS BLADEN, Engineer
Deseret Iron Works.

Correspondence of Elder N. H. Felt.

BOSTON, July 3d, 1856.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: The ship Horizon, arrived at Quarantine, on Saturday evening the 28th ult., and drew up to Constitution Wharf on Sunday afternoon. I arrived here on the Tuesday morning following, by Fall River route, and found Elder Martin with his excellently organized company quietly waiting the arrival of some one from New York to give them counsel and advice.

On Tuesday afternoon, we had all the luggage excepting the beds and bedding out upon the wharf, and forwarded to the Worcester Depot before dark; and the following morning, at 11 o'clock, the remainder of the luggage and nearly 700 souls were safely upon the cars and started for Iowa city—Brother Martin, Bro. Tennant and family and a few others remaining to overtake them by express train at Springfield.

The activity and prompt measures of Bro. Martin and his counsellors, Bros. Havens and Waugh, assisted very materially in hastening their departure, thus relieving the emigrants from much additional expense attendant upon the delay among strangers.

The perfect good order, cleanliness, health, comfort, cheerfulness and mutual kindness displayed among this company elicited the most unqualified admiration of all who visited the ship, and the expression of Capt. Reed and his officers to their friends who came on board and to myself was one of entire satisfaction and confidence with the presiding officers and company he had brought with him from Liverpool. The captain often remarked he wished to bring no other emigrants as long as he could obtain companies of the Latter Day Saints or Mormons.

A few of the families remain in Boston, consisting of about thirty souls; a number also have gone to New York and some to Philadelphia and Minersville. Boston affords a very limited chance for disposing of the surplus stores; I shall do the best I can with them in Boston, or re-ship them to New York, as the prices shall seem to warrant. Excuse haste. Yours, N. H. FELT.

Letter From Elder Nathan Porter.

CAMP OF ISRAEL,
IOWA CITY, June 29th, 1856.

DEAR PRESIDENT TAYLOR.—I embrace with pleasure the present opportunity of informing you and the brethren of my welfare and safe arrival at the camp of the Saints. The first two days tested my strength, but thanks to the Lord he has given me strength to endure the fatigue of the journey, with increasing health. I was disappointed in not seeing you at the depot on my leaving. I was too fatigued to move about in the confusion on board to seek you out, so I sent you my hearty farewell by Brother Felt, and now repeat it and say good-bye for the present, with the blessings of Heaven upon you for your kindness to me; also all the Saints who have visited me and administered to me; please give them my best love and respects in a special manner to Brother and Sister Beaston who shared more deeply in the burden of my affliction.

My health is still improving. We arrived at the city on the 24th inst., without any evil befalling us. The ox teams are not yet started; but it is expected they will start this week: the cattle waited for came in yesterday to the number of some 450 head. All the Saints are in fine spirits. Yours truly,

N. T. PORTER.

Long Island, Staten Island and Coney Island were visited by a terrific thunder and hail storm on Sunday, doing considerable damage to the crops. The hail was larger than had been seen for many years. Boston was likewise visited with the storm, several boats were capsised and one person drowned.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

THE admission of Kansas into the Union is the principal subject at Washington. By our Congressional, it will be seen that Mr. Douglas and party fairly tired out the opposition by a night's session, and passed Mr. Toomba's bill in the Senate. The Free State bill that had been defeated by the majority in the House one evening was reconsidered on the following evening and passed by a majority of two.

Preparations for the coming struggle are active. A mass meeting of the Democrats was held on Tuesday evening in the Park, "to give the Democratic masses an opportunity to express their opinions in favor of uniting the Democracy of this city and State." Several distinguished gentlemen spoke.

A bronze statue of Washington was inaugurated at the Virginia Military Institute, at Lexington, on the 3d. On that occasion, Gov. Wise delivered a most elaborate historical speech on the Father of our Country.

Gen. Persifer F. Smith has been appointed to succeed Brigadier General Clark, in charge of the Military Department West. The headquarters will be removed from St. Louis, to Fort Leavenworth. Col. Sumner will remain in Kansas subordinate to Gen. Smith.

The Indians in New Mexico are again hostile. Gen. Garland is preparing for a campaign on an extensive scale.

Randolph, the murderer of his wife, has had his sentence of execution changed to imprisonment for life by the Connecticut Legislature, as he has confessed that the deed was committed through a drunken quarrel.

The Mexican difficulties with Spain remain the same. The Spanish minister is reported to be preparing to leave Vera Cruz, and the Mexican Government is concentrating forces at points contiguous to the city.

The trial of Mr. Herbert, for the murder of the waiter, Keating, commenced in the Criminal Court at Washington on Wednesday. The Court was densely crowded.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

FRANCE.—The Imperial Prince was baptized (sprinkled) at Notre Dame on the 14th ult. by the Pope's Legate. Everything that genius could devise, art execute and an Emperor command was displayed to give eclat to the ceremony. Handicraft, priest-craft, soldier-craft and king-craft were for once innocently united—the thing itself mere trumpery show. The Empress wore jewels on the occasion to the value of 15,000,000 francs.

The waters of the Saone and Rhone continue to decline slowly. The face of the country is completely changed, an immense extent of land is covered with a thick layer of sand, burying rich and promising crops. Several years of incessant effort will be required to restore it to cultivation.

The silk crop in the South of France is a complete failure this year. The worms are dying of a disease.

Major-General Sir William Fenwick Williams of Kars was presented, on his passage through Paris, by Lord Cowley to the Emperor, who decorated his breast with the cross of Commander of the Legion of Honor, for his brilliant defence of Kars.

The French Senate is occupied with the subject of regency for the young prince in case of the death of the Emperor. The Empress is recommended to be regent till he attains eighteen.

SPAIN.—The Cortes has authorized the marriage of the Infanta Amelia with Prince Adalbert of Bavaria.

The preparations for a naval expedition against Mexico continue. The government has, however, expressed its willingness to accept the good offices of the Emperor of France as arbitrator.

THE EAST.—The Journal de Constantinople charges the Russians with violating the treaty of Paris by demolishing the military works of Reni and Ismail, and destroying the fortifications of Kars. The Russians reply they leave what the Turks built but the Russian labors of former years they scatter to the winds.

CRIMEA.—Lord Gough arrived there in the first week in June to invest Marshall Pellissier and other French and English officers of high rank with the Order of the Bath by command of his royal mistress and with the permission of Napoleon.

ENGLAND.—The war feeling has greatly cooled down. Mr. Dallas is an honored guest by the English as well as by his own countrymen living there. Lord Clarendon's reply to Mr. Marcy's last letter was to be laid before Parliament at an early day. It has reached Washington.

The Administrative Reform Association that owed its creation to official blundering over the war, has lingered out a year's tame existence and was on the point of giving up when the Hon. Mr. Roebuck accepted the presidency of the association. It bids fair now to do something with the old women who hang about Queen Victoria. Roebuck is the man.

The probable loss of the American ship Ocean Queen, Captain Smith, of the London and New York Line, with 110 lives, has been reported at Lloyds. This ship left the London docks on Feb. 8, with a full miscellaneous cargo, and 85 steerage passengers. On Feb. 15 she was spoken off the Isle of Wight, all well, since which nothing has been heard of her, and there is reason to fear she was lost in the ice in which the steamer Pacific perished. The ship G. B. Lamar which left the Thames the same time as the Ocean Queen, was in great jeopardy from ice on her voyage out.

ITALY.—The refugees of Modena, Reggio, Parma and Tuscany intend to present an address to Count Cavour, and have struck a medal in his honor. It is current that the Sardinian Government has just issued a note in reply to that of Austria. Sardinia denies the imputation of fostering revolution, but expresses a fear that it may break out if existing governments do not place themselves at the head of Italian nationality.

The Pope has nominated six new Cardinals, of whom three are Italians, two Austrians and one French.

FOR THE MORMON.

Reminiscences of Classical Ages.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

CONCLUDED.

After having given a short outline of some of the leading literary characters of the Greek and Roman era, I dwell previous to my closing this article, on some of the festivals and sports that were so much in vogue in those times. It was natural with the classical ancients, whose vivid imaginations peopled every romantic spot with Gods, Nymphs, Naiades, Satyrs, etc., to commemorate certain days that were sacred to those supposed god-like beings, by a variety of feasts and sports, in which all classes of society participated. The third day after the Ides (Ides was a term of time, amongst the ancient Romans. It is the 13th day of each month except March, May, July and October, in which it is the 15th,) was consecrated to Bacchus, the God of wine, whose priests paraded the streets followed by the multitude, while cymbals, flutes and other instruments were played, and songs were sung in honor of the day. Those festivals or Bacchanalias of which the Roman poet, Ovidius Naso, in his Fasta, gives a minute description, were signalized by every kind of revelry; hence the term Bacchanals or Bacchanalians was used in later times, and is so in our day for drunken riots or revels, that are offensive to propriety and decorum.

Another interesting festival are the Olympian games. Olympian is a space of four complete years, whereby the Greeks reckoned their time, so called from the celebration of the games every fourth year in honor of Jupiter Olympus, and received their name from Olympis, a city of Ellis, near which they were performed. Those games were contests in manly exercises, such as wrestling, boxing, running, chariot-racing and discus-throwing, (discus is from the Greek, signifying a round iron for play). The Greeks took such an interest in the performance of those gymnastic exercises, that they were attended by all classes of society, from every state of Hellas; the plebian's as well as the nobleman's son was anxious to gain the prize of victory, which was only a simple olive crown, but esteemed the most distinguished, the most honorable ornament. As long as Hellas enjoyed the blessings and privileges of liberty, these games were continued; they commenced in the year of the world, 3228; after the flood, 1570 years; after the destruction of Troy, 400; before the building of Rome, 23; 770 before Christ.

The gymnastics is a word derived from the Greek, signifying stripped of clothing encumbrances, as the development of the physical strength and agility of the body can be best shown when all the superfluous parts of dress are laid aside. This explanation will make the reader understand the meaning of the classical term 'gymnastics.' These healthy exercises, upon the practice of which both Romans and Greeks laid particular stress, were known at the age of Chiron, the tutor of Achilles, whose physical education was very good. Esculapius, the father of the medical science, a man of such rare talents and knowledge that he was placed among the demi-gods by the Greeks, prescribed to invalids riding and exercise in complete armor. The celebrated Galen was very partial to the practice of gymnastics. He cured a man of great corpulence by making him run every morning till perspiration came on. Homer, the great poet, is supposed to be the gymnasiarch or leader of gymnastic exercises. In the famous city of Athens, the gymnastics assumed quite a scientific character, and lectures were delivered in the Academy, Lyceum, and in the Gynosarges, gymnasia erected outside the city, with beautiful gardens and groves. In these schools the young Greeks were instructed in leaping, throwing the discus, the javelin, and wrestling. Independent of these exercises, they had pugilism and the Pancratium, a particular combination of boxing and wrestling. In Rome, the Eternal City, the same attention was paid to the gymnastics as in Greece. By an order of the elder Tarquin, the first Circus was erected for the performance of gymnastic exercises. To the continual practice of that noble art, the Roman soldier owed those great physical qualities which made him so long a terror and conqueror in wars with foreign nations. Julius Cæsar relates, that a soldier would march twenty miles in five hours, with a weight of sixty pounds; and in the field he would carry his arms, baggage, his tent and provisions for fifteen days.

From the above we learn, that whatever weaknesses and faults the Greeks and Romans had, they practiced good, salutary principles; that they gave a great impetus to the cultivation of fine arts and sciences for succeeding generations. May we always learn from the study of history, the great moral lesson, to follow the example of virtuous, noble-minded men, and to abhor vice and crime.

Kansas News.

CHICAGO, July 2.

Passengers from Lexington bring intelligence of the capture of a company of emigrants from Ottawa on board the steamer Arabia on Friday night. They were robbed of everything and detained close prisoners. It was resolved by the mob to take the Massachusetts men in the company up the river and hang their leader, Decatur, immediately. All the arms, provisions, baggage and money of the prisoners were confiscated for the use of the mob.

Severe Storm.

WATERVILLE, Me., July 1.

A heavy thunder shower visited this village and vicinity yesterday, during which the Congregational Church was slightly damaged by lightning.

In North Vassalborough a great quantity of hail fell, breaking some three thousand panes of glass in the village, and seriously damaging the growing crops in the vicinity.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, July 2.

The Chair laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting the original journal proceedings of the Board of American Commissioners at Paris, to liquidate and audit the claims of American citizens against the French Government, being for debts due them and for satisfaction for which provision was made by a Convention between the United States and France, April 30, 1803.

Mr. Clayton said this report was made in answer to a resolution submitted by him some time ago. He desired to call attention to the document, because it completely refuted the ground upon which the President based his veto of the French Spoliation bill. His sympathies were strongly in favor of these claimants, and he hoped that some measure would be adopted by which justice should be done them.

The House bill granting the right of way to the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad through the Arsenal and Magazine on the Jefferson Barrack tract was passed.

The bill for the admission of Kansas, reported by the Committee on Territories, was taken up.

Mr. Wade said he stood up to advocate no new doctrine, but the great principle of equal rights to all men, black and white.

Mr. Pugh replied, and said Mr. Wade had used language not becoming to a gentleman, nor a Senator, nor a Black "Republican," but language becoming a blackguard. [Sensation.]

The Chair called Mr. Pugh to order, and, he proceeded with his remarks.

Mr. Clayton, at 5 o'clock, said he desired to speak, but did not care about addressing only a dozen Senators, and under these circumstances he moved an adjournment.

The motion was negatived.

No quorum voting, on motion of Mr. Douglas, the Sergeant of Arms was directed to compel the attendance of absent members.

After a pause of fifteen minutes, during which absentees occasionally entered, Mr. Douglas, a quorum now being in attendance, again called for a vote on Mr. Adams's amendment which was adopted, the vote being yeas 22, nays 16.

Mr. Wilson moved to strike out all after the enacting clause in the bill and insert "all acts passed by the Legislature of Kansas or any Assembly acting as such, be and the same are hereby abrogated and declared void and of no effect."

Mr. Crittenden said it seemed to him that some explanation was required. Was the remedy for the disturbances in Kansas complete and entire?

Mr. Wilson replied, that in his judgment the bill was to make Kansas a slave State. The report just made to the House shows that there were forty-nine hundred Missourians forced on the people of that Territory, and that it was the Legislature which passed inhuman and unchristian enactments that occasioned all the troubles. His proposition was designed as a preliminary to other legislation to protect the people in their rights, and punish all violations of the laws of the country.

Mr. Weller—The proposition is to repeal all laws, and settle the dispute by physical force.

Mr. Toombs—That is a good way. Nobody objects to that.

Mr. Seward said he would, with the greatest pleasure, vote for Mr. Wilson's amendment. The present bill can have no other tendency and effect than to confirm the success of the object of the passage of the law abrogating the Missouri Compromise, and form a slave, State out of Kansas. There is no code; there are no laws, and no legal society in Kansas other than that of the organic act of 1854. The government of that territory is a usurpation and tyranny, and there are no legal nor moral obligations to treat it with the least respect. The House, more true to freedom than the Senate, sent a commission thither, whose report establishes these facts beyond all question. The day for compromises has ended.

Mr. Toombs—I am glad of it.

Mr. Seward—And so am I; henceforth we take our stand on the Constitution—

Mr. Toombs—[interrupting]—On the higher law.

Mr. Seward—[continuing]—They who stand there are firm, and those who do not are on a slippery and unsubstantial foothold.

Mr. Toombs—I think so when you get on the higher law.

Mr. Crittenden regretted exceedingly to hear Mr. Seward say that the day of compromise had gone by.

He [Crittenden] would compromise to the last moment of time, provided they could preserve the original principles on which the Government was erected. The present crisis demanded of every Senator serious and solemn consideration.

Mr. Clayton said he had served long in public life, but never from the first day that he entered this hall had he believed the country in as much danger as now. His desire was to offer gentleman on both sides compromise. Alas! this day they had heard a word dear to the American statesman treated with levity. They had been told that the time for compromise was passed. If so the period of devotion to this Republic is gone. If we have arrived at the determination that we will never compromise again, we might as well throw our Constitution to the winds.

Mr. Hale said one objection he had to the bill was, that he was not willing to intrust its execution to the present executive in whom he had not the slightest confidence.

Mr. Toombs believed that Mr. Seward and his coadjutors wanted grievances of discord and nothing but revolution to obtain power.

Mr. Wilson, defended himself and his coadjutors from the charity of Mr. Toombs, that they were traitors, enemies to liberty, and hostile to the institutions of the common country. He then descanted on the principles and fair prospects of the "Republican" party.

Senators continued their opposition speeches.

At half-past twelve o'clock, Mr. Crittenden moved for an adjournment, but Mr. Douglas and others on his side of the question, who had been regaling in private rooms, came in and voted down the motion by ayes 9, nayes 22, and then retired. About two dozen persons are in the galleries, some of them asleep. A few of the Senators are in the lobby on sofas and others in their chairs. In the meantime Mr. Bell discussed the admission of States into the Union, in connection with the slavery question.

2.35 A. M.

Mr. Johnson said it was a late hour, and the same might have been said two hours ago. [Laughter.] If they could have a moment of silence amid this profound sighing and deep breathing, [laughter] he trusted the Senate would come to a vote.

Mr. Seward said generally a session lasted three or four hours, but the present session had already occupied fourteen. He would say to Mr. Crittenden he was not against all compromises, but against a compromise involving the moral right, political justice, or high political expediency. By no act of his should any man be held or kept in slavery. On this he could not compromise. He advocated his bill for the admission of Kansas with the Topeka Constitution.

Mr. Reed replied to Mr. Seward's remarks relative to slavery, saying that when a majority of the people of the North become prepared to enforce the doctrine declared by Mr. Seward, this Union cannot last one hour longer.

Several amendments, of comparative unimportance, were adopted, and others rejected.

Mr. Geyer offered an amendment, that no law shall be made or have force or effect which shall require a test or an oath to support any act of Congress or other Legislative act as a qualification for any civil office or public trust, or for any employment or profession, or to serve as a juror, or vote at an election, or which shall impose any tax upon or condition to exercise the right of suffrage by any qualified voter, or which shall restrain or prohibit free discussion of any law or subject of legislation in the Territory, or a free expression of opinion thereon by the people of the Territory.

This amendment gave rise to a debate involving the question of "Squatter Sovereignty," and whether Congress ought to interfere with the people in the settlement of their own affairs.

Mr. Cass said some of the acts passed by the Legislative Assembly of Kansas were disgraceful to the age. How could the people properly pass laws unless they have the right of free discussion?

The amendment was adopted by yeas 40, nays 3.

Mr. Wilson's amendment to abrogate and declare void all acts passed by the Legislature of Kansas was rejected by yeas 8, nays 35.

Mr. Seward offered a substitute, admitting Kansas with the Topeka Constitution. Rejected. Yeas 11, nays 36.

The bill was passed by 33 yeas against 12 nays as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell of Tenn., Benjamin, Biggs, Bigler, Bright, Broadhead, Brown, Cass, Clay, Crittenden, Douglas, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Malory, Pratt, Pugh, Reid, Sebastian, Slidell, Stuart, Thompson, of Ky., Toombs, Toucey, Weller, Wright, Yulee—33.

Nays—Messrs. Bell of N. H., Collamer, Dodge, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Seward, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson—12.

Mr. Cass said, regarding the bill as of great importance, he moved that 10,000 copies of it be printed. Adopted.

At 8 o'clock A. M. the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Campbell of Ohio asked leave to offer a resolution changing the daily hour of the House from 12 to 11 o'clock.

Mr. Jones of Tenn. objected, unless the time for the adjournment of Congress was first fixed.

Mr. Giddings—No bargains.

Mr. Houston moved to take up the Senate's adjournment resolution.

Mr. Matteson and others objected.

The reading of the report of the Kansas Investigating Committee was resumed, and on its being completed, Mr. Campbell of Ohio, moved that further reading of the documents be dispensed with.

Messrs. Florence, Houston, Craige, A. K. Marshall, Quitman and Bowie, at different times severally insisted on the reading of the documents.

The Speaker decided that any member had a right to have read documents which were to be referred or printed.

Mr. Cobb of Ga. appealed to his friends not to insist upon that, as several days would be consumed and no good purpose accomplished. His appeal was successful.

On motion of Mr. Washburne of Maine, the report was referred to the Committee on Elections and ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. Lane, authority was given the minority to report at any time within ten days, and take additional testimony, which when submitted shall be referred to the Committee on Elections and printed.

The understanding is that all the papers including the report of the minority shall be printed as one document. Adjourned.

SENATE. July 3.

The President pro-tem took the chair at noon. No Senator present besides himself. The only persons on the floor were the Secretary, Sergeant-at-arms, one door-keeper and two pages; in the gallery, one reporter and two spectators. The Chair announced the signing of several enrolled bills, including the the Kansas bill; then, in accordance with previous understanding, declared the Senate adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A message was received from the Senate announcing the passage of the Kansas bill.

Mr. Campbell, in response to a question of Mr. Kunkle, said he intended to call up the report of the Select Committee relative to the assault on Mr. Sumner, on Tuesday next, but that he would not then move the previous question if the friends of the parties involved desire a discussion.

Mr. Barclay's motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill to admit Kansas into the Union with the Topeka Constitution was rejected, was called up and adopted by 101 to 99 nays.

The bill was then passed, 100 yeas against 97 nays.

After an ineffectual effort to have an evening session, for the purpose of enabling members to speak, the House adjourned till Monday.

SENATE. July 7.

Mr. Yulee, of Fla., reported, and the Senate passed a joint resolution appropriating $10,000 for the continuance of the mail service between Charleston, S. C., and Havana, Cuba, during the months of August and September, for which the present contract does not provide.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill providing for the improvement of navigation at the mouth of the Mississippi river, which was vetoed by the President.

Mr. Slidel, of La., spoke in favor of the bill, showing the importance of the work, and answering the President's objections.

The question was taken, shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding, and the vote resulted in yeas 31, nays 12.

The Chair announced that two-thirds of those present having voted for the bill it was passed.

Mr. Mason, of Va., thought it required two-thirds of all the members of the Senate, and appealed from the decision of the Chair.

A discussion ensued, in which Messrs. Seward, Benjamin, Thompson, of Ky., Slidell, Crittenden and others, sustained the Chair; and Messrs. Butler, Clay, Toombs, Mason and others opposed the decision.

A vote being taken, the Chair was sustained by 34 against 7.

The Senate then passed the St. Mary's river and St. Clair Flats Improvement bill over the President's veto; the former by 28 against 10 and the latter by 28 against 8.

The House bill for the admission of Kansas was referred to the Committee on Territories. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed a resolution supplying new members with books of a public character similar to those voted to members of the last Congress.

A message was received from the President relative to appropriations heretofore made for the purpose of procuring from Hiram Powers, the sculptor, some work of art to adorn the Capitol, from which it appears such purpose is still pending.

The House ordered to be engrossed for a third reading the bill providing for a settlement of the claims of the officers of the revolutionary army and the widows and orphans of those that died in service.

Mr. HOUSTON, of Ala., moved a suspension of the rules, in order to act on the Senate's resolution fixing a day for the adjournment of Congress.

Negatived, by 74 against 98.

The Senate bill authorizing the people of Kansas to form a constitution and State government, was ordered to be printed, together with the amendments offered by Messrs. Dunn, Haven and Bennett, of New York.

Mr. Campbell of Ohio asked leave to offer a resolution providing for the appointment of a select committee by the Speaker to report a bill for the adjustment of difficulties in Kansas and the restoration of peace and good order, embracing a provision for the restoration of the Missouri Compromise, the protection of voters, the removal of test oaths, &c.

Mr. Cobb of Ga. said the Senate bill was good enough for him. He moved to adjourn. Adjourned.

SENATE. July 8.

Mr. Douglas, from the Committee on Territories, to which was referred the House bill to admit Kansas as a State into the Union, reported it back with an amendment, striking out the preamble and all after the enacting clause, and inserting the bill passed in the Senate on Thursday.

He asked its immediate consideration—agreed to—and proceeded to advocate the amendment. He said the proposition before the Senate was a plain one, namely, whether they would admit Kansas into the Union with the Topeka constitution, or whether they would substitute the proposition which had been modified to obviate the objections made against it, and adopted by the Senate after a full and thorough examination the other night. There was no evidence whether the majority or minority of the people of Kansas voted for the Topeka constitution, but it was known that the constitution which had been presented here and which it was now proposed to legalize, was a mutilated document. That fact was ascertained not only from general report and newspaper statements, but was proved by the report of the House Committee of Investigation. In commenting on that report Mr. Douglas characterized it as partial, unfair and unreliable. He argued the fairness and justice of the proposition submitted by him.

Mr. Collamer, a member of the Committee on Territories, said the bill reported might appear very plausible, but the existing circumstances of the case rendered the adoption of that measure exceedingly improper.

Mr. Pearce spoke briefly in favor of the amendment. Mr. Hale moved to amend the amendment by extending the time allowing residents to participate in its benefits until July 4, 1857.

Lost—Yeas 13; Nays 32.

Mr. Trumbull moved as an amendment, to repeal all the Territorial laws of Kansas and dismiss all the officers holding offices under them.

Rejected—Yeas 12; Nays, 32.

Mr. Collamer offered an amendment in favor of prohibiting slavery in that part of the Louisiana purchase north of 36 deg. 30 min not included within the Territory of Kansas.

Rejected by Yeas 12; Nays, 30.

The amendment, as reported by the Committee on Territories, was then agreed to by Yeas 32, Nays 13, and the bill thus amended passed. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, said he intended to call up to-day the report of the Select Committee on the alleged assault on Mr. Sumner, but he would not now do so, as he understood the trial was in progress before the Court.

Mr. Cobb—the trial is over and Mr. Brooks is in his seat.

A message was received from the Senate, announcing the passage, by that body, of bills for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi and the St. Clair Flats, and St. Mary's River, notwithstanding the Presidents vetoes of the same.

An account of the Senate's proceedings and President's objections accompanied the message.

The Speaker announced the question—Will the House, upon the reconsideration of the bill, agree to its passage?

Passed by Yeas, 143; Nays, 55.

The bill for deepening the channel over the St. Clair Flats passed by Yeas, 139; Nays, 55.

The bill for deepening the channel over the flats in St. Mary's River passed by Yeas, 136; Nays, 54.

Mr. Washburn, of Illinois, gave notice that the first time the House should again go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on and after Wednesday, he would move to pass over all other bills, with a view to reaching those heretofore reported, making appropriations for rivers and harbors. Adjourned.

Six Steamers Destroyed by Fire.

ST. LOUIS, July 3.

At 5 o'clock this morning a fire broke out on board the steamer St. Clair at the upper end of the levee, and it soon communicated to the steamers Paul Anderson, Grand Turk and J. M. Stockwell, lying alongside. The steamers Southerner and Saranac were cut loose from their moorings, but the burning boats floated against them and set them on fire. The whole six boats were entirely consumed. All were old ones, excepting the Southerner. Loss about $100,000. Insurance not ascertained. How the fire originated is not known.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fulness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Croyaient-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent, ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les eccès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

The Use of Flowers.

BY MARY HOWITT.

God might have made the earth bring forth
Enough for great and small,
The oak tree, and the cedar tree,
Without a flower at all.

He might have made enough, enough
For every want of ours,
For luxury, medicine and toil,
And yet have made no flowers.

The ore within the mountain mine,
Requireth none to grow,
Nor doth it need the lotus flower,
To make the river flow.

The clouds might give abundant rain,
The nightly dew might fall,
And the herb that keepeth life in man,
Might yet have drunk them all.

Then wherefore, wherefore were they made,
All dyed with rainbow light,
All fashioned with supremest grace,
Upspringing day and night.

Springing in valleys green and low,
And on the mountain high,
And in the silent wilderness,
Where no man passes by.

Our outward life requires them not,
Then wherefore had they birth?
To minister light to man,
To beautify the earth.

To comfort man—to whisper hope,
Whene'er his faith is dim,
For He who careth for the flowers,
Will care much more for him.

Reply to "Old Bullion."

Editor of the Star: Please permit me to reply to Colonel Benton's last published speech, wherein he slanders Colonel Steptoe (Captain he has it) and Brigham Young, with reference to the Governership of Utah. Being personally acquainted with Colonel Steptoe, Gov. Young, and all the proceedings, justice to the parties assailed, requires a correction from my pen, of the falsehoods of Col. Benton with reference to them.

In the fall of 1854 Lieut. Col. Steptoe arrived at Great Salt Lake City, Utah, in command of several companies, on his way to California. The season being far advanced on his arrival, he went into winter quarters. Col. Steptoe was received as an officer and a gentleman by Gov. Young, and the people there; and indeed he never forfeited that confidence by act or deed during his stay, which was some six or seven months. During Col. Steptoe's stay in Great Salt Lake City, President Pierce was, and had been, continually beset since he first came into the Presidential chair, by political demagogues and office-seekers, like Col. Benton, (not by the gallant Col. Steptoe, for he never applied,) to remove Gov. Young, or to appoint some one else to fill his place. At last President Pierce consented to appoint another Governor for Utah, as Gov. Young's term of office had then already expired. Accordingly President Pierce officially informed Col. Steptoe that he had been appointed Governor of Utah if he would accept the office.

On the news of Col. Steptoe's appointment reaching Great Salt Lake City, I heard Gov. Young publicly express himself before thousands, in these words: "That there was not a man living outside the Church of which he was a member that he would prefer for Governor of Utah before Col. Steptoe; and that if he accepted the appointment he (Gov. Young) would take off his hat to him and salute him with a band of music, for he considered him a gentlemen"—and all the people said Amen. But Col. Steptoe, caring little for the office, well knowing that the emoluments of the Governorship of Utah for a few years were a mere nominal consideration compared to the emoluments from his position in the army, (which he would have had to resign if he accepted the Governorship,) and also knowing the general feeling existing in the community there, that they would prefer Brigham Young to any other man to govern them, he (Col. Steptoe) wrote to President Pierce, declining to accept the office. Whereupon Brigham Young retained the Governorship of Utah, and has, ever since his term of office expired in 1854, under the organic act creating said Territory, which says that "the Governor shall retain his office until his successor is appointed and qualified." Gov. Young's successor has never been "appointed and qualified." President Pierce did not appoint Gov. Young, neither has he removed him, nor appointed another in his place that would accept the office.

Thus Colonel Benton will perceive that the "prophecy" he says Brigham Young uttered when he made a speech to the people on the occasion of Col. Steptoe's being Governor—"that he intended to remain in his place until God should say, 'Brigham, I don't want you to be Governor of Utah any longer,'" is being fulfilled. But there were no such words uttered by Governor Young on that occasion, though he did utter them in substance at the time the first judges left Utah some three years previously. So, Mr. Benton's West Point tactics, smuggling, bybernating, &c., reminds me of the Indian that cursed the King on the other side of the hill."

But, says Mr. Benton: "There was something else which I did not foresee; which was that this Military Governor carried off four dozen of the Mormon Betty Martins with him, to the infinite distress of the Saints, profoundly chagrined to find themselves encroached upon by the Gentiles." O, mirabile dictu! What is Mr. Benton's object in misstating and exaggerating everything he writes or speaks about? Does he expect to make political capital thus? If he does, let me inform him that such bogus coin will not go in the market; but "drowning men catch at straws," even to making ugly or wry faces, and cramping contortions of the same at generals while sitting in court martials. Poor old man; he is certainly in his dotage!

There were eight females in all that left Utah with the officers and soldiers of Col. Steptoe's command; one or two of them were married to the soldiers previous to leaving; some left with the officers, and the balance went off of their own accord; and Gov. Young, and all the "Saints" there were heartily glad they were gone. For, let me inform Mr. Benton, the loss of such "Betty Martins" does any thing else but "chagrin the Saints." I would further inform Mr. Benton that Utah is too hot a place for "Betty Martins," libertines, or adulterers to tarry in long; they soon "cut stick," and make "straight wakes," and, howling, flee away. If Mr. Benton has ever passed through Salt Lake City he can bear testimony to it, no doubt. These "Betty Martins" went off with the soldiers, and some inferior officers under the promise of marriage, as I understand. But Col. Steptoe declared expressly that no female from Utah was going with him or by his consent; and if others carried them off, they did it upon their own responsibility.

Mr. Benton also says "Utah is in revolt." Revolt against what? Why, against all infernal scoundrels that wish to contaminate society—adulterero, &c.,—that ruin female virtue destroy the peace of families, deay their own flesh and blood, and all liars, hypocrites, murderers, and wicked men, that are a disgrace to society, to the very name of man—a stench in the nostrils of the Almighty and all good men! But Mr. Benton would imply in revolt to the Government of the United States. He knew better when he made the remark; and every honest man that has ever been in Utah will bear testimony to the same; for a more law-abiding people, or one that is more attached to the Constitution of the United States, than inhabit the Territory of Utah, cannot be found. But Mr. Benton must spit out his spleen against the Mormons whenever and wherever he speaks. To be sure, his influence is not much at present, but he well recollects, no doubt, what his influence brought upon the innocent and unoffending of the Mormons in the State of Missouri some years ago. The widows, orphans, and the maimed now in Utah have not forgotten it. Mr. Benton is like all others of the same stripe. They know the increasing power and influence of the Mormons, and are afraid of retributive justice. Hence, they keep barking. But a "guilty conscience is its own accuser." Mr. Benton, the Mormons will not hurt you. "You are hitting at a hat that has no head in it."

Polygamy, too, like "Hamlet's ghost," is always haunting him; or perhaps the thought of the femenine gender almost overcomes the old man now, who, no doubt, is like one of the ancients: "as one dead to the world and as imp——t as the grave." It is a matter of astonishment to me that such a reformer as Mr. Benton should not, in his celebrated speeches, refer to the existing things (putting polygamy to the blush) almost every where abounding, especially in the large cities of the States, as he well knows. I wonder he did not advert to it in his celebrated speech, or insert it in his "Thirty Year's View," and then charge it upon the Administration. Does Mr. Benton ever refer to those things? O, no, they are "too popular."

But let me ask Mr. Benton if Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, men after God's own heart, and whose God he declares himself to be, were not all polygamists, as well as David and Solomon, and many others. Look at their descendants. Did not Jesus, the Saviour of the world, according to the flesh, come through the lineage of Judah, who was a son of one of the wives of Jacob; and Jesus says, "many shall come from the East, and from the West, and from the North and the South, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of God," while such men as Col. Benton, and all others of the same stripe, will no doubt be cast out; for he certainly would never want to be in the company with polygamists. It appears the Lord thinks so much of the old polygamist Jacob, that he is going to have the names of his twelve sons (from different wives) "engraved upon the gates of the New Jerusalem, the Holy City to come down from Heaven."

I do not write to advocate polygamy here, but to reply to Mr. Benton, wherein he speaks of Dale Owen being "sent to a foreign court for his election services, and says that he must convey the idea, wherever he goes, that the United States is a whole nation of Mormons returning to the state of forest animals." This is a nut for Mr. Benton to crack, by way of keeping himself from again expressing his ignorance in talking of things he knows nothing about. But I have traced his nonsense far enough—he is dead in a political sense, and his fate reminds me of a verdict of a negro jury on an inquest of a deceased negro, returned as follows:

"We, de underscribed darkies, bein a Kerners Jurny of disgust to sit on de body ob de niggar Sambo, now dead and gone before us, hab bin sitting on de niggar aforesaid, did, on de night ob de fourteenth of November, come to his def by fallin from de bridge over de riber into de said riber, whar we find he was suddenly drowned and afterwards washed on de riber side, whar we spose he froz to def."

W. I. A, of Utah.

Dinner in the Russian Camp.

The following letter, dated the 5th, from a superior French officer attached to the staff of the army of the East, gives an idea of the habitudes de table of the Russians:

I am desirous of sending you an account of the matter in which I passed yesterday with the Russians. A colonel of their staff came to breakfast with us a few days since, and invited us to pass a day with them in their camp, situated in the middle of the defile of Korales, the most formidable position that the Russians have opposite to us. Accompanied by some other officers of the staff, we left on horseback at 8 in the morning, and reached the Russian camp at a little after 12.

The ride was a delightful one, through the valley of Chouliou, and across the most picturesque country, covered with walnut, cherry and other trees, all in full bloom. The defile of Korales is a deep ravine, skirted by lofty heights, bristling with cannon, and where, if we had been simple enough to attack our enemies, they could have buried us all by merely hurling down stones from the high cliffs into the valley. The residence of our host is a pretty house surrounded by a garden at the further end of the gorge. The moment we were seen advancing a military band struck up an air from the "Bijou perdu," Ah! qu'il fait done bon cueillir des fraises," and I confess that hearing this rondo was not one of the least pleasing surprises I met with.

On alighting Colonel Zimmermann, our entertainer, introduced us into the house, where we were soon surrounded by a number of Russian officers covered with embroidery and orders. We expected to meet with only officers of the staff like ourselves; but we were received by a number of generals, among whom were General Wrangel, who had only arrived that morning to assume the command of the troops remaining in the Crimea; Gen. Ouschakoff, who commands the 3d corps; and others whose names, filled with hard-sounding consonants, I will not attempt to write down.

A few minutes after our arrival we were invited to seat ourselves at table. The dining-room was in the garden under a tent, which, as the weather was fine, was far preferable to being in doors. According to the Russian custom, a whet is given to the appetite by first going to a side table and drinking a glass of brandy or gin, and eating sardines, cheese, and a lot of other things steeped in vinegar, but which to those unaccustomed to them would rather take away all desire to eat; and the more so that all drink out of the same glass and use the same fork to take up the sardine, which they swallow whole at one mouthful, without bread or removing the bones.

These preliminary operations being over, we took our seats at a well served table. I had the seat of honor between General Wrangel and another general. The table was covered with bottles of wine, but not a drop of water. All the wine came from our dealers at Kamiesh. We were first helped to hot Russian pale, composed of chopped meat, mixed with rice, eggs, caviar and other condiments, and it was a very savory affair. After this, there was a soup served in cups. It was strongly seasoned with cinnamon. Then came hot hams, pieces of roast beef of forty pounds weight, etc. Three-quarters of an hour's interval elapsed between each dish, which period was filled up with toasts and libations.

Then came the sweet dishes à la Française, such as puddings, with sauce, &c., and we were in hopes that the repast was at an end; but in this we were deceived, for our plates were removed, and we were served with roast turkey and salad, the latter mixed with vinegar and sugar. We were compelled to do violence to our stomachs, or else appear wanting in politeness to our host. We drank to the health of the Emperor Napoleon, the Emperor of Russia, Marshal Pelissier, and others, during five hours, not quitting the table until near 6 o'clock. We had ten leagues to ride on our return home, and after smoking some cigars we left, and reached our quarters at 10 o'clock. Our horses, we found, had not fared as well as we had, for not a grain of corn had been given them the whole day.

Dispatch of Earl Clarendon upon Mr. Crampton's Dismissal.

On Thursday evening further papers relative to recruiting in the United States were presented to Parliament. They include Mr. Marcy's dispatch communicating the fact of the dismissal of the British Minister and the British Consuls, and the affidavits which accompanied the same; a letter from Mr. Crampton to the Earl of Clarendon, dated London, June 19; a memorandum by Consul Barclay, containing a denial of Mr. Marcy's charges ipissimis verbis; correspondence of Consul Matthew with Mr. Marcy and with the Earl of Clarendon; and, finally, Earl Clarendon's reply to Mr. Marcy. The latter important dispatch is as follows:

THE EARL OF CLARENDON TO MR. DALLAS.

Foreign Office, Tuesday, June 26, 1856.

Sir: The dispatch of Mr. Marcy, which you read to me on the 11th instant, and of which you placed a copy in my hands, has received the attentive consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

Her Majesty's Government are gratified at learning that the assurances contained in my note to you of the 30th of April, that no intention existed on the part of Her Majesty's Government to violate the laws, compromise the neutrality, or disregard the sovereignty of the United States, have been unreservedly accepted by the President; and that all cause of difference, with respect to the question of enlistment, has ceased to exist between the Governments of Great Britain and of the United States.

It is with much regret, however, that Her Majesty's Government have learned that the President has been unable to alter the view which he had taken of the conduct of Her Majesty's Minister, at Washington, and of Her Majesty's Consuls at New York, Philadelphia and Cincinnati in regard to the transactions which have been under discussion between the two Governments.

Mr. Marcy had, in his dispatch of Dec. 28, 1855, stated that the President was of opinion that those officers of Her Majesty had violated the laws of the United States by being parties to enlistments within the Union; that he, on his, they have not deemed it their duty on that ground, considered that they had become unacceptable organs of Her Majesty's Government in the United States, and that he consequently requested that they might be removed from their respective posts.

Her Majesty's Government did not share this opinion of the President in regard to the conduct of those officers of Her Majesty; and having communicated to those officers the charges made against them, and the evidence on which those charges rested, and having received from them full denials of the truth of the charges, and such corroborating evidence as they were able to procure tending to invalidate the testimony brought against them, Her Majesty's Government laid all these matters fully and frankly before the Government of the United States, with the persuasion that they would remove the unfavorable impression which had been created in the mind of the President with regard to the conduct and proceedings of Her Majesty's Minister at Washington and of the three above mentioned Consuls.

It appears, however, that this communication has not produced the effect which Her Majesty's Government had expected; and Mr. Marcy, in stating that the President's view of these matters remained unaltered, accompanied that statement by a number of additional documents, tending to confirm the view which the President had originally taken of these matters.

Her Majesty's Government have carefully examined these additional documents, but do not find in them any evidence worthy of belief which should shake the confidence which they have reposed in the assurances of Mr. Crampton and of the Consuls.

Her Majesty's Government retain the high opinion which they have ever held of the zeal, ability and integrity of Mr. Crampton; and of the earnest desire by which he has been animated to avoid all just cause of offence to the Government to which he was accredited. Her Majesty's Government cannot but believe that on many material points in respect to his conduct, the President has been misled by erroneous information, and by the testimony of witnesses undeserving of belief.

Her Majesty's Government entertain similar convictions as to the conduct of her Majesty's Consuls at New York, Philadelphia and Cincinnati.

Such a conflict of opinions, on such a matter, between the Governments of two great powers, must necessarily be the subject of serious deliberation by both; and her Majesty's Government have not failed to give to this matter all the consideration which it justly deserved.

If her Majesty's Government had been convinced, like the Government of the United States, that her Majesty's officers had, in defiance of their instructions, violated the laws of the United States, her Majesty's Government would, both out of deference to the United States, and from a due regard to the authority of the British Crown, have removed those officers from the posts which they held.

If the Government of a foreign country were capriciously, and without any apparent belief that it had good ground for doing so, to break off its diplomatic relations with the minister accredited to it by Her Majesty, Her Majesty's confidential servants, answerable for maintaining the honor and dignity of the Crown, could not hesitate as to advising Her Majesty equally to break off all diplomatic intercourse with the Minister of such Government accredited to Her Court.

But in the present case Her Majesty's Government are bound to accept the formal and repeated declarations of the President of his belief that these officers of Her Majesty have violated the laws of the Union, and are, on that account, unacceptable organs of communication with the Government and authorities of the United States; and Her Majesty's Government cannot deny to the Government of the United States a right similar to that which, in a parallel case, they would claim for themselves; the right, namely, of forming their own judgment as to the bearing of the laws of the Union upon transactions which have taken place within the Union.

I have, therefore, the honor to inform you that, however deeply Her Majesty's Government regret a proceeding on the part of the President of the United States which cannot but be considered as of an unfriendly character, they have not deemed it their duty on that account to advise Her Majesty to command me to suspend my diplomatic intercourse with you; and I have to assure you that the high personal esteem which is felt for you by all the members of Her Majesty's Government will render it most agreeable to myself to have the honor of entering into communication with you upon all matters connected with the mutual relations of our two countries. You will be certain of meeting, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, the most friendly feelings toward the United States, and the most anxious desire so to arrange all questions of difference as to reconcile the just rights and real interests of the two countries with the maintenance of those amicable relations, the preservation of which is of such great importance to both. I am, &c.,

(Signed) Clarendon.

They Live on the Wages of Sin.

All the large cities of the United States are but little, if anything, behind those of London, Paris, and other capitals of continental Europe, in the exhibition of all the wild and demoralizing passions of poor frail humanity—more particularly those which come under the terms of sensual and voluptuous indulgences. In New York, it is asserted, upon what is supposed to be good authority, that there are at least fifty thousand women living a deprived and debauched life, either in the public brothels or as the private mistresses of libertines and sensualists of that city. Possibly, the estimate is somewhat exaggerated, yet sufficient is certainlly known of the abominations of that emporium of commerce to place the moral aspect of the city in the most favorable light. The streets are nightly thronged with abandoned creatures, while the "castles" of frailty and "Bowers of Beauty," stand among the most splendid establishments of the town, outrivaling in their appointments all the gorgeous glories and sumptuousness of the abodes of the Cleopatras and Aspasias of ancient times.

In our own fair Quakerdom, although vice does not assume so bold and brazen a front in the blaze of the noon-day sun, yet there is too much reason to believe that there is an enormous amount of secret horrors perpetrated under the darksome veil of the nocturnal hour. It is true, we have no castles of sensuality soaring their tall towers to the clouds, as in very mockery and daring of Heaven, yet there is many a secluded place of lust—many a den where innocence and loveliness are ensnared to their eternal ruin, by wretches wearing the semblance of man!

But it is not these victims of sensuality that we have now to speak. We would point the finger of scorn to those other much more miserable things who subsist upon the brewing of the rotten bones of carnel men! Surely of all contemptible things which crawl upon God's footstool, the meanest beyond all conception of meanness, is the soul-debased wretch who exist "strikingly dependent" on the hell-spurned wages of prostitution!

There are hundreds of such creatures in our midst—even here in the city of drab-colored Christianity—where virtue is preached from hundreds of pulpits, and where godliness should be held at the highest premium. We could stand at any corner of Chesnut street, on any day, and point out the miscreants by the dozen, who have sunk themselves to that deplorably low scale of beings, as to love no higher aim and ambition than to subsist on the spawn of libertinism and sensual corruption.

In France, wretches of this class are called marlowz, which signifies "protector." In England they are styled "bullies." In New York they come under the cognomen of "fancy man." Let them be known in Philadelphia hereafter, by the more proper term of—Pimp!

These fellows are supported in a style of prodigal independence by the keepers of brothels and their miserable inmates, and honored by the title of special "lovers." They are usually well dressed, and may be seen about the principal hotels and all the public and fashionable resorts of the city. They serve as the decoy ducks to lead strangers and thoughtless clerks and others to all the vile dens and gambling hells of the city, where they are robbed of their gold, and stripped of all the noble attributes of their original natures, to sink at last to a condition fitting them for the perpetration of the darkest crimes in the catalogue of hell.

The miserable creatures of which we speak embrace gamblers, pickpockets, ex-police officers, briefless lawyers, broken down politicians, libidinous clergymen, who have been detected in their amours and turned out of church, with others who have squandered ancestral wealth, and in all other ways dishonored the dignity of man. They smoke cigars and drink the best of brandies, with all the nonchalance and ease of gentlemen of ease and fortune, but follow them to their secret haunts, and scrutanize their private actions, and you will realize something of the extent of the horrible business of pandering to the lusts of bestial animals, in the shape of men and women, as presented in this great city of Penn.—[Phila. Police Gaz.

Edward McGowan, who is indicted as an accomplice in the assassination of Mr. King, was tried in Pennsylvania, some years since, and sentenced to the State Prison for robbing the Chester Bank. After serving out a part of his sentence, he was pardoned by the Governor, and came to San Francisco in 1849. Here he was made a justice, and for two or three years dispensed a base imitation of that article—to the highest bidder. His talents and great cunning were soon found especially adapted to political rascality—and the bullies and blacklegs acknowledged him as the head of their corps. He was generally selected to preside at their primary meetings, and was always a delegate to the County and State Conventions. "Hon. Judge McGowan" sounded so respectable! In part requital for his eminent political services, he was made Commissioner of Emigration, but although the amount of cash he fingered during his official term was very large, the strong box of the Treasury was never made one dollar the richer from this source. French women and draw-poker were so expensive! About six months since, a daughter of la belle France came near losing her life by the explosion of a torpedo, placed in front of her chamber door, and the Honorable Judge was generally suspected to have been the author of the ingenious plot to get his mistress into a better world. McGowan is very respectably connected in the Atlantic States. He is sure to swing, if caught. —[San Francisco paper.

The Vine and Olive in Northern Italy.

Robert H. Lees, United States Consul at Spezzia, in reply to a circular of February 29, 1856, issued from the Patent Office at Washington, gives the following interesting facts in relation to the culture of cotton in Italy:

During the occupation of Italy by the French under the first Napoleon, one of his projects was the introduction of the cotton plant, but it failed generally throughout Northern Italy; and now cotton is not raised further north than in some of the Papal States.

The principal agricultural products of this part of Italy are the olive and grape, with which the whole face of the country is covered, even to the summits of the mountains which seem inaccessible. The vine and olive trees are carried up and cultivated by means of terraces, constructed at great expense and labor, and the perfect beauty of their appearance at this season, with everything in leaf and blossom, may easily be imagined.

The olive trees are planted in groves very thickly, and require little care beyond a simple scraping around the roots and stirring up of the soil early in the Spring. Between the trees is planted the vine to which they seem as lattice work, festooned with its leaves and tendrils.

The annual value of each tree is estimated at five francs, [about ninety cents,] and its hardiness is such that while the vine for the last five years has been destroyed or rendered unproductive by disease, the olive has remained unhurt. A great blessing this has been to the peasantry, for had the olive proved as sickly as the grape, a fearful famine must have ensued.

"An American Editor's Valedictory."

"The undersigned retires from the editorial chair with the complete conviction that all is vanity. From the hour he started his paper to the present time, he has been solicited to lie upon every given subject, and can't remember having told a wholesome truth without diminishing his subscription list or making an enemy. Under these circumstances of trial, and having a thorough contempt for a himself, he retires to recruit his moral constitution."

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 19, 1856.

A Degenerate Press.

If any class of men should be more assiduous than another in cultivating the habit of speaking truthfully, it is that class whom circumstances have placed in a position to instruct the masses, upon the general facts of the day—we mean Editors. There are, we verily believe, many gentlemen connected with the press whose highest ambition is to faithfully represent everything and every person worthy of public notice; gentlemen who, fully aware of the leanings of the people generally to evil habits, labor to destroy the corrupting influences that enslave and impoverish humanity; gentlemen who seek and obtain no other recompense than the blessing of a peaceful and smiling conscience. Such persons feel they have a mission, and best perform it by striving to improve the world in which they dwell, and leave it better than they found it: such will always be bright, steady, and shining lights, and a blessing to the community who enjoy their labors. While we thus offer our meed of praise to some, we are, alas! forced to confess that a far greater host can be found in the same profession, entitled to no better name than the present significant and popular—"dark lantern." These men think nothing of humanity, they are its curse, plagues worse than those that afflicted ancient Egypt. By maddened gods or men they have been elevated to the editorial chair, to torment and afflict others. They create excitement, and live in it—it is their element, without it they would dry up, wither, perish and die out. They have no other mission before them than building up Self, know nothing, and are determined to know nothing but what contributes to the attainment of that object.

No attentive and reflecting reader of the dailies and weeklies but what knows we write the truth; should this, however, be to any person news, let us direct such to a close examination of the present war that rages throughout our land. From North to South, East to West, there is one continuous warfare. Is it a war of principle? Verily no! We, certainly, sometimes read in declarations of faith that it is against principles, and not men, that this or that society takes its stand, and were it so, we would say, go to with all your might—the hotter the war the sooner the peace; but is it so? We don't believe it. There are gentlemen conscientious in their opposition to the peculiar institution of the South, others equally conscientious in the conviction that Africa's sons are better there than they would be elsewhere; but the present noise and confusion does not result from their simple discussion of this subject. Far from it. The struggle is simply recrimination. One party is devotedly zealous in stirring up the passions of the opposite party by misstatements and exaggerations; the accused find life and reasons for its existence in denying the accusations of the other; and in doing so, falsify and misrepresent facts on the other side, and thus in turn they perpetuate each others animosity and existence. What more is there any where, and when shall the end of these things be? Had the North and South met in fair contest on principle, and principle alone, long ere this the error would have been vanquished, the victor crowned with honor, and peace and harmony restored to the nation. To interested calumniators, dark lanterns, America owes all its troubles. Columbia might stand forth the mistress of the world, envy of the nations, were it not for the reckless heaven-daring spirit of some of her own sons. It is not the greater resources of any other nation that keep us where we are, but it is our own prodigal waste of time, money, and talent in seeking each other's destruction. What man that knows anything about the press of the United States, believes one hundredth part of what is published for fact, and that small part even cannot be accepted without a thousand doubts about its truth in detail. It is shameful, disgraceful, and humiliating in the extreme, to witness the changing, rising and falling of the tone of gentlemen of the quill. Could weathercocks be constructed to move with the same facility before changing winds, as some editors, before debating influences, there would be no smoky kitchen in the world.

What is true in politics is equally true in religion: if anything, religious editors are the most unscrupulous in their assertions. Their calumny, misstatements and exaggerations, are dyed with an acerbity that shows that the heart as well as the head is corrupt and bought up. Religious men are continually bespattering each other; there is certainly less fire and flourish in their controversy than with politicians; policy requires the use of "a beloved brother" in their strife, in order to hoodwink the pious, and make them believe that the withering and damning warfare between them is nothing more than watchfulness for the flock's sake, and when they have been overcharged and unable to restrain their wrath, in their apologies they have blasphemously justified themselves by claiming purer and higher love for Christ. We, Mormons, have had a Benjamin's share of their venom. They have heaped it upon us without measure. It matters not what may arouse their zeal, they hasten to the subject, and before they take a second breathing after looking at the heading of a spicy article, they seize the pen and in triumphant joy add their comments one after another, till the mole-hill becomes a mountain that threatens to leave them no dwelling place among men.

A short time since a Mrs. Jervis, from England, accompanied by her brother and her three children, came to this port by the packet ship Thornton. Her husband arrived before them, and immediately got possession of the children by writ of habeas corpus. The case came up before Judge Clarke, of the U. S. Supreme Court of this city. The first hearing satisfied the judge that it was a musty case, and not to be settled in an hour nor attended to without other assistance. For full examination the case was taken before Judge Peabody. The lawyer for Jervis, Mr. Edwards, thought fit to serve his client by hunting up Dick, Tom and Harry, to throw mud at the Mormons. He produced Mr. Murray, from Castle Garden, who said the Mormons were heartlessly neglectful of their children in sickness, and reported that about Christmas one of the Elders had said, on the death of a child, that it was "one pig less to feed." That statement has been replied to and denied emphatically through the Herald and this paper, and Mr. Murray has not dared to answer. The next brought up was Bernard W. Gammon, a sergeant in the U. S. army. He had been to Great Salt Lake City and saw and heard wonderful things, all of which we pronounce contemptible lies, worthy of the man who spoke them. To refute them would be to insult and question the testimony of many disinterested gentlemen, unconnected with the church, who have spoken of Utah and its inhabitants in the highest terms. The last, Wm. H. Cameron, a physician at the Garden, spoke of the Mormon emigrants as being the dirtiest of all emigrants. We tell Mr. Cameron that, if he said what is reported, he spoke falsely, and we have on hand the testimony of the captains of the ships by which our emigrants came to confront him, all of whom have spoken in the highest terms of the order and cleanliness of our emigrants. The readers of this paper have seen, month after month, the testimonies we refer to, and Mr. Cameron may consult our file if he wishes. The counsel for Mrs. Jervis objected to the whole of the contemptible rakings that Mr. Edwards brought forth, and the latter knew well that his labors were irrelevant, but would do well to prejudice the people against the Mormons, and for the moment favor the corrupt, yea, doubly corrupt scoundrel, that the old fogy laws of England alone prevented the women of his neighborhood from dipping in the mill-pond for his abusive and disgusting course with his wife and children. This hubbub and the irrelevant and untruthful statements of the three persons named, have been printed throughout the Union as a spicy argument against Mormonism.

Did it not occur to these bought-up political editors and divided religious scribblers that the Mormons might be misrepresented! We care not what such men say against us. Their good or bad word is of no value where they are known; but when we see persons and papers trying to make capital of one-sided stories and charges, we cannot help thinking that they are desperately hard-up for something to satisfy debased tastes.

The Weekly Democratic Press, Chicago, July 12th, regales its readers with old Benton's speech at St. Louis, the Jervis story under the heading "The Abominations of Mormonism Exposed," and an editorial "Mormon Abominations." We have spoken plainly in the beginning of this article about a debauched and weathercock set of men in the editorial chair we wish The Weekly Democratic Press at Chicago to perfectly understand us, that should he take even Benjamin's portion twice over of what we have written, we shall not think him greedy or glutton. The editor has endorsed the Black Republican platform and of course must support the shaky plank against Utah—"MONEY MAKES THE MARE TO GO." We shall not be surprised if after the election the Mormons turn out to be a good sort of folks after all. We understand the change and the causes well enough. We have seen more than one presidential election, and known more than ink and paper to have been purchased to help through some folks. The Press at Chicago understands us without doubt.

We cannot terminate without noticing that the "Irish American," whose mission seems to resemble that of the mosquitoes, notices likewise this case and to get a few extra "three cents" has "Mormonism and its Results" on its weekly sheet in attractive characters. We could not refrain from laughing at his "blarney." He says: "We are happy in being able to say, that among the thousands of converts to the doctrines of Joe Smith who have hitherto arrived, there has never yet been found a single man, woman, or child of Irish birth." Sure Patrick Lynch that isn't the first you've told. For the comfort of the Irish American we may state that one of the largest companies of Mormon emigrants from Europe this season came under the presidency of a dear boy from ould Ireland. We cannot now say how many came with him, nor how many before, nor how many since but our ears have been saluted with the sweet sounds of the brogue all the season as companies have passed through our city. We could tell him of many a faithful and zealous expounder of Mormonism in Utah, in England and even in the ould country that have the brogue as pure and sweate as the last imported grandfather's grandson from the Emerald Isle.

After we had laid down our pen, terminated as we thought, a gentleman from Ireland entered, we could not resist the temptation of giving him a glance at our manuscript, "Och!" says he, sure I was baptised by Elder Patrick Lynch in Belfast. He could not say if he was a relative of the Irish American.

If Utah becomes a State, what will become of the Union?

One would suppose from the reading of some of our cotemporaries upon the admission of Utah into the confederacy, that such an event would at once turn the entire population of the Union into Arabs, Hottentots, Malays or some other kind of heathens; with all the grand modern improvements of civilization, suddenly turned into relicts of ancient barbarism. What is the cause of this praise among certain very moral editors? Is it because they imagine polygamy to be inate with mankind, merely latent in the bosom of all christendom, only awaiting the revivifying glance of ancient inspiration, or direct application to society of the old Abrahamic law, under which both Ishmael and Israel saw the light of day? Do they fear that all the married and unmarried females will desert the old monogamic system, and fall into the ranks of polygamy; or when the subject is up, that they will turn Free Lovers and become advocates of "Passional Attraction!" For the comfort of irritable old gentlemen and ugly and awkward young men, especially editors, we say, do not be alarmed, for there is no accounting for tastes, particularly of the ladies, and when the market is open to all, there may be a chance for you, as well as for some of the more agreeable, better looking ones, as some of the fair ones now confined to a life of single blessedness, may take a notion to change their condition, and they may possibly take a fancy to you. It certainly would be a blessing, if some bright angel, of whom alas, so many are fallen, could relieve your troubled dreams of that dreaded incubus of distant Utah, so long and heavily resting upon your unsullied conscience!!!

But seriously friends, we mean our monogamic friends, for we have friends who as honestly believe in polygamy, as the Patriarchs of old once did, we ask what have you to fear, in this boasted age of enlightenment and in the midst of this most christian land, from these handful of poor deluded believers in Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, Solomon, Peter, James, John, Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, and all the rest of the Prophets and Apostles. Secluded as these poor creatures are away up there among the mountains, craigs and deserts, buried up in snow half the year and subject to famine by crickets, grasshopper, and lazy Indians the other half?

A hundred thousand souls, more or less, in Utah, men, women and children, Dutch, English, Irish, Welsh, with a smart sprinkling of Yankees. We again seriously ask. What have you to fear? Will that diminitive band of ignorant followers of "Joe Smith" inoculate with their imbicility and ignorance this moral and highly cultivated land, this political acme of man's wisdom, this vast flower garden of Freedom, the very pavillion of the Goddess of Liberty! What a tremendous influence for so puny and degraded a set, a thousand miles from the confines of civilization, to exert over the extensive and intelligent communities of this great nation, not only to stir up our sapient editors, but actually base the issues of a Presidential Campaign and make polygamy a national question. Alas! alas! my country!

A hundred thousand souls, not one-fifth of the population of New York city, compose the entire inhabitants of Utah, and many of these, poor souls, not old enough to be polygamists. Let us inquire of interested friends if the proportion of enlightened citizens of New York, Philadelphia, Boston and Washington, not believing in polygamy, perhaps its strongest opponents, who yet covertly practice that which they so much abhor in Utah, are not quite equal in numbers, to these conscientious believers in that distant Territory; are you not afraid of contagion from that which is right in your own midst, and if four of your principal cities outnumber Utah, what may be said of the rest of this broad Union? The comparison does not speak well for monogamy, nor for the judgment or honesty of some of these zealous opponents of Utah.

Aside, however, from any advocacy of polygamy, or discussing the truths or falsity of Mormonism, they can stand or fall upon their own merits, we can say to those who oppose the admission of Utah into the Union as a State, upon the grounds of the religious faith of its inhabitants, the possible or even probable effects of her admission upon other States of the Union. You are sure to inflict a much deeper wound upon yourselves and the cause of freedom, by thus attempting to wrest from that people their constitutional rights, than can possibly accrue from their admission and the free, uninterrupted exercise of their elective franchise. You would make a precedence for the ultimate overthrow of all State rights, the unconstitutional trampling upon the sacred ties of domestic life, and every cherished right and privilege of free born American citizens. Once resign the sovereignty of the people of any one portion of this great confederacy entirely into the hands of General Government, and it will not be long ere the strongest States of the Union will be forced to bow meekly to every yoke that an Imperial power at Washington may see fit to place upon their necks.

Death of Mr. Strang.

We see it announced in the papers that Mr. Strang is dead.

We never knew Mr. Strang, and have not, nor never had, any association with him; but if the papers tell the truth, all of which seem to be his enemies, we look upon his death as a wanton, cold-blooded murder. We do not believe as he did; but we consider that every man in these United States has a right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience, and when we see a man butchered as he was without redress, and then his followers hunted, persecuted and prosecuted, because the chief leading spirit has gone, we witness a deed that makes the heart of every lover of his country feel sad.

We know nothing of the justice or injustice of the accusations made against him and his people. They may be true or false. If true, the law is open, and if their acts are so flagrant as represented, they are easily proven. Why, then, this violence? Why this bloodthirstiness? Why this cold-blooded murder, followed up by a heartless, vindictive, cruel persecution of his followers? And why this universal gloating over the misery of our fellow beings? But he was a thief. Be it so. Have we no law to punish thieves? But his followers are desperadoes. Have we no justice nor State prisons for such characters? Is it necessary that we should employ Christian cut-throats because the law is ineffectual?

From what we can gather—we write from memory—two men whom Mr. Strang had caused to be whipped for stealing, were the perpetrators of the diabolic act. They were arrested, or gave themselves up, and were acquitted, because it was considered that they had sufficient provocation. Let us here pause and ask a question or two. Why the present foray against the so-called Mormons? We are told they are thieves. Yet Mr. Strang had these men whipped for stealing; so say the papers. The justice acquitted them because they had sufficient provocation. Now it follows, if they were whipped for stealing by Mr. Strang, that Mr. Strang was opposed to stealing; or why did he have these men whipped for it? Again: If the people are thieves, and it is for this cause that they are persecuted, why did the justice acquit two men who added murder to theft? And with what show of justice can these people be driven and proscribed by men who, according to their own showing, sanction both thieving and murder?

We do not know the whole of the facts in the case; we have never heard but the one side, and that from enemies. We know of some who have been Mormons who are among Mr. Strang's followers, and we cannot believe they are thieves. We consider they have as much right to their opinion as we have to ours, and though not of them, yet if they will forward us a true statement of their affairs, they will find one man who dare publish the truth and vindicate a persecuted people against marauders, villi ns and cut-throats, no matter what their religious belief.

Central America.

By the arrival of the Orizaba on Monday evening, we have important news from Nicaragua. Papers in the interest of fillibusterism have heretofore represented everything in the finest and most favorable light between the government of the country and Walker. The "Walker-Rivas" government, as it has been universally called, is no more. Rivas and his whole cabinet, save Don Fermin Ferrer, are opposed to the General. The news published in this city are from partizan papers, and consequently denunciatory of the government.

What had taken place between them to cause disaffection is not stated. Walker charges Rivas with treason for a proclamation he issued after his flight from the seat of government; but what caused the flight is still a mystery. One lame story is told about unsuccessful candidates for the Presidency flying or being hung, and as Rivas doubted his re-election, he had taken an early step to leave. After Rivas's flight, on the 12th June, Walker, by virtue of the authority vested in him, dissolved the government, and appointed Don Fermin Ferrer provisional President. The election for the Presidency came off on the 24th, and by the vote of the nation General Walker is reported President of Nicaragua.

Walker intended fighting the Costa Ricans in their own country when he could spare the time, but if any reliance can be placed on the latest news from the Isthmus, he will find employment at home. The army of Guatemala is marching to Nicaragua.

Revolution is reported at Costa Rica. General Mora's unsuccessful movement in favor of Nicaragua, brought out the opposition party against him. The latest news reports the death of the General, the Vice President, and Secretary of State, by Cholera.

Emigration Notice.

As President Erastus Snow has arrived in his old stamping ground in St. Louis, and is fully empowered by the Presidency in Zion to take charge of the emigration in the West, I feel very happy in being enabled to resign into his hands that department of a very responsible duty which has devolved upon me since the death of President Orson Spencer.

Bros. Daniel Spencer, George D. Grant, W. H. Kimball, John Van Cott, James McGaw, and all parties having the management of financial matters associated with the Emigration, are hereby requested to make their reports and settlements with him.

Bishop Andrew Cunningham is requested to prosecute his duties in relation to establishing a settlement, as before instructed, and report to Bro. Snow likewise. JOHN TAYLOR.

The Wellfleet.

About one hundred and fifty Mormons arrived by this packet ship at Boston on Saturday last. About 60 of this number came to New York, seemingly in good health and spirits. We have not yet received any account of their passage from the old country.

Errata.

During our absence, whether from imperfect manuscript or from the neglect of our managers we are not prepared to say, several errors were pointed out to us by the Hon. G. A. Smith, in an obituary of Mother Lucy Smith, written by him. The article was published in last week's paper.

It is stated that Don C. Smith died August, 1844. It ought to read 1841. It is also stated that he left ten children. It ought to read two children. It is stated that Joseph Smith, Sen., died, "aged seventy-nine years." It ought to read "sixty-nine years."

We are sorry that these mistakes occurred, particularly in chronicling events associated with a family we have so much reason to esteem; but as it was altogether out of our power to prevent, we feel as though we were not to blame, and take pleasure in correcting it on this, the earliest, opportunity.

Since the above was in type the manuscript has been hunted up, and we find ten and seventy-nine are errors in the manuscript, and not through us.

Returning Missionary.

Elder Conrad Kleinman left Salt Lake City, with other German missionaries, for the States, last fall. Being at St. Louis on their arrival, we appointed him and Elder Alexander Ott to New York, where they arrived in the beginning of the year. Elder Kleinman's health failed him, and he was for some time confined almost entirely to his room. From this and other circumstances he has not been able to labor as much as he desired; we therefore released him from his labors to return to Utah. He left on Thursday, the 11th inst., by way of St. Louis. May health and prosperity attend this faithful man of God in returning to the bosom of his family.

Five Hundred Thousand Husbands Wanted in London.

The London Journal of June 29th, in answer to a correspondent, says:

"There are in Great Britain about 500,000 more women than men. Polygamy is a hateful institution, destructive to society and to private happiness."

The poor fellow must have had his hair combed the night before with two bunches of fives. Of course a plurality of some vixens would be a "hateful institution" and very likely "destructive to any society" and to the "private happiness" of some starchy lords of creation. We think, however, that the active operation of the laws of ancient Israel would be a greater blessing to the 500,000 ladies than the active operation of many other institutions not quite so scriptural.

Brooks and Sumner.

The Brooks and Sumner case has been before the House and afforded many orators an opportunity of shining before the nation on the controverted question between North and South.

The proposition to expel Mr. Brooks from the House was warmly demanded by the North and as warmly resisted by the South. Many of the Democrats maintained that the case was beyond the jurisdiction of the House. The bill was sustained by 191 yeas, 95 nays. Two-thirds not being against Mr. Brooks, he could have retained his seat in Congress; but on being permitted to speak, he informed the honorable members that he was satisfied with what he had done, and, foreseeing the action of the House, he had ten days previously given in his resignation to the Governor of South Carolina; he therefore intimated that he was no longer a member of the Thirty-third Congress, and withdrew amidst the approbation of friends and the hisses of opposition. A majority censured Mr. Keitt for his presence at the affray and being acquainted with Mr. Brook's intention and guarding the secret. On Wednesday he justified his course and in a lengthy speech vindicated South Carolina from the charges of the representatives of Massachusetts, and informed the House that, according to steps he had already taken, in placing in the hand of the Governor of his State his resignation, he ceased to be a member of that honorable body. He retired, like Mr. Brooks, amid the usual hissing, applause and shaking of hands.

South Carolina has to send two representatives to the House; the same gentlemen are likely to return after some feasting and dancing. Some honorable members will breathe freer by the retirement of the chevaliers from South Carolina, as they ever showed a readiness to appeal to the Code of Honor.

Oregon.

The last news from this Territory represent considerable hostilities between the Indians on Rogue river, and the United States troops ordered out by Gov. Stevens. About the 28th of May the Indians manifested some inclination to accede to the proposals of the Governor for vacating their lands and going to "reserves" where they would be under the care and protection of the United States Government. A council had been held, and an arrangement entered into between Colonel Buchanan and the Sons of the Forest, for their removal, but on the eve of carrying the agreement into execution one of the chiefs who had never been willing to quit his hunting grounds succeeded in animating the others with the war feeling. With their habitual deceit they tried to steal in upon Captain Smith and his little band. For some days they continued fighting, and numbers were killed on both sides. By the timely arrival of Capt. Angur with his company the Indians were completely routed. A few days afterwards many of the Indians, with their families, came into the camp and laid down their arms, and agreed to remove from their country.

Reflections on the Mind.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

It is evident from scientific observations, that everything in the different departments of God's creation, has to undergo an endless variety of progressive changes, and so in relation to the human mind, proving thus that the Heavens are full of intelligence, by which the great machinery of the Universe is kept in eternal order and harmony. The infinite wisdom of Jehovah has introduced the salutary principle of continual improvement for the purpose of diffusing life, light, and intelligence throughout the immensity of space; standing still in the scale of creation would result in mental lassitude and monotony. In taking an extensive survey of Nature's beautiful panorama, we find, that it looks magnificently powerful, and bears an emphatic testimony of the irresistible display of that sublime Agency emanating from the Meridian sun of Godliness, that everything achieved by the great I Am, has a lofty and sacred impress formed in the mould of unutterable grandeur. The sighing breeze, the howling gales, the sun rising in cloudless beauty, the myriads of luminaries, the flowery carpet of the prairies, the flinty lips of the Rocky Mountains, the watery vapors floating in the air, the electric discharges and multifarious other phenomena appeal forcibly to the reflective mind for an investigation of those principles by which such wonders are performed.

What can be more interesting than to dwell upon the movements of such sublime intellects like those of our Saviour, Joseph Smith and others who have risen in the scale of immortality, they looked up to Heaven for intelligence, and were filled with the spirit of God, they looked on earth and seemed to reflect upon it the lustre which they caught from the celestial world, they were full of joy, but it was the elevated joy of beings who knew mortal passions no more, they were full of gratitude to God for the achievement of the greatest works that the power of Heaven ever gave into the hands of man. Their souls gave out strong and healthy emotions and revelled in genial, life-betokening pulsations caused by the cultivation of high and beautifying sentiments; they shut not their eyes to the evidences of God's unceasing agency and beneficence; they found enjoyment in the salutary exercise of their physical and mental powers and in the contemplation of the rich and diversified bounties of Nature; their hearts were attuned to sympathise with the unfortunate, to help wherever they could, showing themselves intelligent cosmopolites of the highest order, whose only aim was to confine everything to the harmonious stream of universal beatitude.

What a lesson before us; to indulge solely in the gratification and exercises worthy of noble, elevated souls! Do we always realize the great, sublime blessing of having our earthly tenements tenanted by immortal spirits, of having a mind? If we did, outrages would no longer disgrace the human family, crime would veil its face. The mind is in a perpetual motion, for it is like a stream running from an unfathomable source, the depth of the divine intelligence, it seems to fly on feathery pinions, such as grace the light-winged bird of Paradise, grasping after things pertaining to happiness for time and eternity, yet how few possess such a well-regulated mind as to know the requisites for the true enjoyment of intelligent beings. Man strives to make himself happy, but true happiness is like the gentle, modest flower growing on a road side on the highway of righteousness and usefulness, how many pass by that precious flower without taking any notice of it, marching in the path-way to destruction. It is a fact, that there are in every mind germs awaiting only a fostering hand to spring up in strength and beauty. The spirits on leaving the celestial spheres and coming to this sublunary existence for the purpose of receiving tabernacles, are pure and innocent, as everything that emanates from the fountain of eternal light, hence the hypothesis of some philosophers, that certain beings are actually doomed to perdition, is an erroneous one, it is disagreeable to the mercy and wisdom of God, to reason and common sense, because the Creator's purpose in framing worlds and peopling them with beings, is to introduce happiness and intelligence throughout the immeasurable realms of the universe, that all His creations may rejoice in his infinite mercy, and feel contented in proportion to the physical and intellectual position they occupy in the scale of being. From the scientific observations of a Linnæ, Buffon, Humboldt, Lesser and other eminent naturalists, it has been ascertained that more than sixty thousand species of animated beings are living on the earth; in the water and the air, independent of the many thousands that have not yet come within the reach of the searching natural historian.

There is not a patch of ground on the surface of the earth, or a drop of water, not a single tree or herb, or leaf in the forest, but what teems with animated beings. An innumerable host of animals are living in caves, in the crevices of rocks, in morasses, ditches, in the ocean, seas, rivers, and flying through the air and all that conglomoration of an endless variety of animated beings is expressing its feelings of gratitude in its manner, and is the living monument of that august Being by whose superintending providence all these creations were made to rejoice in His unbounded goodness.

From the above illustration, it is evident that God's tender mercies are extended alike through the planetary spheres, and that every animated being is capacitated to realize at least to some extent its existence. Man occupies the most prominent place in the physical and mental creation of our globe, being placed here for the purpose of controling the affairs of this little world, hence the Creator has endowed him with mental faculties far superior to those of other beings. Man is aware of his existence, he is not like the brute beast or at least he ought not to be so, that knows no higher enjoyment, than to see its wants supplied and senses gratified; he is invested with moral and intellectual powers, so as to occupy an honorable and satisfactory position in society, to find the path of virtue, to see the folly and inconsistency of vice and crime; if his mind is cultivated by a proper, intellectual training, he well knows how to realize the greatest amount of human happiness, his actions will be consonant to the dictates of enlightened reason; he will understand that everything deviating from the course of eternal truth has a tendency to produce discomfort and misery, and to disturb the harmony of the intelligent system.

As well as the eye, that is constituted of the pupil, the iris, the retina, is the natural recipient of the bright essence of light with which God did invest the world on rising of the dark and deep waters of the formless chaos and is the medium through which the endless variety of objects of this terrestrial habitation is brought within the focus of our optical vision, so is the mind, that is composed of judgement, reasoning, memory, imagination and the moral faculties, the gathering point of the perceptive powers of the inner man, hence it is the medium through which we are enabled to pry, as it were, into the mysteries of creation, to engage in the metaphysical contemplations, to hold communication with things purely spiritual, to dive into the ocean of eternity, to comprehend things that are yet buried in the womb of time, as for instance, the determination of the course of celestial orbs, the predictions of comets and eclypses, to realize the existence of an Invisible, Almighty Agency.

As marvellous as may appear the velocity of light, it is nothing when compared to that of the mind, the motion of which is instantaneous; there is no space too immense, no distance too great, no time too long, it will travel through the immeasurable amplitudes of the Universe in a moment, from one planet to another, to study the laws of revolution, of those silent and majestic orbs; it will travel through the vista of centuries; connect the Past with the Future; it will waft itself to the gates of immortality, and receive intelligence concerning things to come. How wonderful and interesting are the movements of a well-regulated mind, how marvelous its power of locomotion, how sublime its origin, how extensive its range; considering those grand faculties of the divine spark, how ought we to strive to indulge solely in pursuits strictly consonant to that grand intelligence! Possessing those powers by which the Promethean fire is as it were elicited from the Heavens, as was done first by the celebrated Franklin through the invention of the lightning-conductor; being endowed with those faculties that lead us by a proper application to the vast fields of a perpetually progressive knowledge and felicity, we ought to embrace every opportunity of improving the mind, of rising in the scale of being, proving thus to the Almighty Maker, that we are realizing at least to some extent the great blessings of being invested with such sublime capacities.

As mentioned above, the logical analysis of the mind is judgement, reasoning, imagination, memory and the moral faculties. Judgement and reasoning are the most inportant mental functions of the soul, as they capacitate us to bring things within the compass of our understanding; the labor of judging is however not so easily performed, it takes a mind that is settled, composed and exempt from passion; a mind that has been trained to take everything calmly as the least excitement disturbs the intellectual equilibrium, and disqualifies us for mental exertions. In order to illustrate the idea of judging and reasoning, I will give the following instances. The mathematician will judge and reason, that if two straight lines cut one another, and the vertical angles be bisected, (to bisect is the scientific term for dividing something into two equal parts) the bisecting lines are in one and the same straight line. From this the corollary (corollary is the logical term for inference, or deduction) will be, that if two straight lines cut one another, and if the vertical angles be bisected, the four bisecting lines will form two straight lines at right angles to each other. If two angles A and B are equal to a third C, the angles A and B must be equal to each other. If the air is close, and clouds are gathering, man will judge, that an electric discharge has soon to take place.

When the mind leaving the scenes and bustle of our every day life behind, retires within itself, in order to engage in sweet meditation or reveries, to move in a world of ideas, then fancy or imagination has its sway, leading man through an endless variety of pleasing, mental meanderings to mount Parnassus; it is then that we more than ever realize our important position on the earth, by holding communion with God, with Nature, with every thing that is calculated to elevate and ennoble the soul, and to brighten and strengthen our intellectual powers. The beautiful gift of imagination found its personification in the god Phantasus of the classical ancients, who was represented as a blooming youth with a costly vessel in his right hand, out of which lovely flowers were continually rising and floating in the air round the head of the poetical God. The symbol of flowers rising in the air signifies the train of lofty ideas, that lead man above commonplace topics in the fields of exalting intelligence.

The memory is the lowest degree of intellectual functions, but nevertheless one of the most important, as it enables the mind to retain impressions both abstract and concrete, that is to say, the soul is capacitated to keep ideas whether emanating from the physical or mental creation. The memory may be compared to a vast receptacle ready for the reception of anything presenting itself within its range. In passing through the happy scenes of childhood; when the powers of reflection first dawned upon the mind, the memory is eager to receive and retain every impression made by the surrounding objects, it is then most retentive, because the youthful soul travelling in a terra incognita, is not yet filled up with the things of this life. But as years roll on, that mental receptacle receives more and more from the never varying scenes of this existence, till on the approach of old age it is crowded with objects, so that there is little or no room for the reception of new ones, and the memory is failing very fast; when man draws nigh the grave, the intellectual functions are no longer found with that regularity that signalized the never to be forgotten days of youth; the ties that connect the soul with the body get more loosened, till the spirit bursts the shackles of his earthly prison and soars in the fields of higher intelligence. It is an interesting psychological fact, that although the memory may be quite dull from old age, the scenes of childhood beam fresh upon the mind, hence we see old people, that are incapable of committing things to memory, give often the minutest accounts of things they experienced when quite young, the mind dwells upon them with fond remembrance, and treasures them up like costly pearls.

TO BE CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.

California.

THE papers brought by the George Law on Monday morning, reveal a frightful state of things in the Golden State. San Francisco has frequently been the theatre of excitement, but at no period of its history has anything like the present state of affairs there been equalled. For a long time, life and property have been insecure, and the Government, however it may have abhored the course of crime and desired to interpose the strong arm of the law and punish the transgressors, has done nothing in a manner at all satisfactory to the majority of the citizens. They have consequently banded together and formed a party as strong, if not stronger than the Government itself. The Vigilance Committee is composed of active and determined men: no trifling about them carrying into execution their decisions. Through their labors, Casey and Cora were executed, and about twenty-five other notorious characters have been shipped for—where they choose we suppose—but under no circumstances to return to California. Previous to leaving, a daguerrean artist was employed to catch their fleeting shadows. The Committee don't deal in the dark, like men afraid of their evil deeds, but side to side in the public papers, with Gov. Johnson's proclamation, may be found the addresses and Constitution of the Vigilance Committee. The Governor has appealed to the citizens who love law and order, to rally round him, and he would suppress the "insurrection." The Vigilance Committee have opened books in their garrison, and thousands have hurried to join the organization. No lack of the munitions of war: they are reported to have "six thousand muskets, thirty cannon, many small arms and abundant amunition and infantry accoutrements." This state of things can't last long. The Governor has his camp near the city, is gathering strength, and declares he means business. The Vigilance rooms are barricaded and prepared for a siege. Every precaution has been taken against surprise, and in every particular they seem better pleased to try the Governor's strength than abdicate their authority. There is much excitement and consequent falling off in trade, and some talk of seceding from the Union. It is reported at Washington, that the Governor has applied to President Pierce for more troops.

The True Californian gives a dreadful account of great suffering and loss of life among the five hundred passengers that left New York by the Orizaba on the 8th of April. The delays to which they were subject by the stoppage of the regular passenger conveyance through Nicaragua cause them much inconvenience and suffering. The result was the death of one hundred and twenty persons.

A fire broke out on the evening of June 8, nearly opposite the Pacific Express office, which destroyed a great portion of Maine street. Loss, $75,000.

Items from Utah.

Through the politeness of the Hon. G. A. Smith, we extract the following items from the Historian's letter to him of May 28th:

Brother Maughn, of E. T. City, has found lead on the ridge between our city and Tooele valley. They brought several samples to the President, supposed to contain 60 per cent of pure lead. We have a splendid sample of 3 1-2 lbs.: it contains 90 per cent. pure lead. This was brought 50 miles south of Los Vegas, sent by John Steele—there is a mountain of it. N. V. Jones has started to examine it and to commence smelting it. Elder McCarthy, who was shipwrecked on one of the Society Islands, has baptized the Interpreter to the King. He speaks 12 languages; also the Interpreter to the Grovernment Company.; he speaks 5 languages. He ordained them both Elders, and set them to preaching the Gospel in the midst of the people; so it was not without some good that he was shipwrecked.

* * * * *

We received by the last mail a very polite, interesting letter, from the Director of Her Majesty's Royal Gardens, Kew, directed to the Secretary of the Horticultural Society of Deseret. He had a Deseret News sent him, containing our organization of that society last season. He wishes to open a correspondence with us, and obtain any specimens, seeds, or plants of any trees, shrubs, grain, flowers or vegetables, the production of our mountain home, and he very politely proposes to forward to us any thing we will order from their Royal Gardens.

Utah Delegation.

President John Taylor returned to this city from Washington on Monday morning, greatly improved in health. Hons. G. A. Smith and Dr. Benhisel remain in Washington to attend to the affairs of Deseret. President Erastus Snow returned here on Wednesday, and left for St. Louis on Thursday.

What the Californians Think of Utah's Claims.

BY the recent arrival of Mr. J. Williams from Great Salt Lake in this place, says the Los Angles Star we have later intelligence than previously received:

It seems that the people of the Valley are very enthusiastic in regard to the admission of "Deseret," and they are confident that Congress will at once take action in the matter. We perceive that some of our up-country exchanges come out strong against the admission of "Deseret" for reasons that are very plausible no doubt to themselves—which reasons, as near as we can surmise from their own words, are merely a wish to oppose the Mormons on account of their creed; a reason as foolish as the principle is weak, and in contradistinction to the letter of our Federal Constitution. We are no Mormon, neither do we wish to advocate their cause any farther than as a matter of principle—for in matters concerning the particular religious belief of any community they are their own judges as to what will suit them best, and it ought not to be urged as an objection against them on those particular grounds. In fact, their Constitution is as liberal as that of our own State and we think is equally entitled to admission as any other State that ever applied. For ourselves we think that our cotemporaries have allowed themselves to view the matter in an illiberal light, and hardly consistent with the ideas of enlightened progress which they pretend to advocate. The only objectionable feature in the Constitution, and the only one on which any grounds can be raised in opposition, is the facility with which amendments to it can be made. That particular clause ought to have been more guarded, and a stronger bulwark for the protection thrown around than it now possesses.

The spring has opened favorably, and the people anticipate a good harvest the coming season; the scarcity of provisions which has been felt, is by recent supplies entirely obviated.

The Indians are all quiet and no further difficulties were apprehended. Great improvements had been made at Los Vegas.

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

Mr. Herbert's case before the Criminal Court at Washington has not yet been disposed of. The lawyers seem to be very busy, an extraordinary session was held even on Sunday morning, in hopes of receiving the verdict of the jury, but they seem to have difficulty to come to a conclusion. Rumor points to Mr. Mr. Herbert's acquittal.

The submarine electric telegraph cable for the New-York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company was successfully laid on the 10th inst., across the Gulf of St. Lawrence, between Cape Ray Cove, Newfoundland, and Ashby Ray, Cape Breton, a distance of eighty-five miles, in fifteen hours. Messages are now being freely and instantaneously transmitted from shore to shore.

It is confidently expected that the Newfoundland line from St. John's to the point where it intersects with the lines of the American Telegragh Company in Nova Scotia, will be completed and in successful operation by the 1st of September, and from arrangements already completed, it is also confidently expected by the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company that the cable to connect Newfoundland and Ireland will be laid down during the ensuing year. The best electricians and practical telegraphers entertain no doubt but that the extraordinary printing telegraph recently invented by Mr. Hughes has removed every serious obstacle in the way of the triumphant success of the transatlantic line.

The Spanish fleet has departed from Vera Cruz. President Commonfort has decided to sell all the lands belonging to the church and other religious corporations. The new Constitution and Church Property Decree were generally applauded. A new state is to be formed under the constitution, to be called the Valley of Mexico. Hostilities has been commenced by the States of Leon and Chihuahua against Tamaulipas.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, July 9, 1856.

On motion of Mr. Benjamin, resolutions were adopted directing the Secretary of the Senate to take the three bills passed over the President's veto to the Secretary of State, in order that they may be deposited in that department. Mr. B. remarked with reference to the question raised the other day, whether two-thirds of the members present or two-thirds of all the members of the Senate were requisite to pass a bill over the President's veto, that he had examined precedents, and found at the first session of the first Congress, composed in a great part of those who were members of the Convention which formed the Constitution that eleven amendments to the Constitution, passed both Houses of Congress, and in both were adopted by two-thirds of the members present, and not two thirds of the whole body of members.

Mr Johnson from the Committee on Printing, reported in favor of the motion to print twenty thousand extra copies of the Kansas bill as passed in the Senate, but adversely, to the motion to print the amendments proposed and the yeas and nays thereon.

Mr. Wilson was willing to send to the country as many copies of the bill as the majority desired. He regarded the bill as intended to carry on the work which the border ruffians commenced in 1855.

Mr. Douglas vindicated the Senate bill, and said the Republicans did not want peace until after the election, for it was all the game they had for political effect. Their capital for the coming Presidential election was blood, and an angel from Heaven could not frame a bill to settle Kansas difficulties, with which the Black Republicans would be satisfied previous to the Presidential election.

Applause from the galleries, which the Chair checked by calling for order.

Mr. Douglas resumed. The bill presented was fair, just, and equitable. They could not deny it. Yet they were not satisfied with it. He thought it a little remarkable that the Republicans, after contending that nine-tenths of the bona fide inhabitants of Kansas were Free State men up to the hour when Mr. Toombs presented his proposition should suddenly turn right about and cry that all the Free State men had been driven out of the Territory.

Mr. Hale, opposed the bill, drawing a vivid picture of burning buildings, mourning widows, and weeping orphans in Kansas—attributing all the devastation and suffering there to the removal of old landmarks, by the repeal of the Missouri restriction.

After considerable speechifying the resolution to print was adopted, and at 9 o'clock P. M., the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Cragin, from the Joint Committee on Printing, submitted a resolution to print 100-000 of majority and minority reports of the Select Committee appointed to investigate the assault on Mr. Sumner by Mr. Brooks at a cost of nine cents per copy.

Mr. Sneed unsuccessfully moved to lay it on the table.

On motion of Mr. Cobb, of Georgia, the number was reduced to 10,000, and the resolution, thus modified, was passed.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, called up the report of the Select Committee relative to the assault on Mr. Sumner by Mr. Brooks, which concludes with resolutions to expel Mr. Brooks, and expresses disapprobation of the conduct of Messrs. Edmundson and Keitt in the affair.

Mr. Cobb, of Georgia, moved a substitute, declaring that the House had no jurisdiction over the subject, and they deem it improper to express any opinion thereon.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, said the resolutions were predicated on a complaint to the House from the Senate, charging that the privileges of the Senate had been violated by a member of this body, in his assault on the person of a Senator of Massachusetts. The testimony on the subject is full, and the facts, as stated in the report of the majority of the committee are not controverted by the minority. That a violent assault was committed, is established beyond a doubt. He claimed that the House has full power to protect its purity and dignity as recommended by the majority of the committee.

Mr. Clingman said this matter had produced great excitement in the country. He had not been here many years and yet he had seen much stronger cases than this—of prize fights, when the House was in session. He recapitulated those personal rencontres, remarking that the House did not take action on any of them. His object was to show that the occurrence now under consideration was sought to be magnified with a view to make political capital. A certain party thinking their sands of life are running low want to get up a great excitement. There was nothing to justify it. Were he to speak of Sumner's speech as its character deserved he would have to adopt a collection of coarse and offensive expressions. No man has a right to indulge in vituperation, as Franklin says, without subjecting himself to be called to account. Men of courage are rarely abusive, but those who falsify are generally cowards. It was not a matter for the House to interfere with, and ought to be left to the Judicial tribunal.

Mr. Bingham submitted to the House that while Mr. Clingman lectured members as to the propriety of their conduct, he indulged in the most gross and outrages personal abuse which could fall from the lips of any man. This case involved more than an assault and battery. It involved a guilty violation of the representative privilege, and contempt of crime against the great principle of free speech. Mr. Brooks violated that Constitution he had sworn to support.

Mr. Brooks expressed his gratification that Mr. Bingman had disclaimed personal unkindness, and asked him whether he understood him as saying that he (Brooks) was guilty of moral turpitude, of perjury.

Mr. Bingham—That consideration never entered into my mind.

Mr. Br. Brooks replied—Altogether satisfactory.

Mr. Orr said that Mr. Bingham, after indulging in a beautiful paroxism, asserted that Mr. Sumner was stricken down in consequence of the pleading set up in behalf of the injured people of Kansas.

It was attempted to produce such an impression in the public mind, but it was not true in point of fact. Mr. Sumner was punished for a libel on South Carolina, and slander on Mr. Butler, the absent relative of Mr. Brooks. Mr. Brooks so informed Mr. Sumner. Franklin was right when he said that "freedom of speech was freedom of the cudgel."

Mr. Orr alluded to gentlemen voting today to print one hundred thousand copies of the assault on Mr. Sumner, saying it was an electioneering document.

Mr. Hickman rising amid the confusion said—"I did not vote for it as an electioneering document, for I owe no allegiance to the Republican party and am opposed to it.

Mr. Orr—If the gentleman is not, his public position has been much misunderstood throughout the country. It is part of the system to inflame the public mind, and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not vote for the proposition he cast a vote the effect of which was to injure the party to which the gentleman professes to belong.

Mr. Hickman desired to reply but objection in various quarters was made.

Mr. Fra quoted the testimony of Dr. Boyle to show that the physical condition of Mr. Sumner had been misrepresented for political effect, and concluded by arguing that the pending case was not a question of privilege. Adjourned.

SENATE. July 10.

The Senate made sundry amendments to the Indian Appropriation bill.

The bill was passed.

Mr. Mason, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a bill to amend the act of last session to re-model the diplomatic and consular system, which was made the special order for Monday next.

The principal changes proposed are, making the salary of the minister to France the same as England, $17,500; raising Austria to a full mission, with $12,000 salary; making the salary of the Sandwich Islands mission $6,000; allowing the ministers to France and England each a clerk, at a salary of $1,500 a year.

The bill to amend the act to promote the efficiency of the navy was taken up. Several amendments were made, including the striking out of the section reviving the grade of Admiral. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The consideration of the report of the Committee relative to Brooks' assault on Sumner was resumed.

Mr. Comins, of Mass., said he had heard no terms of condemnation of the assault which did injustice to the perpetrator. The slave power having failed to sustain itself in ineffectual conflict resorted to brute force, and with a bludgeon beat freedom over the head. The slave power has trampled the Constitution in the dust. There is very little more for the gentlemen from Georgia, (Mr. Cobb) to do than draw marginal black lines around it, and write the word "expunge" across its face. In his remarks, Mr. Comins alluded to the mission to South Carolina of Samuel Hoar.

Mr. Aiken, interrupted, pronouncing on his own responsibility, one of Mr. Comins' statements false.

This produced some confusion, and in conclusion he referred in commendation to the remarks of James Watson Webb, that the outrage merited death on the spot, to be administered by any one present. Could the friends of Mr. Brooks object to his expulsion from the House!

Mr. Cobb, of Ga., said the testimony showed that the assault was made in consequence of a personal insult offered to a friend and kinsman of Brooks, and the indignity cast on the State which Brooks in part represented. It was so stated by Mr. Sumner as the reason given by Mr. Brooks, at the time the assault was made. He then argued that this was not such a question as justified the jurisdiction of the House. The Constitution protected members only so far as was necessary to legislative purposes; beyond this they were on a level with their humblest constituents and responsible for libels they might utter. With regard to Edmundson and Keitt, whom a majority of the Committee proposed to censure, they were guilty of no disorderly behavior within the province of the House to punish. Neither was principal nor accessory to the assault; because they took no steps to prevent the perpetration of the act, or inform Mr. Sumner of his danger, the Committee say their neglect is reprehensive; thus, in effect, proposing to punish a man, who, receiving a confidential communication, fails to become public informer.

Mr. Foster said he had no personal acquaintance with either Mr. Sumner or Brooks, and hence could argue the subject dispassionately. He contended that it was as clear to him as the sun in Heaven that the House, under the Constitution, had no jurisdiction in the premises. He condemned the inflammatory appeals resorted to in this case.

Without action the House adjourned.

SENATE. July 11.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of private bills.

Thirteen private bills were passed, one of them giving the widow of Commodore Decatur a pension of fifty dollars per month for five years.

HOUSE OF RERESENTATIVES.

Mr. Oliver, Missouri, from the minority of the Kansas Investigating Committee, in which he says the resolution on which the Committee was raised, was simply to collect evidence and report to the House. He arraigns the report of the majority of the Committee as altogether ex parte, remarking that many of its statements are without fact and testimony to support them.

The House then resumed the consideration of the report on the assault on Mr. Sumner by Brooks of South Carolina.

Mr. Allison contended that the subject not only involved the rights of Mr. Sumner, but of the people.

Mr. Bocock said there was no case on record showing the expulsion of a member for assault and battery.

Mr. Simmons argued that the protection of members from insult for anything said in debate was essential to freedom of debate, and therefore, he sustained the position taken by the Select Committee in their report.

Mr. Wilson said that this whole matter had been invested with an importance quite unmerited, when the facts were developed, there could be found nothing but personal controversy. The House had only limited power over its members, and could not punish for disorderly behavior, unless committed in open session, and could not expel for any offense elsewhere.

Mr. Campbell, Ohio, said he should endeavor to-morrow to close the debate by moving the previous question in order that a vote might be taken on Monday. Adjourned.

SENATE. July 12.

Mr. Stephens, of Ga, introduced a bill authorizing the Postmaster General to enter into a contract with Christian Hanson, of Brooklyn to carry the United States mail in a line between New York, Glndstadivia and some port in England.

The House then resumed the consideration of the report of the Sumner assuault.

Mr. Cullen, of Del., who was entitled to the floor, yielded it to. Mr. English, of Ind., who wished to offer an amendment to the pending resolution, declaring that the House disapproves of the assault, and deems this a fit occasion to express its disapprobation of the use of language in debate personally offensive to individual members in a State of this Union.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, said he should move the previous question, so as to take a vote on Monday morning, with the understanding that if the parties implicated desired to be heard, he would withdraw the motion for their benefit, but not for re-opening general debate.

Voice—That's right.

Mr. Commin, of Mass., trusted, if Mr. Brooks desired to address the House, he would be allowed to speak on Monday morning.

It was then agreed that the speeches in this debate should be limited to fifteen minutes, owing to many who wish to speak.

At this period more than three-fourths of the members retired to dinner. Those who spoke said nothing new on the subject, save Mr. Savage who thought Mr. Brooks should have a monument erected to his honor.

Mr. Campbell of Pennsylvania, thought "If a monument is to be erected to Mr. Brooks, let it be erected on Southern soil, bearing the inscription, "Freedom of speech with freedom of cudgel.

During the debate Mr. Edmundson said he wished to be heard before the debate closed. Mr. E. obtained the floor, and then, at nine o'clock the House adjourned.

SENATE. July 14.

The Senate passed several private bills. The bill amendatory of the act to promote the efficiency of the navy, was taken up. After a desultory discussion on sundry amendments, an unsuccessful motion was made, at 4 o'clock, to adjourn.

Mr. Toombs obtained the floor, saying as the Senate was anxious to discuss the question now, he would give his views at large.

Mr. Hunter—Will the Senate yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. Toombs—No Sir. The Senate has just refused to adjourn. I intend to speak on the subject, and when Senators get tired of hearing me, they can go home. I hope, however, that the reporters will keep their seats, for my speech is intended as much for the country as for the Senate. After I have spoken three or four hours, the Senator from Virginia can make a motion to adjourn if he chooses.

Mr. Toombs proceeded to give a history of the rise and progress of the Navy, going back to the foundation of the Government.

Very few Senators were in their seats, and there was much conversation going on in audible tones.

The Chair several times called for order, but Mr. Toombs said—The talking does not disturb me in the least. I am glad to hear Senators discussing the subject. It ought to be discussed on the floor, behind the bar, and all over the country.

At a quarter past 5 P. M. Mr. Crittenden obtained the floor by leave of Mr. Toombs, and move the Senate adjourn. Agreed to by two majority. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Clingman asked that the resolution of the Senate, fixing the day of adjournment, be considered.

Mr. Dunn said he should object till the Kansas question was settled.

The Sumner case was introduced.

Mr. Edmundson then by general consent made a statement affecting himself.

Mr. Edmundson said he did not complain of the conclusions of the Committee as to the affect of his testimony, but objected to the ground on which they proposed to censure him. While he had been interrogated on all points concerning his knowledge of the affair, was it not singular that the Committee did not serve a notice on him to appear in his own behalf! The Committee sought to censure him because having been informed of the contemplated assault, he did not take the means to prevent it. Now, he thought if any one was in danger at that time it was Mr. Brooks, who had only a walking stick, while a report had gone out that Mr. Sumner was armed. He would have degraded himself had he revealed what had been privately said to him by Mr. Brooks. The condemnation of the House could produce no change in his mind on that point. If he was to be punished for not turning traitor to a friend—if he was to be degraded for this—then he was ready for his sentence.

After discussion the House proceeded to vote on the substitute of Mr. English, that the House declares its disapprobation of the assault, and deems this a fit occasion to express its disapprobation of the use of language in debate personally offensive to individual members of Congress or State of the Union.

Disagreed to by a vote of 35 against 174.

The House now voted on the substitute of the minority for the resolution of the majority, namely: "That, the House has no jurisdiction over the assault committed by Mr. Brooks on Mr. Sumner, and therefore deems it improper to express any opinion on the subject."

Rejected by yeas, 66; nays, 145.

The House next voted, first on the resolution of the majority of the committee—"That Preston S. Brooks be, and he is forthwith expelled from this House as a Representative from South Carolina."

The result was—Yeas, 121; nays, 95.

The Speaker. The House has refused to agree to the resolution, there not being a two-third vote as required by the Constitution thereon.

After considerable bantering, Mr. Brooks was permitted to speak in defence of his conduct.

He justified his attack on Mr. Sumner, exonerated his friends, Messrs. Edmundson and Keitt, from blame, as parties acquainted with Mr. B.'s intention. He justified his caning of Mr. Sumner on the ground that Mr. S. was the bigest man, and indicated if he had not overcome him in the manner he did, Mr. S. might have been disposed of fatally. He concluded by informing the House that he had ten days previous tendered his resignation to the Governor of South Carolina, and therefore was no longer a member of the House.

Confusion, hisses and applause followed, during which Mr. Brooks retired.

It was a long time before order was thoroughly restored.

The next resolution of the majority of the committee "declaring disapprobation of Messrs. Edmundson and Keitt, in regard to the assault," was taken up.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, and others called for a division of the question.

The Speaker decided that the resolution could not be divided.

Mr. Jones, of Tenn., moved that the resolution be tabled.

Motion disagreed to by yeas 96; nays 111.

Pending the resolution the House adjourned.

SENATE. July 15.

The Senate debated and passed the House bill appropriating fifty thousand dollars for the construction of a road from Fort Ridgely, Minnesota Territory, to the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains, in Nebraska Territory.

Mr. Toombs, of Ga., resumed his remarks on the bill amendatory of the act to promote the efficiency of the Navy Board.

Mr. Houston, of Texas, and others, gave their views.

The bill was amended, the more effectually to accomplish the object of restoring through a Court of Inquiry, such meritorious officers as were aggrieved by the action of the Naval Board—those reported on favorably to be reappointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

The bill then passed, by a vote of 26 against 11. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution expressing its disapprobation of the conduct of Messrs. Edmundson and Keitt, in relation to the assault on Mr. Sumner.

An ineffectual effort was made to have a vote taken on the case of each separately, and in consequence of this failure the resolution was rejected by a vote of 76 against 125.

On motion of Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, the vote was reconsidered, when he offered a substitute for the resolution, so as to enable the House to pass on Mr. Edmunson and Mr. Keitt separately. He said if Mr. Keitt wished to be heard, he should not insist on the previous question.

Several members spoke, under the operation of the previous question, the resolution censuring Mr. Keitt was adopted by yeas, 106; nays, 96. That censuring Mr. Edmundson was rejected by yeas, 60; nays, 136.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, moved an amendment to the preamble, to make it further appear that Mr. Keitt attempted to prevent an officer of the Senate and others from interfering to prevent a continuance of the blows on Mr. Sumner.

Mr. Dunn excepted to this amendment. The original preamble presented Mr. Keitt as a witness—nothing more—and on this ground the resolution was predicated.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, to remove Mr. Dunn's objection, moved the amendment of the preamble, by simply striking out Mr. Edmundson's name, letting Mr. Keitts' stand. The preamble was then adopted by 104 against 83.

Mr. Keitts said he should ask the House, to-morrow to hear him on some matters. He should endeavor not to violate parliamentary principles, and felt quite sure he would not do so. Adjourned.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will b condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devrait-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours? Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner! Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses! Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu!

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système. Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immergé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le dôn du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence. ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès; ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

Droop Not Upon Your Way.

Ho! ye who start a noble scheme
For general good designed—
Ye workers in a cause that tends
To benefit your kind—
Mark out the path ye fain would tread,
The game ye mean to play,
And if it be an honest one,
Keep steadfast on your way.

Although ye may not gain at once
The points ye most desire,
Be patient—time can wonders work—
Plod on, and do not tire,
Obstructions, too, may crowd your path
In threatening, stern array,
Yet flinch not! fear not!—they may prove
Mere shadows in your way.

Then, while there's work for you to do,
Stand not despairing by—
Let forward be the move ye make,
Let "Onward!" be your cry;
And when success has crowned your plans,
'Twill all your pains repay
To see the good your labor's done:
Then DROOP NOT on your way!

The Screw and the Paddle Wheel.

A Revolution in Screw Steam Navigation.

THE almost simultaneous, arrival of the paddle wheel steamship Africa and the screw ship Lebanon, at this port, on Saturday, is an important fact in the history of ocean steam navigation.

The Africa sailed from Liverpool on the 28th of June. The Lebanon left Havre on the evening of the same day. The Africa arrived here about twelve hours before the Lebanon; the difference in distance is about 90 miles in favor of Liverpool. A careful comparison of time, therefore, shows that the passages were of equal duration. Each ship is a model of its class. The Africa is one of the most powerful of the Cunard side wheel steamships—the Lebanon is one of the best screw propellers. It is, then, a fair test of the merits of the paddle wheel and the screw applied to the navigation of the great Atlantic ferry.

The result is most cheering to those who have long advocated the superiority of the screw. The great war steamer Himalaya left Halifax some time since, and made the passage to Portsmouth in eight days and three hours—the shortest trip ever made from the first named port to any place in England. The English journals and our files contain other convincing testimony to show that the screw is quite as efficient as the paddle wheel, so far as speed is concerned when the same power is applied.

The line of ships from Liverpool to Philadelphia are worked with the screw, and one of them recently brought us four days later news. The ships now running from Liverpool to Quebec are upon the same principle, and they have always brought us news. The Scotch line from Glasgow, worked with the screw, has made several quick passages—one in less than twelve days. Nor is this a recent matter. The Great Britain, the first large screw ship ever built, in 1844 made a quick trip—10 days and 23 hours. All these facts go to prove the position now taken by some of the best engineers, that the screw is not only safer than the paddle, but that ships worked on the screw principle may be made equally swift.

But the screw propellers are to have a still further and more searching test. The mammoth steamship Great Eastern, of which towering achievement in naval architecture we have given a detailed description, is to be worked with paddle wheels and the screw. Her projectors hope to get 20 miles an hour from her by the joint power.

Mr. Stevens' mammoth steam battery, now being built at Hoboken, is to have two screws. These are worked independently, so that the vessel may be turned upon her own axis. Several other leviathans are now being built, and to most of them the screw principle will be applied.

The arguments in favor of the screw over the paddle wheel are numerous, and have been frequently stated. The speed of ships worked by the paddle vary much in proportion to the increased or decreased immersion of the floats of their wheels, while with screw ships the variation in their draught of water has little or no effect. Paddle wheel ships are constantmore liable to detention and accident, while the passages of propellers are more equable and will be quite as brief. For war vessels the screw is undeniably the safest and best; and the British Government having proved this by unanimous experiments, have dropped the paddle wheel system altogether. Their splendid fleet at Spithead was composed almost altogether of screw ships. Our screw ship, the Merrimac, has not yet had a fair chance, on account of the stupidity of some of the mechanics engaged in her construction, but we have hopes of something better from the Niagara, which is in better hands.

Our purpose at present is to call attention to the recent performances of the screw ships as inaugurating a revolution in steam navigation. The advantages of this method of propulsion are apparent, and the opponents of the screw have been demolished one by one, until they had no leg to stand upon except the statement that paddle ships were faster than propellers. This has now been disproved, and every day adds new testimony in favor of the screw. We trust that our builders, who have so far produced the finest and fastest, though not the safest ships in the world, will now be satisfied with their triumph so far as speed is concerned, and make an endeavor to imitate our trans-Atlantic rivals in providing for the safety and stability of their ships. When the screw system shall have a fair trial in an American ship we have no doubt that it will be found equal to the paddle in point of speed, and much superior so far as safety is concerned. The facts eliminated beyond cavil. While such a revolution is going on, American mechanics should be found where they always are in every good work—leading the van.

Tartar or Shanghai Sheep.

To the Editor of the Herald:

IN last Saturday's Herald your Paris correspondent refers to a notice of Tartar or Shanghai sheep, given in some of the French agricultural journals, derived from a communication made by me to the Philadelphia Agricultural Society.

I am induced to send you the substance of my original communication, in consequence of certain errors existing in the French translation, from which your correspondent derived his information, some of which are calculated to invalidate my statements. My ewe, for example, after having given birth to three lambs in February, is made to bring two more in August, instead of November.

Should this notice ever reach the eye of an editor who has given publicity to the error, I hope the proper correction will be made editorially.

The substance of my original communication was as follows:

My sheep, the parents of which came from Shanghai, in China, are of good size, with prominent noses, ears drooping forward, and agreeably expressive faces, covered with short, white, glossy hair. The fleece coarse, unshrinkable, and best adapted for felting and manufacture of carpets and other fabrics. The value of the breed consists mainly in the remarkable facility it offers to supply animal feed of the most excellent quality almost at pleasure, the ewes having lambs twice a year, and from two to four at a time. A ewe belonging to me brought three lambs in February, 1855, all of which came to maturity. Early in November she had two more, whilst her two ewe lambs brought a lamb at the same time, making her a grandmother in nine months, and her progeny within that time no less than seven.

With respect to the qualities of the meat, I may state that when in China, several years ago, I was not a little surprised to see the eagerness manifested for mutton. Although capons, game and other luxuries were common, I never knew a leg of Tartar mutton introduced where anything was left but the bones. I at first thought much of the relish came from the high price (about fifty cents per pound,) but was afterwards convinced that it was mainly owing to the superior qualities of the meat, which is entirely free from any woolly or other disagreeable taste and extremly delicate.

These sheep are admirably adapted to supply the wants of the country from whence they come, where the land is forced to yield three successive crops each year, and the necessity for animal food, felt through so many centuries, has led the shrewd Chinese to fix upon a breed of sheep calculated to produce the maximum of meat in a given time. They stand the severest winters in the United States equally well with ordinary sheep, and are exceedingly docile. G. EMERSON.

Love! Desertion! Despair!

ABOUT six months ago, a well dressed gentlemanly looking individual arrived in this city upon the Cleaveland train, and registered his name at one of our principal hotels, as R. W. Flemington. After remaining a couple of days, he settled his bill, and remarking that business would probably command his attendance in a neighboring town for a short period, he left without taking his baggage, which consisted of a trunk and portmanteau.

The next day, however, he drove up to the private entrance of the hotel, accompanied by a lady who was represented as his wife, and who was as such registered. The female, who was in the first tender bloom of womanhood, was but seldom seen during their stay at the hotel, save by those whose avocations enabled them to enjoy this privilege, who pronounced her to be of surpassing beauty.

Time passed, and a month had been added to the vortex of the past, when one of those sinister billet doux, in the shape of—not a bill of fare—but a bill for fare, was presented to Mr. Flemington. On his promise to settle the matter in a day or two, another week passed, and his quid pro quo for boarding, lodging, and etceteras was not forthcoming. The landlord became importunate, and the guest finally told him that he would go to Milwaukie, where he had funds, and return with the means to liquidate the debt. He took his portmanteau, and after bidding his beautiful companion an affectionate, though apparently short adieu, he departed. The sequel is soon told he never returned, and the victim of his treachery soon found that she was deserted by him for whom she had sacrificed the most precious attributes of woman—her honor and fame; concealment was no longer possible, and the humiliating admission was confessed, that after a short acquaintance in Cleaveland with her seducer, she had forsaken the protecting roof of a confiding father, for one who, under promise of marriage, had first destroyed her innocence, and then left her to the scorn of an unpitying world. No persuasion, however, could induce her to return to, or even avow, the name of her family. She might have suffered from want of food, had not some compassionate individuals who, disovering that she was well instructed in the art of dressmaking, procured her employment.

Day after day sped past without casting a light on the whereabouts of her seducer, until, at length the fruit of the fatal error became apparent. She was about to become a mother, which, blessed and holy event of woman's existence, was to her fraught with terror and dismay. No anxious husband would hang with tender solicitude o'er her couch, or hail with paternal kiss the advent of the new-born pledge of love. She was alone—alone—and madness took possession of her soul.

On Sunday night, the inmates of a house on State street, where Fanny Bennett—for such was the name she had assumed—boarded, were alarmed by the smell of fire, and on hastening to the third floor, they found that it proceeded from her room. Bursting open the door, a dense smoke was observed to fill the interior, arising from a quantity of wearing apparrel which was slowly mouldering, having been iguited from a charcoal furnace, the embers of which were glowing and emitting their deadly vapor. Stretched upon the bed lay the forsaken girl insensible, and in a short time longer her broken heart would have ceased to throb with shame and anguish; but such a death was not her destiny, for the noble method through which she essayed to destroy her life of misery was, by the timely intervention of kind-hearted people with whom she boarded, frustrated. Medical aid was immediately procured, and ere long she was pronounced out of danger; since which she has exhibited a less despairing turn of mind. Poor girl! she has most bitterly attoned for her one solitary transgression. What shall we say to him—triple murderer! the slayer of innocence! the murderer of his confiding victim and his own offspring! Where is retributive justice, that such a villain remains unpunished!

[Chicago Bulletin.

The above is too much the history of many an innocent girl. That cold and black hearted murderer richly deserves to be bloted out of existence, and until that righteous law of God is in active operation, unsuspecting innocence will be a prey.—[ED. MORMON.

Later from Utah.

WE have files of the Deseret News to May 28. The Mormons seem to be getting along satisfactorily to themselves, and are full of praying, preaching, feasting, dancing and polygamy as ever. Two substantial ferry boats have been built for the ferry on Bear River, north of Salt Lake City, designed, superintended and launched with the blessings of President Young.

The crops, May 7, were very promising in the Salt Lake Valley. On the 5th a snow storm whitened the mountains nearly to their base. At Los Vegas, April 8, corn was 6 inches high. Sixty acres had been planted, and 1,300 grape cuttings had been set out. May 14, abundant supply of asparagus, pie plant, salad and radishes at Salt Lake City. May 28, ripe strawberries, green peas and currants. Prospects still flourishing for an abundant harvest. Health of the people good. The News says—"At home all is peace, happiness and prosperity." May 21, it urges the Elders throughout the States to forward cuttings and seeds of valuable kinds of fruit, and adds:

"A stroll through Gov. Young's grounds, adjacent to his mansion, is a rich treat to every lover of fine fruit, garden adornment and highly useful improvement. Many of the peach, plum, and apple trees are fruiting remarkably full; California grape vines give indication of a luxurious product, and the young black walnut trees, strawberry vines, and each variety of tree, shrub and plant are apparently striving to outvie each other in growth and promise.

Presidents Kimball and Grant are also bestowing much careful attention and judicious labor upon their grounds, and already have a valuable assortment of plants and trees."

The mail arrangements to Utah are of the worst kind. The mail from the States which arrived May 10, brought papers and letters from November 1 to April 1. Thirty mail sacks arrived, and fifteen had been left on the road.

The News publishes encouraging letters from missionaries in various parts of the world, notices the establishment of several new journals to advocate the faith, viz; the Mormon in New York; Luminary, in St. Louis; Western Standard, in California; the Millennial Star, in the British Isles, and thus exults:

"Faithful elders in nearly all parts of the earth, publications, beside those above-named, in the German, Scandinavian, Welsh and other languages, and increased faith and good works in the top of the mountains, all indicate the power and rapidity with which the latter-day work is rolling forth, notwithstanding the powerful combination arrayed against it. * * * * * * *

"Verily the Lord is bringing to pass his 'strange act' and the latter-day work is a bombshell in the devil's kingdom and arrangements, confusing and blowing to pieces the best laid plans and schemes of Lucifer and his servants. And this will continue to be the case, independent of Salt Lake City earthquakes, until 'righteousness cover the great deep.'"

The progress of Utah has been most wonderful. In 1847, a feeble band of Mormons, driven from Illinois by fire and sword, penetrated the great Western wilds and founded Salt Lake City. In 1850 the Mormons of the wilderness had so increased that Congress defined the boundaries of Utah, and gave her a Territorial Government; and in 1856, the people have formed a State Constitution and ask admission into the Union! Is it a marvel that the Mormons have full faith in the "latter-day work!"—[Cleaveland Herald, July 7.

Frightful Railroad Collision near Phiadelphia.

A Children's Excursion Train Wrecked.

From the Philadelphia Bulletin, July 17.

About nine o'clock this morning, the appalling intelligence reached the city, that a collision had occurred upon the North Pennsylvania Railroad, between the regular morning train from Gwynedd, and an excursion train that left the city at five o'clock this morning, with a large party of school children, with their teachers, &c.

The particulars, so far as we have been able to glean them from reliable sources, are as follows:

At five o'clock this morning, a special train of ten cars left the Master street depot with the schools of St. Michael's Roman Catholic church, in Kensington. The excursion party consisted of between five and six hundred persons, the great majority of whom were children. They intended proceeding to Fort Washington, 14 1-2 miles from the city, where they were to enjoy a pin-nic. Owing to the number of cars, and the weight of the train, there was some delay, and the conductor, Mr. Alfred F. Hoppel, finding himself behind time, pushed forward with great rapidity when towards the end of his trip. The regular passenger train for the city left Gwynedd at six o'clock, and reached Camp Hill at six o'clock and 18 minutes. Finding the excursion train had not yet arrived, Mr. Wm. Vanstavoran, the conductor, determined not to wait for it, and his train was moving along when the expected train came thundering on around the curve at the rate of 35 miles an hour. A collision of course ensued with the most appalling consequences.

The down train escaped without serious damage, but the scene presented by the excursion train was fearful. The three forward cars of the train were crushed completely to pieces, and the wreck, mingling with that of the locomotive, took fire, and the flames communicated to the other cars of the train. The two next cars, after the three that were wrecked outright, took fire, and were entirely consumed.

The inmates of the three forward cars were completely mixed up with the wreck, and a large number of them were killed outright. There were probably fifty persons in each of the three cars, and the lowest estimate we heard fixes the number of killed at fifty, while it was feared the dread aggregate would reach one hundred.

When our informant left the spot every effort was being made to rescue the wounded and the bodies of the dead from the wreck. Everything was in the wildest confusion, and it was of course impossible, under the circumstances, to arrive with any certainty at the number of the victims, or to pretend to obtain any particulars as to their names.

Henry Harris, the engineer of the excursion train, was cut to pieces and killed instantly; and John Bagans, the fireman, is among the missing, and it is believed he is under the wreck.

As soon as the dreadful intelligence reached the city a car was despatched with all possible speed from the Master street depot, with physicians and other assistance.

One of our reporters, on hearing the news, immediately repaired to the office of the company, at Front and Willow streets, but the 10 o'clock train had just left the station.

He then proceeded along the line of the road to the outer depot of the company, where he found the vice president and engineer of the road at the depot, which was surrounded by thousands of excited men and women.

He was informed that an attempt had been made to send hand-cars along the road to the scene of the accident, but they had been immediately surrounded by the mob, and the police and the employees of the company had the utmost difficulty in keeping them from being run off with.

The excitement at the Willow street station was also intense. Excited crowds were eagerly inquiring for the latest intelligence from the scene, while those who had children on the ill-fated train were in the most dreadful condition of suspense.

The news of the accident having been widely circulated, a large number of persons who imagined their friends might be among the injured, also proceeded to the outer station.

The excitement among the pedestrians, the majority of whom were females, appeared to increase as they reached the Cohocksink station.

In the list of dead and wounded given by another reporter, there is the following horrible account of some of the excursionists:

Eleven bodies of men women and two children were burned to death in one car. The names are unknown. They were caught under the side of one of the cars and roasted alive. When we saw the remains they presented a horrible spectacle.

The mutilated remains of four men and women and a child were dug from beneath the engine and tender.

The remains of a small child were found under the ruins of the engine, in the ash pan.

The remains of six other bodies were raked out of the ashes and placed on the grass opposite to where the accident happened,

The killed, as given in the above list, amount to no less than 39 persons, and the wounded to sixty-nine. These numbers will probably be increased, as some of the wounded will probably die, and there are some whose injuries are not known.

Public opinion set in against the conductor Vanstavoran, and fearing the consequences he went home and committed suicide by swallowing arsenic.

Three Persons Poisoned by a Surgical Operation.

IT is our duty to record one of the most sad, and at the same time singular occurrences that ever come within the sphere of our observation, which has already resulted in the death of two of the parties concerned, and so badly injured one other that his life is despaired of. The circumstances are these: Dr. John Potter, residing at Prattsburg, Steuben co., a brother of Hazard Potter of this village, well known as one of the most skillful surgeons in this State, was called upon to dress a man's arm which had been mutilated in the cog-wheels of some machinery. He made every effort to save the arm from amputation, and in this, at the sacrifice of his own life, he has probably succeeded. The arm having been maturated, he called on his brother, Hazard Potter, of this village, to assist in opening it. During the operation he by some accident cut himself slightly, and allowed some of the virus from the arm of his patient to mingle with the blood. This in a few days had so poisoned his entire system that no earthly power could save him. He died on Friday last. While attending his funeral, his brother Hazard, who had a slight scratch on his hand at the time of performing the operation, and who had also become poisoned by the virus, felt an itching about his fingers, which proved to be the workings of the poison, and although attended by all the physicians in Geneva his life is despaired of. Another man who assisted in dressing the arm was poisoned, but we have not been informed of his situation at the time of writing.

P. S.—Since writing the above, we have been informed that the man who helped dress the arm is dead.—[Geneva Gazette.

A Hard Nut to Crack for Toothless Folks

ORSON HYDE, this Apostle and Elder of the Mormon faith, once in conversation with a clergyman of the orthodox creed, received some stringent and stirring reproofs for his faith in, and advocacy of, the doctrine of plurality of wives. Upon which, the Mormon Elder put to the clergyman the following interrogative:

"Sir do you know where you are going when you die?"

"Not exactly," was the reply, but trusted he should go to some good place.

"Well," said Mr. Hyde, "I will tell you the very place to which you expect to go—direct to Abraham's bosom, where you will find Sarah and Hagar leaning on one arm, and Keturah and others on the other arm. You may dodge Bible truth in this world, and hide yourself in the brambles of public sentiment and popular religion; but sir, when you get into Abraham's bosom, you can no longer dodge the question, unless you, with the rich man," leap the gulf where not a drop of water can be had. So, my dear sir, you had better soften down your feelings a little in regard to plurality; and prepare for your future state and destiny, in order that your home in the old Patriarch's bosom may be tolerable, and that you may be the better able to bear it with becoming fortitude and Christian resignation."—[Eastern Paper.

Machinery in the Human Frame.

VERY few, even mechanics, are aware how much machinery there is in their own bodies. Not only are there hinges and joints in the bones, but there are valves in the veins, a forcing pump in the heart, and other curiosities. One of the muscles of the eye forms a real pully. The bones which support the body are made precisely in that form which has been calculated by mathematicians to be the strongest for pillars and supporting columns—that of hollow cylinders.

A Tough Witness.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—"Mr. Parks, state if you please, whether you have ever known the defendant to follow any profession."

"He's been a professor ever since I've known him."

"Professor of what?"

"Of religion."

"You don't understand me, Mr. Parks. What does he do?"

"Generally what he pleases."

"Tell the jury, Mr. Parks, what the defendant follows."

"Gentlemen of the Jury, the defendant follows the crowd when they go in to drink."

"Mr. Parks, this kind of prevarication will not do here. Now state how this defendant supports himself."

"I saw him last night support himself against a lamp post."

"May it please your honor, this witness has shown a disposition to trifle with the court."

Judge—"Mr. Parks, state if you can anything about it, what the defendant's occupation is."

"Occupation, did you say?"

Counsel—"Yes, what is his occupation?"

"If I ain't mistaken, he occupies a garret some place in town."

"That's all Mr. Parks."

Cross-examined—"Mr. Parks, I understood you to say that the defendant is a professor of religion. Does his practise correspond with his profession?"

"I never heard of any correspondence or letters passing between them."

"You said something about the propensity for drinking. Does he drink hard?"

"No, I think he drinks as easy as any man I ever saw."

"One more question, Mr. Parks. You have known the defendant a long time; what are his habits—loose or otherwise?"

"The one he's got now, I think, is rather tight under the arms, and too short waisted for the fashion."

"You can take your seat, Mr. Parks."

Blunders of Orators.

ORATORS and authors sometimes make a person smile by their misapplication of metaphors and the abuse of figures of speech. Nothing is more striking in illustration than the use of a clearly defined and appropos figure and nothing is more ridiculous than the incongruity of metaphors. To illustrate:

A clergyman not long since reproved his congregation from the pulpit—asserting them that "the hand of Providence would not wink at their peculiar transgressions."

A descendant of one of the Revolutionary sires, in the National Legislature, astonished his brother legislators by saying: "My father and my grandfather both saw the darkness of midnight glittering in the blaze of their dwellings!"

John Randolph once spoke of himself as—"standing on the vacant seat which we now occupy."

A celebrated barrister once exclaimed: "I smell a rat! I see it brewing in the storm; and with your permission, gentlemen of the Jury I will nip it in the bud!"

These citations will serve to enforce the moral—never use a figure of speech that is not necessary for illustration and perfectly congruous and in keeping with the subject.

A Smart Little Boy.

WE heard the following colloquy the other day:

Mother—"Where have you been, Charley?"

Boy—"In the garden, ma."

Mother—"No, you have been swimming, you know how I cautioned you about going to the creek. I will have to correct you. Look at your hair how wet it is!"

Boy—"Oh, no Ma, this is not water, it is sweat!"

Mother—"Ah, Charley, I have caught you fibbing, your shirt is wrong side out!"

Boy, triumphantly—"Oh, I did that just now, Ma, climbing the fence!"

RECENTLY in Detroit, when Romeo and Juliet was in the hills, a scapegrace known, as Romeo, was in the pit. When Juliet exclaimed, "Romeo where art thou!" the youngster arose and said, "Here I am in the pit; I only had a quarter, and couldn't get into the boxes!" Juliet fainted.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1856.

Utah and Polygamy.

Some time since Mr. Morrill, of Vermont, introduced a Bill into the House for the prohibition and suppression of Polygamy in the Territories. The pith of the bill is in the following:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That if any person or persons, being married and an inhabitant of any Territory of the United States or other place over which the United States possess exclusive jurisdiction, shall intermarry with any persons, or cohabit with any person or persons, or live with any person or persons as partners acknowledging conjugal relations, the former husband or wife being alive, he, she or they so offending shall, on conviction thereof, pay a fine not exceeding $500, and be imprisoned not less than two years nor more than five years.

Mr. M. was obliged in presenting it to acknowledge the absence of "power to legislate on the subject." The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. There it remains.

We are frequently much amused at the course taken by many of our pseudo statesmen about Utah and her institutions; at the pure benevolence and ingenuous philanthropy which they so frequently develop. Now who does not know that all these petty moves are intended as so much buncombe? that they really have no other significance or meaning? that many of the projectors and sustainers of such moves not only know themselves but others know, that in regard to chastity and virtue, about which they prate so much, they themselves are wofully deficient? Who is there that does not know that our villages, our cities, our towns, are inundated and literally swarming with prostitutes, in all their various grades; from the elite madame in her gorgeous saloon, surrounded by all the luxury of refined, christian debauch, down to the nymphs du pave; the wandering, houseless trollop, who, with wanton, brazen, bloated face will offer herself to any passer-by! Who does not know that hosts of cyprians are imported to Washington and vicinity every session of Congress to meet the demands of our most virtuous, pure and christian Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled? that like any other commodity they are governed by supply and demand; and that the metropolis, during the sessions of Congress, is the best market? Who does not know that the fulminators and sustainers of those attacks upon the Mormons are in many instances verily guilty? And how often have we been cited to circumstances of men who, fresh from their bed of shame and yet reeking with debauch or impregnated with corruption, enter the Legislative Halls or Committee Rooms, and unblushingly talk about Mormon impurities? "Mormon impurities," "Mormon debauchery," and "Mormon degradation." Why if we could imagine ourselves as degraded and debased, as far fallen and sunk in infamy and debauch as many of our accusers and defamers are, we would cry for the earth to open and hide us in everlasting oblivion.

With the above views, which we ever are our honest sentiments, what opinion can we form of our defamers and persecutors? That although among them there are some honorable exceptions, men who, though ignorant of our principles, are sincere; and relying upon misstatements and preconceived opinions, are nevertheless honest in their course. Yet there are a great many who are absolutely beneath our contempt, who are mere political roysterers and tricksters, and who, although they make loud professions, in reality care no more about Utah's morals or any other morals, than Lucifer does, and who, concerning virtue of any kind, are reprobates, literally wallowing in corruption and the veriest slaves to their own disgusting passions.

Any move, no matter how ludicrous, serves such people, and with a profession of overweening purity, they, like the thief when challenged, are the first to cry "stop thief;" hoping it may serve as an antidote to their constituents or perhaps to their Donna Sposas to get up bills and pass them about Mormon polygamy. It is a mantle to cover a multitude of sins. To express public indignation about Mormon corruption may serve to gull their injured partners and cover over some of their own petits amours. Further than this, we can really see no object in the thing; for the bill, besides being unconstitutional in more points than one, is altogether inexpedient, inoperative and impracticable, and cannot possibly affect any good if it should ever become a law, neither can it do much harm except for petty annoyance in the hands of pettifoggers, and for which and the aforenamed object it was probably originated. No statesman could originate such an incongruity; but as it hails from "Deaun East," and has been inoculated with the celebrated "Blue Laws" of puritanic memory, we must make some allowance for the gentleman. Coming from the great emporium of wooden nutmegs, wooden cucumbe seeds and clocks, where they have been accustomed to hang wizards and witches and to whip beer barrels for working on Sundays, we shall let it rest quietly for the present, as one of Barnum's heroes did a wooden Tonquin bean. The story runs that "a gentleman who boasted very much of the odoriferous properties of a Tonquin bean which he carried in his snuff-box, a wag contrived to displace it and substitute a painted one. A number of gentlemen in the secret desired snuff from that particular box and contiguous to that particular bean, in order that they might, as they stated, possess themselves of its rich aromatic perfume." So we will treat this counterpart, this precious morceau, until its denouement, when, as that Yankee tonquin was divided, we will take the jacknife, split it open, and exhibit its inoderous properties, its painted exterior and wooden substance.

However, as we consider it only a Yankee trick, a little ruse de guerre that small-potatoe politicians are apt to indulge in, a kind of fauxpas to throw dust in the eyes of the people, and which the projectors never intended should be operative, we will let it pass for the present, and may refer to it again with other political thimble-rigging, so prevalent in these days, merely giving a friendly hint to parties concerned to beware of their own position. The world was made for Cæsar as well as Brutus, and if provoked, "those who have a dream may tell a dream."

Gov. Young and Utah.

We have lately heard a whispering, a sort of an undercurrent, or feeler, that Governor Young is to be removed and some other person substituted in his place.

Now, what is the cause for all this? What has the Governor of Utah been doing lately? Have the Utonians been in a state of insurrection, as the Californians are at present? Have they had "Border ruffianism," opposed by "Aid Societies, and Sharpe's Rifles," as in Kansas? Have they had investigating committees, government troops and civil war? Have they been shooting and whipping one another, as in Washington? Have they troubled the President for troops, arms or ammunition? To all these we answer, No. They have neither had buccaneering, fillibustering, civil war, a duplicate of governors and governments, nor anarchy or open revolt, as we could refer to in other cases.

Why, then, must Governor Young be removed? Is the administration and others so much disappointed at the tranquil, orderly and peaceable state of things in Utah, that certain measures must be introduced in order to make difficulty if possible? We should like to hear some excuse, if there is any, for this move; a lame one is better than none. Can't we patch up some story? He has neither defrauded government, dismissed corrupt judges, nor even sent General Taylor to hell for a number of years. We have been entirely destitute of all frauds for some time, and have not even been treated to a few bon mots in the shape of an exciting speech; they have been without mail for six months, and have not even grumbled at that; they have taken away our Postmaster, an honorable man and universally esteemed, and substituted a stranger in his place, and yet they have found no fault. Again we ask, what has Gov. Young done?

Who led the people to Utah? Gov. Young. Who has instituted and maintained a state of peace, order, tranquility and good government, such as is unequalled in the United States? Gov. Young. Who, according to the doctrines of our present administration, has a right to this office? Gov. Young. Who is the universal choice of the thousands that inhabit that territory? Gov. Young. Why then this talk of removal? There is not even a shadow of an excuse. We shall be told that there is an outside pressure. Outside nonsense. Are justice, truth, integrity and honor to be sacrificed and no other subterfuge than this? Where is our boasted independence? Where truth? Where honor and integrity? Is every thing sacred, among men and nations, to be swept away by that maelstrom—expediency, and the most sacred rights of thousands of American citizens to be trampled underfoot at the caprice of political jugglers and demagogues? Are the powers of our administration, that ought to be a strong political bulwark and guardian against the vicissitudes of political ebullition, to be converted into a mere juggling, clap-trap, potitical engine, to be used by every craven demagogue? We unhesitatingly declare that a man who would dismiss a Governor who has conducted himself as Governor Young has, without cause, is neither a democrat, an honest man, or, a friend to his country. And we further say, that no man but a poor soul-less, miserable sneak would accept that office under those circumstances, and as such he would be viewed by the citizens of Utah and by every high-minded, honorable man. Colonel Steptoe was too much of a gentleman to accept under those circumstances, and declared that if he could not govern with the consent and wishes of the people, he would not govern at all, nor accept office. Honor has not departed from all, and when we see it we admire it as a gem of rare value. Some time ago, when there were certain charges fulminated against Gov. Young, Col. Steptoe, then in Utah, his officers, together with the United States Judges, Secretary of State, Marshal, United States Attorney, and all the Gentile merchants in the Territory, united in the strongest recommendation of Gov. Young in a petition to President Pierce for his re-appointment, as being not only the choice of the people, but the most suitable person in the Territory for Governor and Agent of Indian Affairs. This President Pierce is well apprised of. Has he had any just cause to change since then? Verily, no. We repeat, then, that his removal would be injustice to him, an open and direct insult to the people, and dishonest in the person who caused it. And we further say, that any man who accepts office under those circumstances is a miserable poltroon, and not fit to hold the position, and deserves to, as he will most assuredly, be despised by the people.

We have merely heard the above rumor which has elicited these remarks; we hope, for the sake of common honesty, that the rumor is unfounded. Neither the Mormons nor Gov. Young have given President Pierce any trouble during his administration, and President Pierce has not as yet done any thing especially to cause unpleasant feelings among the people of Utah. We hope that during the remaining short time of his administration he may not do an act to cause him to be looked upon as an enemy.

The Herald on Utah.

In our last week's issue we spoke painly our thoughts in the article Degeneracy of the Press, about some bought up weathercock editors. Of course no one supposed we wrote only for the Weekly Democratic Press of Chicago, or the Irish American of New York. These papers were by chance lying on our table at the time we wrote and they got particular notice, but our observations were addressed to a wider field of scribblers. The New York Herald takes offence and vents his spleen upon us on Sunday's paper. Under the heading "Out of the Pale of Civilization," he fires away at California, Utah, Kansas and Washington, and talks about these places in his usual style of recklessness.

California, Kansas and Washington we leave to others, we come to his charges on Utah:

"There is the Territory of Utah, also without the pale, peopled by an ignorant and bigoted emigration from all parts of the world, held together by the practice of polygamy in its worst forms. Humanity shudders at the degradation, disgrace and suffering which those unhappy females are compelled to submit to who have become the dupes of Mormonism. The hard labor, the cruel treatment, the personal neglect they endure, is absolutely shocking. The manner in which the local government is conducted, the vulgarity of the public documents, and the occasional proclamations of the Governor of this benighted Territory, afford the most complete evidence of bigotry, misrule and tyranny. Civilization cannot boast of much in Utah."

The inhabitants of Utah may be ignorant, and we are free to confess, that they are ignorant of many things in which the Herald is well posted, we confess it freely, and trust that God in His infinite mercy will so order events that they may never see such a state of things in their Territory or State that will induct them into the secrets of those chambers in which the Herald is no stranger. Yes, they are ignorant of cunning devices of wicked men, but this much can be said of them they know their own business and never inquired of the Herald assistance either to come to that understanding or carry it into daily execution. We would fain learn what he knows more than the Mormons? Of what can he boast? We can't imagine in what consists his great intelligence—should he claim dexterity at shuffling and wire pulling, there he is a giant and the inhabitants of Utah pigmies—of this they are truly ignorant. But ignorance of these mysteries seems to us no crime, especially when there is no pretention.

The inhabitants of Utah simply profess to be what everybody knows them to be—an industrious, hard-working people, who esteem labor a virtue, and idleness a crime. Bigoted, says the Herald. If he means that they repudiate the speculative religious theories of men, and hold on tenaciously to their own faith, then are they guilty; but it is certainly nothing aside from the truth, when we assert that no class of men professing religion is less bigoted in the true sense of the word, than the Mormons. Bigots can tolerate nothing aside from their particular faith, and are strong in attributing evil motives to those who differ from them. Are these characteristics of the Mormons either in Utah or elsewhere? Verily, no. Where we have propagated Mormonism in this and other nations, we have ever been ready to open our places of worship to men opposed to us—when they conducted themselves properly. We were always pleased to get ministers of other religions to set before our people their faiths—it has a healthful tendency with the Mormons—they feel stronger in the faith afterward, and filled with greater gratitude to God for deliverance from the gulf of sectarian darkness. In Nauvoo and Great Salt Lake City thousands of Mormons have, time and again, at the solicitation of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young, listened to ministers that have passed through those cities. For the Herald's information we may let the secret out:—we are wicked enough to expect on these occasions a rich treat—an exhibition of human blindness.

To say the Mormons are "held together by the practice of polygamy in its worst forms, is a gigantic slander—i. e. what might be expected from that source. The Herald is not so ignorant of the history of the Mormons as not to know that their unity and firm adherence to their peculiar faith was proverbial many many years before polygamy was known amongst them. The strength and unity of Mormonism is its faith in the living God and His immutability. Polygamy or any other doctrine is but a part of the great whole—one doctrine or another, established or revoked, the Mormons are all the same Mormons.

We have never seen humanity shuddering at the degradation of the "female" Mormons, but we have seen the Mormons, male and female, shuddering at the degradation and beastly corruption that characterize the nations of the earth. Thousands of times have we been solicited by heads of families to help them to Utah, as they feared for their children, the contamination of the Gentiles, and tens of thousands of dollars, the reward of hard labor in Utah, have been sent by young and old to their relatives in the highly cultivated and civilized nations of the earth, in order to deliver them from the sight of the lewdness and shame that everywhere abound.

The Herald is terribly grieved at the hard labor of the ladies in Utah, but he may take comfort, they prefer to live by "hard labor" than by the wages of sin in the Christian city of New York. The Mormons glory in honest, honorable labor, and the fair sex are not the last to rejoice and sing about "the working bees in the hive of Deseret." They can dress up, go to the lecture room, concert room, theatre or ball for recreation of body and mind, or take a stroll into the country when they please just as well as their sisters in the States but they believe they are "helpmates" to their husbands not puppets, butterflies and squanderers. They believe in self-respect and find more pleasure in attending to the wants of their families and giving "the enemy none occasion to speak reproachfully of them," than by parading themselves in wantonness and idleness in the streets and public places.

It is very probable that some there have had more labor than they or others desired or was good for them, but Mormons are accustomed to look for causes, and the Herald may be assured that they don't forget that if lawless Christian mobs had left them in peace in their already well cultivated fields and flourishing homesteads in the highly civilized States they would have had less occasion to toil so much in a new and distant country. The Herald may dry up his tears, the Mormons think that their persecutors have more need to weep for themselves and their children than for them.

The Herald's fling at the vulgarity of the public documents and proclamations of the authorities and Governor of Utah is indeed rich. They don't compose documents and proclamations in Utah for effect and buncombe business, gentlemen, and everything by its own name. Utah goes in for more than one reform. But what means the following, from the Herald of June 1st:

Kansas and Deseret both appear to be preparing to knock at the doors of Congress for admission. But how differently do they present themselves as suppliants! Kansas comes forward with bowie knives, rifles and land jobbers, with hands stained with blood, murder and arson, and fresh from the conflicts between the pro-slavery and anti-slavery settlers. On the other hand, Deseret, which is peopled by the Mormons, who, for their religious opinions, were driven out of Missouri, banished from Illinois, and driven beyond the Rocky Mountains, has gradually and quietly, without trouble or conflict, and by the efforts of its own energy and industry alone, grown into an important community; and after peaceably adopting a new constitution, its delegates are now on their way to Washington to claim its admission into the Union. And yet Deseret, although presenting such an example of industry sobriety and piety, will no doubt be set down by the present Congress as an immoral, dangerous and wicked community, while Kansas will be fought for, quarrelled about, and probably admitted to a co-partnership with the rest of the States.

The wind has changed and the weathercock turned round: put the first extract together with the latter, they are both of the same parentage.

Some unacquainted with the Herald are at a loss to know what has set him against the Mormons—we know well, don't we Herald? Aye!

The Mormons en Route.

The ship Horizon, which recently arrived at Boston from Liverpool, brought over about 900 Mormon emigrants. Capt. Reed, who commanded the vessel, says that he never saw people more completely under the influence of a leader than these Mormons. They did nothing without consulting their leaders, considered themselves the true Saints, observed certain hours for prayers, and when not praying they were generally singing.—[Chicago Weekly Democratic Press, July 19.

The above is highly commendatory of the Horizon's company, their president and his assistants. President Martin is a good man—"when the righteous rule, the people rejoice." Singing and praying, are exercises to which some mockers may be not much addicted—we prefer it with obedience, to rebellion, cursing and fighting.

Secretary Babbit.

Col. A. W. Babbit was in our city a few days last week, on his return from Washington. We had the visit of the Colonel and Mr. C. Kinkead previous to their setting out for Utah. They were in good health.

Thanks.

Our best thanks are due to President J. D. Ross and the Council of the London Conference for English papers.

Dreadful Accident on Lake Erie.

Burning of the Steamer Northern Indiana—Thirty to Forty Lives Reported Lost.

BUFFALO, July 17, 1856.

The steamer Northern Indiana took fire about eleven o'clock this morning, while on her voyage to Toledo, and was burned to the water's edge. Thirty to forty of the passengers are reported as being lost.

Capt. Pheatt, commander of the Northern Indiana, was not on board of her, being sick and confined to his room, in Buffalo.

W. H. Welmore, first officer; A. Dolendon, second do; C. E. Marah, clerk; J. Godwin, Steward; Frank and John Farrar, first and second engineers: Philip Houghton, third do., and thirty-eight others of the crew were saved.

There are fifteen or twenty missing who were known to be on board, but it is supposed they were saved by the propeller Republic and a schooner that assisted in picking up the passengers.

A committee appointed for the purpose collected from the passengers of the Mississippi between two and three hundred dollars in aid of the sufferers

DOMESTIC SUMMARY.

Mr. Brooks appeared before the Criminal Court on Saturday, and paid the fine and costs in the Sumner case, amounting to $385. He had amicably arranged his difficulties with Mr. Burlingame, for something said in the House by the latter, but some officious persons have stirred them up again, and Massachusetts and South Carolina were about to show pluck. Burlingame being the challenged party, named, in a note, the Clifton House, on the Canada side of the Niagara Falls, for the meeting on Saturday, but Brooks won't go it—too far from home—journeying through an enemy's country, and the probable inconvenience of returning after killing his man, are potent reasons for declining the invitation. Mr. Brooks signifies his readiness to give his friend satisfaction any time he may call upon him. On the affidavit of Mr. Treadwell, of New York, Mr. Brooks was taken before Justice Hollingshead, on Tuesday, and gave security in the sum of five thousand dollars to keep the peace in the District of Columbia. Mr. Burlingame is supposed to be on his way to the place of rendezvous.

The most afflicting news of the week is the wholesale murder of men, women and children on the North Pennsylvania Railroad. On our first page will be found an early report of the calamity. Subsequent reports confirm it in every particular. Philadelphia has for some time been the seat of mourning. It is but a short time since the burning of the Camden and Amboy Ferry Boat cast a gloom over the city, and directly after that came the falling of the pier with a large number of persons, some of whom were crushed and others drowned—the three accidents resulting entirely from carelessness, not of the people, but those in whom they confided.

A horrible murder was committed in our city on Thursday night the 17th inst. The murdered man was porter in Mr. Joyce's store, 378 Broadway. He is represented by all his acquaintances as a quiet orderly man. His body was found in the store next morning in a horribly mutilated state. No trace of the murderer has been discovered. Mayor Wood offers $500 for the apprehension of the assassin.

The United States steamer Arctic left this port on Friday night, at twelve o'clock, for the purpose of taking soundings between the coasts of Newfoundland and Ireland, preparatory to the laying down of the telegraphic cable.

Latest from the Eastern Hemisphere.

The iron steamboats, Mail and Excelsior, came into collision on the Mersey on the morning of the 6th inst. The latter ran right into the former, creating a dreadful panic among the passengers, six of whom were killed and a great number wounded.

The North Tipperary Militia, quartered in the town of Nenagh, have had a serious row with the military of the line. The affair sprung from the opposition of some of the former to give back a part of their last clothing at their disbandonment. One militiaman, resisting the officer on duty, led the others to take sides, and arms were resorted to, whereupon the regulars were called by the magistrates to suppress the riot. There was considerable firing between them, in which there were a number killed on both sides. The militiamen were made prisoners.

On the 9th, the brigade Grenadier, Coldstream and Fusilier Guards, consisting of 3200 men, made their public and principal entry into London. Their march from the railway station to the Queen's Palace was marked by the greatest enthusiasm. Her Majesty, Prince Albert, Duke of Cambridge, and the elite of the nation, military and noble, were present at the parade and gave a hearty reception to the Crimean warriors.

Trouble at the Cape of Good Hope is casting forth its shadow. His Excellency the Governor sent messages to the Council on the 23d of April, transmitting a correspondence which had taken place between the President of the Free State and Moshesh, great chief of the Basutos, with regard to the boundary line. The President of the Free State, in a letter to the Governor, expressed his fear that a bloody war was impending between the Free State and the Basutos. He expressed his belief that a great combination was being formed between the Kaffir chiefs against the Europeans. He had sent to Mauritius for military assistance.

Reflections on the Mind.

BY ALEXANDER OTT.

CONCLUDED.

The more we read, and try to commit to our memory what we have read, to retain it in that mental receptacle, the more that precious gift will become developed, the more it will be retentive. It is evident from history, that people whose memory was very poor, improved the same by a constant application to study. The memory is like a seed in the ground, the more it is cultivated and attended to, the more it will sprout, till in the end it will bring forth fruits that amply reward previous labor. There are many curious phenomena connected with memory; for example, we want to remember a certain fact, but cannot, no matter how much we try, till we bring a circumstance, a locality, a date, that was of but secondary consideration in connection with it; the connecting link is there found, and the whole is brought to our recollection. All impressions or ideas received in the mental receptacle of the memory are arrayed in a certain logical order, so that we have only to find the connecting link in order to recollect a whole sentence.

While a train of interesting reflections that refer to the past, the present and future, is passing through the philosophic mind, we are overcome with exquisite emotions arising from the perception of the beautiful and sublime of Nature's diversified scenes. Such mental employments do not, as some suppose, lead to a distraction of the mind; but they prevent that mental lassitude or ennui resulting from the inactivity of the soul, and afford an everlasting source of intellectual enjoyment. As remarked above, the mind is like a continual stream running from the unfathomable depths of the divine intelligence, or like a perpetuum mobile, it is in continual motion; it cannot rest, it wants to be busy, it is wandering from one thing to another, and this psychological phenomenon can be observed in young and old, with the exception of cases in which a derangement of the intellectual system has taken place. Yes, the activity of the mind begins with the earliest childhood: only watch a child while playing; his mind will be entirely absorbed in his sportful occupations; he will take a stick, and his fancy will transform it into a horse; he will take pebbles, beans, &c., and his fancy will metamorphose them into soldiers or into anything else, just as his mind is bent. The child, in imitating the scenes of every-day life, will manifest a gift of combination and penetration that betray talent and genius. The healthier, the more spirited, the more gifted children are, the more they will bustle about; the buoyancy of their mind will not allow them to rest long; hence we see healthy and talented children run and jump about, and engage in all the multifarious plays of childhood; but when sick, feeble and of slow perception, they will not move or stir.

The nature of man is constituted of the body and the mind (the acting part of the soul, the animus). From anatomical and physiological investigations of the body, we learn that our tabernacles are made for peculiar uses; that they are capable of receiving peculiar gratifications. As the body is furnished with external senses, by which we are made partakers of pleasures derived from the multifarious bounties of God's tender mercies, so is the mind framed and fitted for certain purposes; for the exercise of mental functions; for a gratification of intellectual pleasures; pleasures which find their source in the practice of the immutable principles of the gospel of Christ; in the continual contemplation of the magnificent scenery of the Universe; of the various laws by which everything in God's endless domains is progressing according to principles of the highest intelligence. It is true that our bodies are so framed that we are capable of enjoying gratifications in common with inferior animals; but it is necessary for us to understand that a mere gratificatian of our senses; the mere pursuit of physical pleasures; cannot be and is not the ultimate end of our existence. If we deviate from the scale of intellectual beings in which we are placed, and lay the greatest stress upon indulging in sensual pleasures, we defile our tabernacles, of which the apostle says that they are the temple of the spirit of God; we treat with contempt the intellectual powers with which we are endowed, and bring ourselves on a level with the brute creation.

Every moral and accountable agent ought to ask himself what is the object of his being here? Why has God invested him with mental powers? Why is his body tenanted with an immortal spirit? He ought to know that the Creator did not bestow those sublime gifts upon him in order to show himself by an irrational and degrading conduct a fool or maniac, but that he was qualified for the society of intelligent beings, and for preparing himself for higher spheres. How often do we hear people speak of reason, and yet their actions do not correspond with that sublime gift! What else is reason than a faculty or power of soul whereby to distinguish good from evil, so that man may be enabled to be virtuous, and strike the high road to secure exaltation. If God, as one of the highest intelligences of Heaven, has created us in His own image and made us rational beings, we infer that He is desirous of seeing us lead a rational, consistent life; and in what does a rational enjoyment of life consist? Surely not in moving in extremes, but in observing an exemplary temperance, a juste milieu, a medium in all things—in a full exercise of our intellectual or bodily powers on objects that lead to a tranquillity, contentment of mind, to gratitude towards our Creator, to a constant increase of knowledge, to true happiness, to the cultivation of benevolent affections, so that our social intercourse with our fellow-beings will have salutary effects, leaving lasting beneficial impressions upon their minds.

Inasmuch as there are intellectual germs in every child, and his mind is more pliable than that of mature age, it is of the greatest importance to train those mental powers properly, that the charms of the soul may become fully developed. The youthful mind is like an open book, ready to receive impressions good or bad, but woe be to him by whose negligence or fault those blanks are filled up with immoral principles or images of a foul imagination. If the mind is trained in a pure atmosphere, hallowed by the spirit of God, it will only receive virtuous principles; the soul will be expanded; the compass of understanding enlarged, and the excursions and contemplations of man will only be in the fields of ennobling and exalting intelligences. A noble, exalted mind, will wing its flight through the vista of centuries, to trace the history and origin of good principles; through the endless amplitudes of the Universe to unravel the laws of the planetary spaces; it will with horror shrink back from everything impure, like a child from the sting of a poisonous snake. The youthful mind, when well trained, will be exempt from inattention, abstractiveness; it will have learned to concentrate its faculties on any given point, and not allow its thoughts to wander away and dwell upon something else. We generally see that the curiosity of children is easily excited, whenever anything interesting presents itself to them; their attention is then so taken up, that they in common comprehend principles very quick. From this the mentor will learn the lesson to guide the youthful mind into a proper channel by the introduction of interesting, useful objects, and by exhorting pupils never to let their mind divert from the same, till required. The child will thus get used to pay the closest attention to every thing brought within the immediate cognisance of his external or internal senses. Is the youthful mind well trained and has been imbibed with good principles, man will surely be firm and determined in mature age, till to the end of life, and pass quietly through the trials of this world without becoming polluted.

From the above we learn that it is incumbent upon us to cultivate the mind and train it well, that we may be capacitated to concentrate all the energies of our soul in useful pursuits and acquisitions, that we may realize the most rational enjoyment of our life, that in the solemn hour of death we may feel no remorse, but may look with satisfaction on the past, and with a serenity of mind and hope of eternal felicity on the future.

There are other interesting psychological phenomena connected with a disturbance of the mental harmony or the tranquillity of the mind; such as melancholy, gloominess, distraction, idiosyncracy, hypochondriasis and madness; they come under the domain of the diseases of the soul, and will be treated upon at some other time.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

Austria.—The London Times correspondent at Vienna of the 27th June says:—The reports of the damage done by the violent hail-storms begin to come in from the provinces. Bohemia has suffered very severely. During the 10th, 17th, and 20th, 40 places were more or less injured. Prince Schwarzenberg had above 200,000 tiles carried away from the roofs of some of his farm-buildings, and many of the peasants are entirely ruined, their farm-houses, out-buildings, and crops having been destroyed. The quantity of wheat destroyed in the circle of Saaz, which is one of the most fruitful districts in the province of Bohemia, is said to be enormous.

Spain.—The late troubles in that country are attributed by the government to the prevalence of socialism. Marshall O'Donnell, Minister of War, denounced in the Cortez in the strangest manner the movements of the Socialists and declared the intention of government to put a heavy hand upon the propogators of doctrines that had led to the late outrages. Spain presently resembles France of 1848—it enjoys or is cursed with a rich harvest of Theories.

Russia.—Before the amnesty to the Polish exiles, lately issued by the Czar, can take effect, the poor exiles' petition must be accompanied with his reasons for leaving, and a statement of his present position. Despotism is always despotism. How a despot loves to humble his fellow being.

The Russian force to be permanently stationed in the Crimean peninsula after its evacuation by the allies is to be the third armes corps, under General Wrangel, consisting of about 50,000 infantry and 8000 cavalry.

M. Docknovoski, Inspector of Public Works in Russia, is now in Paris, in order to study the system of railroads in France. The Russian Government intend commencing and carrying them on on a vast scale throughout the empire. The want of such a mode of communication will not be felt in any future war that Russia may be engaged in.

The preparations at Moscow for the coronation of the Emperor are on the most magnificent scale. The ceremonial will be regulated by that which was observed at the coronation of the late Emperor Nicholas; the changes to be introduced will be owing to the circumstance that the late Monarch was only crowned at Moscow as Emperor of All the Russias, and took at Warsaw the Royal crown of Poland, whereas the present Emperor Alexander II. will combine the two solemnities in one.

Crimea.—Marshal Pelissier has fixed the 5th of July as the last day for the evacuation of the Crimea. That day all military protection of natives or foreigners will be withdrawn.

Steamers are now plying to and from Constantinople and ports in the Black Sea.

Italy.—The state of brigandage has now become so intolerable in the Romagna that certain communes have determined on petitioning the Roman Government on the subject, but accompanying their petitions with a declaration that unless the civil power is employed for the protection of their lives and property they will not pay the Government

ians. The town of Faenza has taken the lead in this movement. In the neighborhood of that town a famous bandit named Lazzarini has of late been committing the most audacious robberies, which though often accompanied with the courtesy that formerly characterized the gentlemen of the road, are not much more highly valued by the terrified inhabitants on that account. A short time since he stopped a diligence, and, after taking what appeared most valuable, allowed it to pass on; but on another occasion he captured some wealthy inhabitants of Faenza, and retained them in durance until they were ransomed by their friends.

The Abbé Michon, a Catholic priest of Paris, has published a pamphlet to demonstrate that the Pope ought to renounce all secular authority, and remove to Jerusalem, there to preside over the Christian church.

The King of Naples shows himself more decided every day to decline the counsels of the Western powers, and refuse reforms.

The King of Sardinia has sent a sum of 20,000f. from his privy purse for the relief of the sufferers by the inundations in France.

There is sore dismay at Rome. The presence of Garibaldi in the Italian waters has disturbed the slumbers of the Vatican. Garibaldi has purchased a small islet off the coast of Sardinia. It is entirely in a state of nature, and he is reclaiming it. Our Italian Robison Crusoe makes occasional voyages from Nice to his tiny dominions, and Antonelli and Pio IX. are dismayed at the thoughts of the bold rover ploughing the Tyrrhenian Sea. To this was owing that excessive watchfulness of the authorities at Porto d'Anzio, which has given so much trouble to the crew of the Lady Franklin.

The Piedmontese are in high hopes of a brighter day. Lords Clarendon and Palmerston have given grounds for hope—Palmerston is a great promiser we trust he shall redeem his character for shuffling.

ENGLAND.—Orders have been issued by Lord Panmure that all the infantry regiments serving in or under orders for the North American colonies shall be increased to 1200 rank and file each.

In addition to the troops on their passage to Canada and Halifax, Nova Scotia, four regiments of infantry and six field batteries have been placed under orders to be in readiness for the same destination.

Queen Victoria, it is stated, will visit the King of Prussia in September next.

The Gazette contains an announcement that the Admiralty have decided that Dr. James Rae is entitled, on behalf of himself and companions in his expedition, to the reward of 10,000l., offered for the first discovery of the fate of Sir John Franklin's expedition.

Subscriptions for the aid of the sufferers in France by the late inundation are vigorously sought throughout England. The Times of July 2d publishes the amount already received at £22,678,14, and to which Her Majesty adds £1000, Prince Albert £500, Duke of Cambridge £100.

The English are getting up a national subscription for something in honor of the late Joseph Hume, M. P.

Sir. W. F. Williams the hero of Kars was enthusiasticaly received at Woolwich on the 3d July, the day preceeding his installment as commandant of that garrison.

Nothing could exceed the cordiality with which the General was greeted on all sides. In the evening the Town-hall was illuminated, the whole of the architectural frontage being ornamented with colored lamps, the initial "W," supported by French, Turkish and English flags, with "Kars" and the letters "V. A," and a regal star between the openings. Many of the houses in the town were likewise illuminated. The day was kept as a close holiday or day of rejoicing.

SCOTLAND.—The inhabitants of Glasgow gave a hearty welcome to Major-General Sir. Colin Campbell on his return from the Crimea to that town on the 3d ult. The reception was grand and euthusiastic such as he richly deserved. The hero was presented with the freedom of the city—the burgess ticket was handed him in a box of solid gold. On the same occasion he was presented with a magnificent sword the gift of 6000 persons. The Scotch are proud of their warriors and Sir. Colin is worthy of a place among his most distinguished countrymen.

FRANCE.—In Chambery, a young Protestant, who was officially attached to the Pastoral Mission of the Protestant (Geneva) church, in Savoy, has just made his abjuration of Protestantism in the presence of Monsignor the Archbishop of Chambery.—Univers.

The French government has resolved to make a certain extent of restitution at the public expense to some of the members of the Orleans family, who were stripped of their property by the confiscation decree of 1852. The bill is now before the council of State, each of the daughters of Louis Phillippe will receive 8,000l. a year.

Twelve boulevards are now in course of construction in Paris—the Boulevard de Sebastopol, the Boulevard from the Pont de l'Alma to Chaillot, the Boulevard du Nord, that parallel to the Seine, on the left bank of the river, and seven boulevards starting from the Triumphal Arch at the top of the Champs Elysees.

The amount of the French subscriptions for the sufferers by the inundations in the south had reached the sum of 4,033,500 francs up to the end of June.

It is all but decided that the return of Marshal Pelissier to the capitol, which will take place about the middle of July, will be celebrated by public rejoicings, illuminations, &c. The apparatus for the illuminations on the Place de la Concorde, and the Champ Elysees, which did duty on the occasion of the baptism of the Prince Imperial, have not been pulled down, as is generally the case; and it is thought that they will be employed to do honor to the conqueror of Sebastopol.

CHINA.—"Political intelligence is rather unsatisfactory, and the progress of the insurgents in various quarters gives rise to alarm. In Kingshi they have captured the large and important city of Kingchonfoo, and their proximity to the tea districts of Fuh-Kien gives just ground for anxiety lest the tea destined for Foochow should be interrupted or destroyed. To the northward also they have been successful, and the capture of the city of Yangchow, to the northwest of Shanghai, threatens tranquility in that quarter. A party of gentlemen from Shanghai who lately visited Fankin found the rebels in great security there.

TURKEY.—The Czar Nicholas looked upon the Sultan Abdul Medjid, as a sick man, and anticipated learning of his demise every day. The race not always being to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, the successor of Mahommed has outlived the successor of Peter the Great. The partition of Turkey so much desired, has been forbidden to the hand of a stranger, and left for civil war. At the present moment, a great portion of Turkey in Asia is in a state of revolt, while Turkey in Europe is in almost as bad a position. An English correspondent from Constantinople writes: "Nearly the whole of Arabia is in revolt. The new Sheriff, who left for Mecca about two months since, was induced to enter the holy city, and he is at this moment a prisoner there. He is blockaded with his escort, and I am assured that the deposition of the Sultan, Abdul Medjid, had been put forward by the revolted. Great excitement prevails in Syria. A considerable part of Asia Minor occasions much disquietude; at Cessarea disorders are apprehended, and the whole of the garrison has been under arms.

"The news from Turkey in Europe is not more encouraging. A revolt of a very serious character is beginning to be imminent in Bulgaria; and Macedonia, Thessaly, and Epirus are far from being tranquil. I alluded, in my last letter, to the murder of the son of our Consular agent at Tenedos; we are still in want of the particulars of this sad affair. The Tunisian officer, who so brutally assassinated an Ionian seaman, has not yet been arrested. The search made by the police has been in vain.

"The state of the public mind at Constantinople is not more calm. A great part of the Mussleman population are excited against the Christians.

"Parry, a merchant in Constantinople, has bought an estate of 6,000 acres within twelve miles of the capital. Instead of hiring Turks and Greeks to improve the estate, he has engaged an overseer and 20 ploughmen from Scotland. He proposes to build a village, and to encourage tradesmen also to take up their residence on his estate. There is a Turkish mosque quite close to the place where his proposed village is to be built. This mosque was at one time a Christian church, and report says it was one of the oldest churches in this country. It is called St. Peter's, and occupies the place where the first Christian converts in this part of ancient Thrace were made. He intends to restore the place to its original object of Christian worship, to provide the Scotch settlers with a Presbyterian minister, and also to give them a school and schoolmaster. No Turks or Greeks are to be allowed to settle in the village. The population is to be exclusively Scotch, as he believes that they turn out the best colonists in the world."

GREECE.—The Governments of England and France have determined to take most energetic measures at Athens. Instructions have left Paris for the French Admiral, which will enable him to employ the forces at his disposal for the immediate occupation of those districts which are still infested by brigands, and where the Greek authorities have failed to maintain tranquility and protect the inhabitants. Orders have been given to augment the forces already at the disposal of the allied commanders, which orders have been suggested by the despatches lately arrived in London and Paris from Athens. Three regiments of English dragoons are about to leave Constantinople for Athens, in order to reinforce the army of occupation.

Railroad Accidents.

The following is a record of the most lamentable railroad accidents which have occurred in the United States since the commencement of the year 1853. It will be seen that the recent collision on the North Pennsylvania road resulted in a greater number of killed and wounded than attended any previous accident:

Date.	Road.	Killed.	Wounded.
1853.
March 7.	Baltimore and Ohio	8	24
April 25.	Michigan Southern	21	50
May 6.	New York and New Haven	46	24
Aug. 2.	Belvidere and Delaware	11	14
Aug. 9.	Camden and Amboy	4	20
Aug. 12.	Providence and Worcester	14	24
1854.
March 6.	Susquehanna	—	67
July 4.	Susquehanna	34	60
Aug. 29.	Camden and Amboy	23	67
Nov. 1.	Rock Island	12	24
1856.
Feb. 1.	Philadelphia and Harrisburg	1	27
June 17.	North Pennsylvania	50	100
	Total	224	501

It will be seen that nearly two-thirds of the whole number of killed and wounded have been the result of accidents which have occurred to trains coming in or leaving the cities of Philadelphia and Baltimore. Seventy-eight killed and two hundred and fourteen wounded were on Philadelphia trains, and forty-two killed and one hundred and fifty-four wounded on Baltimore trains.—[N. Y. Herald July 21.

An Ingenious Machine.

The Philadelphia Ledger describes a remarkable piece of mechanism which has just been introduced into the United States Mint in that city. Its object is to determine whether the pieces of gold or silver ready for coinage are of the proper weight. It accordingly separates them into three divisions, of right, heavy and light. To accomplish this the machine has fine balances or testing instruments. If the piece be of the proper weight, it passes into a pan ready to receive it; if too heavy, it is conducted to another pan, and if too light, it is carried in a different direction to another pan. The machine disposes of two hundred pieces per minute, and does the work of many hands in the ordinary way. It is a French invention.

Thirty-Fourth Congress.—First Session.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, July 16, 1856.

Mr. Brown, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill retroceding Georgetown to Maryland.

The bill supplementary to the act amendatory of the acts respecting copyrights, approved February 3, 1831, was reported and passed.

The bill for the final adjudication of questions of title to swamp lands, between private claimants and the state of Louisiana, was passed.

Mr. Jones of Tenn. made a speech on the three million amendment bill, contending that the appropriation was necessary to place the country in a proper state of defence. It was a peace, not a war measure. There was not ammunition enough on the whole Pacific coast to fire ten rounds with the guns there, and in case of war, there was not enough in the whole country to fire twenty-five rounds with all our guns. The further consideration of the bill was then postponed till Monday.

The Senate then went into Executive Session, and was nearly four hours engaged in consideration of the question whether the more than two hundred nominations or promotions of the President, sent in some months ago, to supply the vacancies occasioned by the action of the late Naval Board, shall be passed upon before the House shall take action on the Senate bill providing a remedy for meritorious officers aggrieved by the Navy Board. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Keitt said it was not his purpose to widen any breach or exacerbate any feeling. He much preferred the opposite. He vindicated South Carolina from the charges brought against her conduct in the revolution. He vividly depicted the sufferings and patriotism of the South Carolinians, contending that the exploits of Massachusetts in that struggle had been greatly exaggerated.

Mr. Keitt, after speaking in disparagement of Massachusetts, and in no complimentary terms of Mr. Burlingame's sentiments and rhetoric, said he was in the Senate when the assault was committed. He knew that it would be committed unless Mr. Sumner should make an explanation or apology; but he repeated he knew not the time when, nor the place where, the assault would be made. He did not anticipate it would be made in the Senate Chamber. Northern papers had attempted to establish complicity on his part, charging it as a slaveholding act, and had attempted to fix the responsibility on South Carolina. Those who wish to drag in dust the garments of their State might do it. He certainly should not the garments of his own. It appeared that his offence was that he did not turn informer—a character which he branded as infamous.

He never would violate the confidence reposed in him, even by his bitterest enemy against the best friend he had. Was he to inform in favor of a man who had made false charges against South Carolina and slandered a distinguished Senator, a relative of his late colleague, Mr. Brooks. For the individual opinion of the House he cared nothing, but he did care for the opinion of the House officially expressed. He represented men who live on battle plains which had been defamed by Mr. Sumner, and therefore he was sensitive. He had already sent his resignation to the Governor of South Carolina to take effect to-day, and would now announce he was no longer a member of this Congress.

The galleries applauded, while cries of order went up from those below.

The friends of Mr. Keitt crowded round him, shook hands with him, and amid considerable confusion he retired.

The House then took up the resolutions of the Committee on Elections, that J. C. Allen was not, and Wm. B. Archer was elected a representative from Illinois and entitled to his seat.

Mr. Washburne of Me. advocated the resolutions.

Mr. Allen replied in his own defence.

Adjourned.

SENATE. July 17.

Mr. Toombs, of Georgia, introduced a joint resolution that the finding of the late Naval Board, in the case of Lieut. Bartlett, was in violation of the rights guaranteed to every citizen by the constitution, and is therefore utterly void and of no effect. Mr. Toombs said he should call up this resolution at a convenient opportunity.

The Senate then went into executive session on the navy appointments, and after confirming one hundred and ninety-five of them, adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House resumed the consideration of the resolutions of the Committee on Elections, declaring Mr. Archer, instead of Mr. Allen, the elected representative from the Seventh Congressional district of Illinois.

The report of the majority of the committee says that Mr. Archer was elected by two majority, and the report of the minority of the committee states that Mr. Allen was elected by one.

The subject was debated, and the House adjourned.

SENATE. July 18.

The Senate, after passing an act to repeal the law authorizing the erection of an armory in Washington, proceeded to the consideration of private bills.

The Senate discussed, without coming to any conclusion upon it, the bill extending the patent of Obed Hussey's reaping machine.

Mr. Yule reported a bill providing for the compulsory prepayment of postage on all transient printed matter.

Adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The Illinois contested election case was taken up, and Mr. Archer addressed the House in his own behalf.

The resolution that Mr. Allen was not entitled to a seat was adopted by 94 against 90, and the resolution that Mr. Archer was entitled rejected by 89 against 91.

An effort was made to reconsider the last vote, but it was lost by four majority.

Resolutions were then passed declaring that a vacancy exists in the Seventh Congressional district of Illinois referring the election back to the people, and giving Mr. Archer, contestant, mileage and per diem to date.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES. July 19.

Many private bills were reported from standing committees.

The House passed one private bill, and debated another till the hour of adjournment.

Adjourned.

SENATE. July 21.

The Senate passed the bill amendatory of the act of December 17, 1792, concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels—the object being to make it conform to the present regulations of the Treasury Department.

On motion of Mr. Hale, of N. H., a resolution was adopted, calling on the President for information whether any instructions have been issued to any military officer in command in Kansas to disperse any unarmed meeting of the people in that Territory, or prevent, by military power, any assemblage of people in that Territory.

The bill for the armament of fortifications, alteration of small arms, &c., was amended, reducing the proposed appropriation from three millions to eighteen hundred thousand dollars, and then passed by 27 against 10.

A resolution was passed providing for the close of the session on the 11th of August.

The following bills were then passed:

Regulating the fees and costs and other judicial expenses of the Government throughout the United States.

Making appropriations for the improvement of the Delaware Breakwater; also the improvement of certain harbors in Maine, and the harbors of Marquette, Michigan, and Mandowoe, Wisconsin. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the Nebraska contested election case, the Committee on Elections reporting a resolution Bird B. Chapman was not, and that Hiram P. Bennett was elected delegate.

Mr. Watson, of Ohio, made a speech in favor of the resolution, when the subject was passed over.

The daily hour of meeting was changed from 11 to 12 o'clock.

Humphry Marshall, of Ky., from the Judiciary Committee, reported a bill to establish a uniform rule of naturalization. Referred to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

Mr. Smith, of Tenn., moved a suspension of the rules, with a view to action on the Senate resolution, just received, to adjourn on the 11th of August.

Mr. Dunn, of Ind., said he should move to amend it by adding, as a condition, that on or before that day an act be passed, and receive Executive sanction, for the settlement of the troubles in Kansas, containing among its provisions one for the re-establishment of slavery restriction, applicable both to Kansas and Nebraska.

Mr. Mecham, of Vt., gave notice of a substitute, for recess from the 4th of August to the 20th of October, provided that no extra mileage or per diem during the recess shall be paid.

Mr. Smith's motion prevailed by 128 against 46.

Mr. Dunn moved to table the resolution. Lost by 55 against 105.

Mr. Campbell, of Ohio, moved an amendment, substituting the 2d of September, showing that it was impossible to transact the business before that time.

Mr. Haven, of N. Y., said the remedy was to fix an early day, and then go industriously to work. He commented on the manner in which so much valuable time had been wasted. As to Kansas, he believed that the majority of the House would pass a bill providing for the restoration of the Missouri restriction, knowing at the same time that the Senate would reject it.

Mr. Mecham said Mr. Haven had no right to make a speech impugning the motives of other members.

Mr. Haven disclaimed any such intention.

Mr. Greenwood Ark., suggested the 18th of August, saying three weeks were long enough for practical purposes.

Mr. Giddings thought two weeks were as good as two months. He dissented from Mr. Haven, and would do what was right without inquiring whether the Senate would or not.

Mr. Haven replied that he (Haven) would do what was right, he would abate a little rather than his fellow citizens in Kansas should bleed, and rather than go before the country with an offer to the Senate not made in sincerity.

Mr. Giddings said Mr. Haven had been all the session finding out which side was wrong. Instead of asking himself whether the act to be performed was just, he brought here the bugbear of the Senate. Now, he (Giddings) would act right, though the "Havens fall.

Mr. Dunn said he came here with high expectations—(A Voice—No doubt of that.)—that the Missouri compromise would be restored. He was exceedingly sorry they had grown smaller and smaller, until they were entirely dissipated. He was persuaded that no effort would be made to restore it. There could be no peace in the country till that was done, in substance and in fact; and the North and South must remember this. Until the question of individual safety in Kansas was settled, no appropriation bills should be passed. (Cries of "Agreed," "Agreed," "That's right," "That's the talk.") The only way to insure compliance was to stop the wheels of government, and give some trouble while they were rolling. As for the Presidency, he would not go for Buchanan or Fremont, but for the man living in New York, as the only one whose election give promise of peace.

Mr. Lester made an ineffectual motion to table the resolution. Adjourned.

SENATE. July 24.

On motion of Mr. Seward, of N. Y., a resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Manufactures to inquire concerning the extent to which iron may be substituted for wood, stone and brick in public buildings of the United States.

Mr. Butler, of S. C., introduced a bill to regulate the compensation of members of Congress.

The bill proposes to give a salary of $3,000 for each regular session, instead of the present per diem, and for extra sessions the present per diem and twenty cents per mile for travel each way.

The Senate concurred in the action of the House to adjourn on the 18th of August.

The bill continuing the improvement of the harbor of Racine, Wisconsin, was passed by 24 against 12.

A long debate on the constitutionality and expediency of appropriating for such purposes ensued on the bill continuing the harbor of Kenosha, Wisconsin, which passed. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House passed the Senate's resolution, with the amendment fixing the close of the session on the 18th of August, by yeas 123, nays 51.

Mr. Chapman, sitting delegate, and Mr. Bennet, contestant, participated in the debate.

The resolution of the Committee on Elections, declaring Mr. Chapman not elected, was rejected by 63 against 69. Adjourned.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Great Conflagration at Toronto—Immense Loss of Property—Several Lives Lost.

TORONTO, July 15, 1856.

The large cabinet manufactory belonging to Jacques & Hay, together with all the adjacent buildings, lumber-yards, wharves, &c., were entirely destroyed by fire this afternoon. The fire burned with such rapidity that the workmen jumped from the upper story of the building, and several were killed, besides many being badly injured.

At 4 P. M., the fire was still burning, and the loss of property will be immense.

Disastrous Conflagration at Corning, N. Y.—Loss $150,000.

ELMIRA, July 16, 1856.

There was a large fire at Corning last night which destroyed forty buildings in the business portion of the village. Every building on the main street, east of the Dickinson House, excepting one store, was insured. Only six stores are left standing. The loss is estimated at $150,000; insurance $40,000.

Another Disaster on Lake Ontario—Twelve Lives Lost.

KINGSTON, C. W. July 18, 1856.

News from the Plains—Sanguinary Battle among the Indians.

ST. LOUIS, July 19, 1856.

Intelligence from the Plains has been received here stating that a sanguinary battle had occurred at the crossing of the Arkansas river on the Santa Fe road, between the confederate Sacs and Foxes and the Camanche Indians, resulting in the complete rout of the latter with the loss of twenty-one killed. The Sacs and Foxes had two killed. It is noted as a curious coincidence that at the same time two years ago a hostile meeting occurred at the same place, between the same parties, with precisely the same results.
